Between 8 and 8:20 p. m.: Train arrived at Islamorada. At 2:15 p. m., September 2, preparations of the train were commenced at the Miami terminal. The coaches and baggage cars were scattered throughout the terminal and one coach had to be repaired before it could be used. This delayed the departure of the train until 4:25 p. m.

A delay of 10 minutes occurred just outside the terminal because of a drawbridge. When the train arrived at Homestead it was 5:15 p. m. Because there was no Y between Homestead and Key West, it was then decided to turn the engine in order that it might be headed right for the return from Matecumbe. This would then require running the engine, tender first, from Homestead to Matecumbe. The train left Homestead at 5:30 p. m. It arrived at a quarry just south of camp no. 1 at 7 p. m. There a guy wire had been blown across the track and 1 hour and 20 minutes were required to remove this obstruction. The train arrived at Islamorada shortly after 8 p. m. They boarded train and started south.

8:25 p. m.: Storm struck.

9 p. m.: Barometer reading, 27.50 at Alligator Light.

9:30 p. m.: Weather forecast: "Jacksonville to Florida Straits, strong easterly winds over extreme north and east to southeast gales over central and south portions with probable winds hurricane force Palm Beach southward. Weather overcast with rain Tuesday. East Gulf, strong east to northeast winds over extreme north and shifting gales over central and south portions with winds hurricane force near center of tropical storm southeast portion. Weather overcast with rain Tuesday. Tropical disturbance of full hurricane intensity but small diameter central 8 p. m. near Matecumbe Key moving northwestward, accompanied by shifting gales and hurricane winds near center. Caution advised low places southwest Florida for high winds and tides."

10 p. m.: Barometer reading, 28.04.

10:30 p. m.: Barometer reading, 28.80.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired. All time has expired. The question is on the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who have spoken on the bill have leave to revise and extend their remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the table the bill (S. 4354) to authorize the attendance of the Marine Band at the Arkansas Centennial Celebration, at Little Rock, Ark., the Texas Centennial, at Dallas, Tex., and the Confederate Reunion, at Shreveport, La., between the dates from June 6 to June 16, 1936, inclusive, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, and ask the gentleman from Arkansas whether this bill was on the Consent Calendar?

Mr. FULLER. Yes; it was.

Mr. MAPES. Was there an objection made to the consideration of the bill when it was called?

Mr. FULLER. Yes; one objection.

Mr. MAPES. I do not know that I have any objection to it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. FULLER. Then, Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 4354) to authorize the attendance of the Marine Band at the Arkansas Centennial Celebration at Little Rock Ark.; the Texas Centennial at Dallas, Tex.; and the National Confederate Reunion at Shreveport, La., between the dates from June 6 to June 16, 1936, inclusive, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is authorized to permit the band of the United States Marine Corps to attend and give concerts at the Arkansas Centennial Celebration, at Little Rock, Ark.; the Texas Centennial, at Dallas, Tex.; and the National Confederate Reunion, at Shreveport, La., between the dates from June 6 to June 16, 1936, inclusive.

SEC. 2. For the purpose of defraying the expenses of such band in attending and giving concerts at such celebrations and reunion there is authorized to be appropriated the sum of $11,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to carry out the provisions of this act: Provided, That in addition to transportation and Pullman accommodations the leaders and members of the Marine Band be allowed not to exceed $5 per day each for actual living expenses while on this duty, and that the payment of such expenses shall be in addition to the pay and allowances to which they would be entitled while serving at their permanent station.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is not.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, before we proceed with the consideration of the Marine Band bill, I desire to submit a unanimous-consent request. I ask unanimous consent that tomorrow at the conclusion of the call of the bills on the Private Calendar we may take up the omnibus private claims bills.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that tomorrow at the conclusion of the call of the individual bills on the Private Calendar, we may take up the consideration of omnibus bills on the Private Calendar. Is there objection?

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Will the gentleman from Alabama give the House some idea of what is in the omnibus claims bill to which he refers?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I could not inform the gentleman about that. Of course the gentleman knows there are a number of omnibus bills, and each of them includes private bills that are on this calendar under the new rule.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, there are a number of bills that have been placed in these omnibus bills for some little time and have not come up for consideration, due to the fact that the Private Calendar was passed over on two occasions during this session. These are various bills that have been objected to and reconsidered by the committee and placed in the omnibus bill.

Mr. MAPES. Has the gentleman consulted with the minority members of the Committee on Claims about this request?

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Yes; I have talked to all members of the committee and it is agreeable to them to bring these bills up in this manner if we can.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. There are about 150 bills on the calendar which the gentleman expected to close up tomorrow.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. That is the bills unobjected to.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. That have not been called previously. The Members on the Democratic side and the Members on the Republican side who have been designated to examine these bills have not seen them until this afternoon. They will have to work until a late hour tonight in reading them. I think it is hardly fair after asking them to do that to then go into the omnibus bill. I have no objection to the omnibus bills being taken up at a later day, but it is unfair to take them up tomorrow. Therefore, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York objects.

ATTENDANCE OF MARINE BAND AT CONFEDERATE REUNION

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas moves to suspend the rules and pass the bill S. 4354. Is a second demanded?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas is entitled to 20 minutes and the gentleman from Michigan to 20 minutes.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, I shall take only a little time in explaining the bill and there will be very few, if any, speeches on this side of the House. A similar bill to this was introduced in the House by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. SANDLIN], who is not here to look after the bill today. This Senate bill is similar to the House bill. It provides an authorization of $11,500 for sending the Marine Band to the Confederate Reunion in Shreveport, La. That is the principal cost contained in the bill. It also provides that while the band is there it may attend the opening of the Dallas fair, the centennial of Texas on the 6th, and can go to Little Rock to attend the opening of the centennial convention there. This is similar to the bills passed on every occasion as far as I can remember for a Confederate Veterans' Reunion, as well as for the G. A. R.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, a similar bill was on the Consent Calendar this afternoon and it was objected to. I did not take the opportunity at that time to make clear the objections which I had to the bill. I understand the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. FULLER] has confined his motion to the bill S. 4354, the Senate bill. The difference between the Senate bill and the House bill is simply in the amount. The original Senate bill provided for $15,000 and they reduced it to $11,500. The dates, as I understand it, are identical, except they use certain dates making it inclusive instead of setting forth the exact dates when the band will attend each of these celebrations.

I will agree that there is precedent for sending the Marine Band to Confederate reunions. It has been done before and probably will be done again any time that this House wants to vote the authority to do it.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Just wait until I finish, please.

I think, however, for the first time in the history of American election campaigns the House of Representatives is asked to appropriate the people's money for the purpose of sending a band along with the President of the United States to drum up an audience to listen to his campaign speeches. It is very significant that this band is to play and give concerts at the Arkansas Centennial at the same time the President of the United States, in competition with the Republican National Convention, is speaking at that centennial. It is very significant that this band is playing at the Texas Centennial on the identical day that the President of the United States is to make a campaign speech at the Texas Centennial. Now, there has been a great deal of criticism about the use of public money by this and other administrations for campaign purposes.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. After all, some of us are attempting to make an honest effort to cut the expenses of Government down to the very bone in order that some time in the future the Budget may be balanced.

I have every respect in the world for the Marine Band. I would like to give those boys this vacation, if it could be done and be consistent with the condition in which the Government finds itself today.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Not just now.

I think it is somewhat deplorable to spend $11,500, or any sum of money, in addition to the $5 a day per person which it will cost to maintain them at these three celebrations for the purpose of giving those boys a vacation such as they are not asking for, and can serve only the purpose which I have mentioned.

As I have said on other occasions, and probably my remarks will be just as effective today as they were then, the responsibility is that of this House. I know that we on this side do not have the votes to stop this misuse of the people's money for this purpose, even if you could call it a noble purpose. I know there are a great many hearts and souls tonight that are watching with a great deal of interest to see whether we are putting our stamp of approval upon the use of this band for this purpose, as set forth in this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I expect that we shall have a roll call on this bill by which we may be enabled to determine just how sincerely some of the Members of this House are in their statements on behalf of the taxpayers who have to pay the bills.

Mr. Speaker, I now yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH].

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, hour after hour, day after day, and minute after minute all we do is appropriate funds. There is not a Member of the Democratic side nor on the Republican side who can answer the question, Where are you going to get the money? [Applause.]

It may seem trivial and foolish to some of you, but remember this: It is one of the most serious things that is facing this Nation today. This is serious business with me. It might be light as far as you are concerned, and you may act like children in making light of it; but when you read the statement of the Federal Treasury which comes to your office every day, when you read the report of the Treasury which you will get after the first of the year, and when you find out you are going to be in the red about $48,000,000,000, if that is not serious business, then I do not know what I am talking about.

You can make all the levity and all the fun you want to, but do not forget that when you get back to your constituents you will have something to account for and there will be some of them who will say something to you that will not be so pleasant. I hope they check up your record. It would not be enlightening to the Nation when you have to explain to them, "I voted for everything that came before the House of Representatives involving the spending of money." How in the Dutch you are going to account to your people, I do not know. [Laughter.]

Now, this bill only calls for $10,500. That is not much; but remember this, 2 years ago Mr. Eastman, of Rochester, N. Y., asked that the Marine Band come to Rochester. The city of Rochester agreed to pay every dollar of the expense of that band if they would come there. You refused to let them go, because you said it was contrary to the rules laid down whereby the Marine Band could attend functions all over this Nation.

The argument was made that so many similar requests would come from all over the Nation that it would be the wrong thing to do; but, as my colleague the gentleman from Michigan has pointed out to you, the Marine Band is going to three cities in the South, to be there at the same time the President of the United States is there. They will march along together at the celebrations.

Mr. GASQUE rose.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from South Carolina?

Mr. RICH. When I finish my statement I will yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Where is the Marine Band going? It is going to the State of Arkansas. JOE ROBINSON is going to have some trouble out there this year.

Mr. FULLER. Not much.

Mr. RICH. Then it is going down in Texas. Mr. Garner—well, I do not think he will have so much trouble in Texas.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 additional minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RICH. Not now.

Then they are going to Louisiana. If Senator Long were still alive I wonder if it would not be mighty important that the President go to Louisiana? But even as it is you will find out that the people of Louisiana are not all going to back up this administration. I question whether you ought not send the Marine Band with the President of the United States into every State in the Union, because when the people find out that this administration has been the greatest spending administration the Nation has ever known, yes, and four times over, when Mr. Roosevelt said in 1932, "Three years of spending." Now if he looks back he probably will say 3 years of a spending spree. He will have to explain to the people why he has been spending all this money. Secretary Morgenthau said a few weeks ago that we would be $40,000,000,000 in the red at the end of 1937. The fact of the matter is we will approach about that figure by the end of 1936. The President on January 3 said we were approaching a balanced Budget. This session of Congress this year before it adjourns will have spent more money than the Congress spent at the session last year, which was a record for extravagant spending.

Now, think over these things; they are facts. Gracious goodness! There is no more fact about the statement that we are approaching a balanced Budget than there is in the statement that you are not going to have darkness about 2 hours from now. There is no more truth in those statements than there is in the statement that white is black. Mr. Roosevelt does not know what the meaning is of a balanced Budget.

Now, men, are you going to establish a precedent by voting for this bill that will take the Marine Band to head the President on a political jaunt for his election in November? Remember! I tell you once more your people back home will render the verdict in November, and when the verdict is rendered you will get the worst licking you ever got in your life. You will not like it, but it will be the truth.

Had I voted for all this spending I would be ashamed of myself. My people, I feel confident, will approve my attitude on thrift and economy. If the present generation does not, the future generation certainly will, and for that I will be thankful.

I would not change one of my votes in the past 6 years if I had the opportunity today to do so. Can you all say the same thing? I am afraid you cannot.

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Speaker, I yield one-half minute to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. DEEN].

Mr. DEEN. Mr. Speaker, I requested this half minute to answer the question so often propounded in this House by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH], as to where we are going to get the money. My answer is that we are going to get some money from the rich.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Shall the rules be suspended and the bill be passed?

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WOLCOTT) there were—ayes 138, noes 30.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground there is not a quorum present, and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Two hundred and twenty-three Members are present, a quorum.

So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PREVENTION OF SALES DISCRIMINATION

Mr. UTTERBACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 8442) making it unlawful for any person engaged in commerce to discriminate in price or terms of sale between purchasers of commodities of like grade and quality, to prohibit the payment of brokerage or commission under certain conditions, to suppress pseudo-advertising allowances, to provide a presumptive measure of damages in certain cases and to protect the independent merchant, the public whom he serves, and the manufacturer from whom he buys, from exploitation by unfair competitors, with a Senate amendment thereto, disagrees to the Senate amendment, and agree to the conference requested by the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, was this bill reported by the Judiciary Committee?

Mr. UTTERBACK. Yes; this is the Patman-Robinson bill.

Mr. MICHENER. What are the changes?

Mr. UTTERBACK. The Senate struck out everything after the enacting clause and have requested a conference.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

The Chair appointed as conferees Mr. UTTERBACK, Mr. MILLER, Mr. CELLER, Mr. MCLAUGHLIN, Mr. SUMNERS of Texas, Mr. GUYER, and Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky.

TRANSFER OF DECOMMISSIONED LIGHTSHIP "NO. 82" TO UNITED STATES SHIP CONSTITUTION POST, NO. 3339, VETERANS OF FOREIGN WARS

Mr. MCCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 12896) to provide for the transfer of the surplus decommissioned lightship No. 82 to United States Ship Constitution Post, No. 3339, Veterans of Foreign Wars.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think this bill should be explained.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, lightship No. 82 is a decommissioned surplus vessel which is about to be sold for junk by the Department of Commerce. It has an appraised value of $1,800. The purpose of this bill is to permit it to be given by grant or for a nominal consideration to a post of the Veterans of Foreign Wars to be used as its headquarters.

Mr. MAPES. May I ask the gentleman what committee reported this bill?

Mr. McCORMACK. The Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. MAPES. Has the gentleman talked with the ranking member of the committee about this bill?

Mr. McCORMACK. My good friend, the gentleman from California [Mr. WELCH] was present when the hearings were held.

Mr. WELCH. I may say that this bill has been unanimously reported by the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Commerce is authorized and directed to transfer the surplus decommissioned lightship No. 82 to the United States Ship Constitution Post, No. 3339, Veterans of Foreign Wars, of the Department of Massachusetts, for use by the said post as its headquarters. Such transfer may be by gift without cost to the said post, or by sale for a nominal consideration, whichever method the Secretary may deem the more consistent with public interest, and such transfer shall be made without reference to the provisions of law regarding the disposition of surplus or condemned Government property contained in the act of March 4, 1913, or in any other statute.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ADDITIONAL PLACE OF HOLDING TERMS OF THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT, EASTERN DISTRICT OF KENTUCKY

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 12848) to provide an additional place of holding terms of the United States District Court in the Eastern District of Kentucky, and to amend section 83 of the Judicial Code, as amended.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask if this bill is on the Consent Calendar at the present time?

Mr. MAY. It was reported by the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Is it on the Consent Calendar now?

Mr. MAY. I do not know whether it is. I think it is.

Mr. WOLCOTT. It sounds somewhat familiar to me. This is not the bill which provides for an additional judge?

Mr. MAY. Oh, no.

Mr. WOLCOTT. This is the bill that provides for the holding of court at an additional place?

Mr. MAY. At a place where it is not held now. This has the approval of the present judge and the former judge. There is absolutely no objection to it, and the evidence shows savings of thousands of dollars will be effected if this bill is passed.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I understand the court room is to be donated by the county in which the court convenes?

Mr. MAY. Yes.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the question has been raised whether this bill has been reported by any committee.

Mr. MAY. It has been unanimously reported by the Judiciary Committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted etc., That in addition to the places of holding district courts of the United States in the eastern district of Kentucky, as now provided by law, there shall be held at Pikeville in Pike County, Ky., two regular sessions of said court each year beginning on the fourth Monday in March and the second Monday in October: Provided, That suitable rooms and accommodations for holding said sessions of court shall be furnished without expense to the United States until such time as the United States shall provide such rooms and accommodations.

The clerk of the court for said eastern district shall maintain an office in charge of himself, a deputy, or a clerical assistant at said place, and said office shall be kept open at all times for the transaction of business of said court.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RELIEF OF GOVERNMENT CONTRACTORS

Mr. CITRON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 7293) to amend the act approved June 16, 1934, entitled "An act to provide relief to Government contractors whose costs of performance were increased as a result of compliance with the act approved June 16, 1933, and for other purposes."

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain the bill?

Mr. CITRON. Public Act 369 of the Seventy-third Congress, approved June 16, 1934, provides for adjustment of claims of Government contractors whose costs were increased by the compliance with N. R. A. codes or the President's reemployment agreement on contracts entered into with the Government prior to the date of the Executive order of August 10, 1933. The Comptroller General ruled that under the wording of the act sub-subcontractors are excluded from its benefits. This bill amends the act so as to permit the adjustment of claims of such sub-subcontractors on the same basis as those of subcontractors.

Some of the codes were approved and effective prior to August 10, 1933. This amendment provides that in the event a contractor or subcontractor complied with a code effective before August 10, 1933, his additional costs shall be allowed from the date of his compliance.

The safeguards of the Government contained in the original act are all retained in this amendment.

Contractors under the original act were given 6 months from the date of approval of the act or at the option of the claimant and 6 months after completion of the contract within which to present claims. Inasmuch as the 6 months has expired, the bill by the committee amendment provides that in the case of contractors, subcontractors, or materialmen to whom the benefits of the act are to be extended the 6-month period first referred to shall be computed from the date of enactment of the amendatory act.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object to ask a question. Is this bill of general application, or is it limited to certain kinds of contractors on certain kinds of work?

Mr. CITRON. The bill has general application to contractors, subcontractors, materialmen, and sub-subcontractors. I do not believe there is anything in the bill that limits it to any special kinds of contractors on any special kind of work.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Can every subcontractor take advantage of the provisions of this bill who was compelled to increase his costs or expenses by reason of the N. R. A.?

Mr. CITRON. Yes. The subcontractors are given the same rights that the contractors have, and this is not limited to any certain kind of subcontractors on any special kind of work.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That an act approved June 16, 1934, be amended and reenacted to read as follows:

"That the Comptroller General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to adjust and settle on a fair and equitable basis claims of persons who entered into a contract or contracts with the United States prior to August 10, 1933, including all subcontractors and materialmen performing work or furnishing material or necessary fuel direct to the contractor or another subcontractor under such contracts, for additional costs incurred by reason for compliance on and after August 10, 1933, with a code or codes of fair competition approved by the President under section 3 of the act approved June 16, 1933, known as the "National Industry Recovery Act", or by reason of compliance with an agreement with the President executed under section 4 (a) of said act in the performance after August 10, 1933, of the contract or any part thereof, if, however, a contractor or subcontractor became a signator to or complied with any code or codes effective before August 10, 1933, then the additional costs incurred by reason of compliance therewith shall be allowed from the date of such compliance. In the event that such contract was performed wholly or in party by a surety on the bond of the contractor, or of a subcontractor, the claim may be presented by and settlement made with such surety, but such surety shall have no greater rights than would have accrued to the contractor or subcontractor had such contractor or subcontractor completed the contract. Any contractor, or subcontractor, or completing surety desiring an adjustment and settlement with respect to any such contract under this act for increased costs incurred after August 10, 1933, by reason of compliance with the codes or reemployment agreements shall file with the department or administrative establishment concerned a verified claim itemizing such additional costs, and any subcontractor or any such contractor may file his claim directly with the head of the department or independent establishment concerned or through the contractor. After the claim has been examined by the head of the department or independent establishment concerned, or such person or persons as he shall designate, the claim shall be transmitted to the Comptroller General of the United States, accompanied with an administrative finding of fact and recommendation with respect to the claim.

"SEC. 2. In no event shall any allowance exceed the amount by which the cost of performance of such part of the contract as was performed subsequently to June 16, 1933, was directly increased by reason of compliance with a code or codes of fair competition, or with an agreement with the President, as aforesaid.

"SEC. 3. In no event shall any allowance be made which would result in a profit to the claimant exceeding 7 percent on the cost of performance of the contract in respect of which the claim is made. The head of the department or establishment concerned, subject to the approval of the Comptroller General, shall have the authority, from time to time, to determine the actual cost and profit thereon.

"SEC. 4. No claim hereunder shall be considered or allowed unless presented within 6 months from the date of approval of this act on or before June 16, 1935, or, at the option of the claimant, within 6 months after the completion of the contract, except in the discretion of the Comptroller General for good cause shown by the claimant.

"SEC. 5. Appropriations for the purpose of paying claims allowed hereunder and the expense of determining the claims are hereby authorized.

"SEC. 6. EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BIERMANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in today's proceedings at the end of the colloquy between the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] and me.

COINAGE OF 50-CENT PIECES IN COMMEMORATION OF THE ANNIVERSARY OF THE JOURNEY AND EXPLORATIONS OF FRANCISCO VASQUEZ DE CORONADO

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 12604) to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the four hundredth anniversary of the journey and explorations of Francisco Vasquez de Coronado.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, when the Congress first met in January we had one of these bills presented in that month. We had two in the month of February, and since then there has been one bill introduced about every week. We are now getting them every day, and I should like to say to my friends on the other side of the aisle that this Democratic Congress has passed more bills for the coinage of 50-cent pieces, foreign to our system of coinage, than any other Congress in our Nation's history. When are you going to stop this? When will you Democrats, with your large majority, stop your fooling? You are everlastingly granting all requests for coinage of silver coins. Surely you are on the inflation road in silver as well as in paper money. Let me suggest the head of Jefferson for one side of the coin, the man of principle, and Mr. Roosevelt for the other side, the man who has none of Jefferson's principles.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Whereas the year 1940 marks the four hundredth anniversary of the journey and explorations of Francisco Vasquez de Coronado, the Spanish explorer, whose discoveries in the years 1540, 1541, and 1542 gave to the world the first comprehensive knowledge of that part of western America now included within the United States of America, and including the States of Arizona, California, Kansas, New Mexico, Oklahoma, and Texas; and

Whereas the State of New Mexico by legislative act has created a corporation known as the Coronado Cuarto Centennial Corporation for the purpose of properly commemorating and observing, during the year 1940, the phenomenal accomplishments of its first explorer: Therefore

Be it enacted, etc., That in commemoration of the four hundredth anniversary of the journey and explorations of Francisco Vasquez de Coronado there shall be coined at a mint of the United States to be designated by the Director of the Mint not to exceed 100,000 silver 50-cent pieces of standard size, weight, and composition, and of a special appropriate single design to be fixed by the Director of the Mint, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, but the United States shall not be subject to the expense of making the necessary dies and other preparations for this coinage.

SEC. 2. The coins herein authorized shall bear the date 1940, irrespective of the year in which they are minted or issued, shall be legal tender in any payment to the amount of their face value, and shall be issued only upon the request of the chairman or secretary of the Coronado Cuarto Centennial Corporation upon payment by him of the par value of such coins, but not less than 5,000 such coins shall be issued to him at any one time and no such coins shall be issued after the expiration of 1 year after the date of enactment of this act. Such coins may be disposed of at par value or at a premium by such committee and the net proceeds shall be used by it in defraying the expenses incidental and appropriate to the commemoration of such event.

SEC. 3. All laws now in force relating to the subsidiary silver coins of the United States and the coining or striking of the same, regulating and guarding the process of coinage, providing for the purchase of material and for the transportation, distribution, and redemption of coins, for the prevention of debasement or counterfeiting, for the security of the coins, or for any other purposes whether such laws are penal or otherwise, shall, so far as applicable, apply to the coinage herein authorized.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out the preamble; and on line 20, page 2, after the word "coins", strike out the remainder of line 20 and all of lines 21, 22, and 23 down to and including the word "act."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TRANSFER OF LAND IN MINNESOTA

Mr. BUCKLER of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 11331) to authorize the sale and conveyance by the Department of the Interior to the State of Minnesota of the southwest quarter northwest quarter section 3, township 159 north, range 35 west, fifth principal meridian, in the State of Minnesota.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to convey to the State of Minnesota the southwest quarter northwest quarter section 3, township 159 north, range 35 west, fifth principal meridian, in the State of Minnesota, upon the payment by the State of Minnesota of the sum of $64.20, being the price of the land, timber, and incidental fees.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

HOW THE ADMINISTRATION TAKES STEPS TO PROTECT THE TEXTILE INDUSTRY OF THIS COUNTRY

Mr. CITRON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to include therein a letter from the Secretary of State and also an announcement from the Tariff Commission.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CITRON. Mr. Speaker, in the April 3, 1936, issue of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD will be found copy of a letter which I received from the Honorable Cordell Hull, acknowledging a communication of mine in regard to increased importations of cotton textiles. My communication also included a letter from Mr. Russell T. Fisher, secretary of the National Association of Cotton Manufacturers, Boston, Mass., who is also mentioned in the present letter I am inserting.

In his letter of April 2, 1936, Secretary Hull admitted that importation of cotton piece goods from Japan did increase markedly in January as compared with the rate of importation of these goods from Japan during the last 6 months of 1935. He stated that in view of the assurances given by representatives of the Japanese Government to the State Department in December, the January figures of imports from Japan were brought to the attention of the Japanese Ambassador just as soon as they were available, and the Japanese Embassy took the matter up immediately with the Foreign Office in Tokyo. He added that it was hoped that the Japanese would be able voluntarily to control this situation, and if this should prove impossible, further consideration would be given to the entire problem.

Since then I have received the following letter from Secretary of State Hull, dated May 29. This shows the results of a thorough study and survey made by our Administration, and how it takes steps to protect American industry. Incidentally, I call attention to the fact that although a great many of the complaints about the imports of Japanese cotton cloth emanated from New England, this region has not been affected as much as the volume of protest would lead us to believe.

The situation is explained in the third paragraph of this letter of Secretary Hull. I also submit an announcement on cotton cloth by the United States Tariff Commission on May 21, 1936.

LETTER FROM SECRETARY OF STATE HON. CORDELL HULL

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, May 29, 1936.

The Honorable WILLIAM M. CITRON,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. CITRON: The receipt is acknowledged of your letter of May 20, 1936, enclosing a letter from Mr. Russell T. Fisher, secretary of the National Association of Cotton Manufacturers, Boston, Mass., with further reference to the competition in this market of cotton cloth imported from Japan.

The most important development with respect to this problem is, of course, the action of the President on May 21 increasing the rates of duty upon imports of the principal types of cotton cloth. For your information, and for transmission to Mr. Fisher if you desire, I enclose three copies of the press release of the United States Tariff Commission regarding this action. I have arranged also for the United States Tariff Commission to send you directly a copy of the Commission's report upon its investigation, the report on which the action of the President was based.

With respect to the unusual drive of manufacturers in New England against the competition of Japanese cotton cloth, you may be interested in the information contained in the report of the Tariff Commission on the areas within the United States with which the principal cotton-cloth imports from Japan compete. In the case of print cloth, the most important cloth import from Japan, the Commission found that there had been a very noticeable shift in the production of these goods from New England to the Southern States prior to the beginning of the competition of Japanese goods and that in 1933, when Japanese goods were not yet a factor in this market, 94 percent of all print cloths were produced in the Southern States. To be sure, there are other lines of production in which a few New England mills do feel the competition of goods imported from Japan, but much of the complaint from certain sections of the industry in New England would not appear to be wholly justified on economic grounds.

Mr. Fisher's letter is returned to you herewith, copies having been made for the Department's files.

Sincerely yours,

CORDELL HULL.

(Enclosures: Press release from Mr. Fisher.)

ANNOUNCEMENT OF TARIFF COMMISSION

The announcement on cotton cloth dated May 21, 1936, by the Tariff Commission follows:

The Tariff Commission announces that the President has approved the findings of the Commission with respect to the excess of domestic over Japanese costs of cotton cloth, and has issued a proclamation under the provisions of section 336 of the Tariff Act of 1930 increasing the duties on bleached, printed, dyed, or colored cotton cloths containing yarns the average number of which exceeds number 30 but does not exceed number 50. The cloths on which duties are changed constituted about 59 percent, on the square-yard basis, of the total cotton cloths imported in 1935, and about 90 percent of the cotton cloths imported from Japan in that year.

The duties on cotton cloths in paragraph 904 of the Tariff Act of 1930 depend on the fineness of the yarn; the higher the yarn number the higher the duty. On bleached cotton cloths within the limits specified in the proclamation the duties under the 1930 act range from 23.85 percent ad valorem for 31's average yarn number to 30.50 percent for 50's; the new duties will range from 34 percent ad valorem for 31's to 43.5 percent for 50's. On printed, dyed, or colored cotton cloths within the limits specified the duties under the act of 1930 range from 26.85 percent ad valorem for 31's average yarn number to 33.50 percent ad valorem for 50's average yarn number; the new duties will range from 38 percent ad valorem for 31's average yarn number to 47.5 percent ad valorem for 50's average yarn number. The proclaimed duties represent an increase over the existing duties of about 42 percent for both bleached cloths and printed, dyed, or colored cloths. The increase in rates does not affect unbleached cloth nor cloth woven with eight or more harnesses, or with Jacquard, lappet, or swivel attachments.

The cost-of-production investigation of domestic and foreign cotton cloths was instituted by the Tariff Commission in response to a Senate resolution. The Commission selected for use as the basis of cost comparisons bleached, printed, dyed, and colored cotton cloth, containing yarns the average number of which exceeds 30 but does not exceed 50. Imports of unbleached cloths as a whole are small, and imports of bleached, printed, dyed, or colored cloths coarser or finer than the 31's–50's range consist of numerous varieties each of which is imported in relatively small quantities from any one country. Imports within the 31's–50's range constitute nearly three-fifths of the total imports, and they come principally from Japan. In its report the Commission compared costs of production of domestic cloths delivered at New York, the principal market, with costs, as evidenced by invoice prices, of similar Japanese cloths delivered at New York.

The United Kingdom supplied the bulk of the cotton cloths imported into the United States prior to 1931. Switzerland was the leading source in the period 1931–34. Late in 1934 the imports from Japan became important, and that country was the principal source of imports in 1935 and in 1936 to date. Of the total United States imports in 1935, amounting to 62,000,000 square yards, Japan supplied 36,400,000 square yards of which 30,000,000 square yards were bleached, 6,000,000 were printed, dyed, or colored, and 57,000 unbleached. Of these 1935 imports from Japan, about 33,000,000 square yards, or over 90 percent, were within the yarn counts of 31's–50's on which the duty has been increased. Imports from Japan in the first quarter of 1936 increased to over 21,000,000 square yards.

The imported Japanese cloths are lighter in weight than the most nearly comparable domestic goods, and they have sold at prices per yard which take into account the weight difference. Import prices, in fact, have usually been lower than domestic by more than the disparity in weight and frequently have been lower than the costs of production of the heavier domestic cloths.

The bulk of the cotton cloths imported from Japan in 1935 and the first quarter of 1936 were mulls and shirtings, mostly bleached but including some piece-dyed, finished from gray shirtings; these are competitive in a range of uses with domestic nainsooks, and muslins similarly finished from gray print-cloth. The main use of the Japanese mulls and shirtings is in the manufacture of nightgowns, children's underwear, and men's handkerchiefs.

Of the total United States production of countable cotton cloths, amounting to more than 7,300,000,000 square yards in 1933, print-cloths and sheetings are the largest items. The shift in production of these goods from New England to the Southern States since 1921 has been very noticeable. In the case of print cloth, the Southern States had about 61 percent of the total national production in 1921 and 94 percent in 1933. In 1935 there was very little print cloth produced in New England.

Imports of countable cotton cloths from all sources were equivalent to somewhat less than 1 percent, and imports from Japan to about one-half of 1 percent, of the total yardage of domestic production in 1935. The competition of imports from Japan is, however, confined to part of the field only—that of printcloths, especially bleached printcloths. The ratio of total imports of shirtings from Japan to total domestic production of printcloths was about 2 percent in 1935 and the ratio of bleached shirtings from Japan to domestic production of bleached printcloths was about 13 percent.

Although the United States is the world's largest producer of cotton cloth, Japan in recent years has been the largest exporter. The United States regularly exports more cotton cloth than it imports, but in recent years its export trade has fallen sharply, the decline due in large part to the competition of cheaper fabrics from Japan. Japan's exports of cotton cloth to the United States constituted in 1935 less than 2 percent of its total exports of such cloth. The new rates of duty will become effective on June 20, 1936.

INVESTIGATION BY FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION

Mr. LEA of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 268, to amend the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution authorizing the Federal Trade Commission to make an investigation with respect to agricultural income and the financial and economic conditions of agricultural producers generally", approved August 27, 1935.

A bill similar to this was passed by the Unanimous Consent Calendar this afternoon.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 268. Is there objection?

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. Is this the identical bill that the House passed this afternoon?

Mr. LEA of California. It is not identical. There is one amendment of substance passed by the Senate, which includes the words "persons and corporations" to be investigated.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. If it is not identical, what is the purpose of the unanimous-consent request? As I understand it, this is a matter which has been presented to the Committee on Rules. If we pass a House bill and then pass an identical Senate bill, that is one thing; but if the gentleman is trying to pass identical legislation at this late hour, it is quite another thing.

Mr. BLANTON. How much is this proposed to expend?

Mr. LEA of California. There is no additional expense in the Senate bill. The amount is the same as in the House bill.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The House bill calls for $150,000.

Mr. LEA of California. Yes. There are some technical amendments placed on the bill by the Senate.

Mr. BLANTON. Is the gentleman going to ask to vacate the proceedings by which the House bill was passed and then to lay the House bill on the table?

Mr. LEA of California. No. I want to pass the Senate bill and drop the House bill.

Mr. BLANTON. To do that the gentleman should ask to vacate the proceedings by which the House bill was passed and then to lay that bill on the table.

Mr. LEA of California. It may be that the House bill has gone to the Senate.

Mr. BLANTON. We do not want two $150,000 investigation bills passed here in the House without having one of them go to the table.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. MERRITT of New York, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. DITTER (at the request of Mr. DARROW), for balance of the session, on account of official business.

HENRY W. BIBUS ET AL.—VETO MESSAGE (S. DOC. NO. 259)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States received by the Senate on June 1, 1936, which was read, and, with the accompanying bill, referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed, as follows:

To the Senate:

I return herewith, without my approval, Senate bill No. 2734, entitled "An act to confer jurisdiction upon the United States Court of Claims to hear and determine the claims of Henry W. Bibus, Annie Ulrick, Samuel Henry, Charles W. Hensor, Headley Woolston, John Henry, estate of Harry B. C. Margerum, and George H. Custer, of Falls Township and borough of Tullytown, Bucks County, Commonwealth of Pennsylvania."

During the World War the War Department leased under an option to purchase a number of separate farms in the borough of Tullytown, Bucks County, Pa., for the purpose of using the integrated property as an arsenal, and at the end of the war, not having exercised its option to purchase, condemned the separate tracts and paid the various owners the prices agreed upon, which were embodied in a court decree, and received deeds for the several properties. On December 19, 1927, the War Department having no further use for the property, the entire tract was sold at public auction.

This act grants jurisdiction to the Court of Claims of the United States to hear and determine the claims of the beneficiaries and severally to award judgments in their favor for "the difference between the entire amount paid by the Government for the whole tract and the amount for which the Government subsequently sold the tract, said total difference to be distributed to the respective claimants prorated in accordance with the number of acres taken by the Government", notwithstanding the payments made to the owners of the several properties in accordance with the condemnation decree of the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania on June 9, 1921.

This act introduces a new principle in legislation concerning claims of this character in that it seeks to give to former owners of property or their legal representatives the profit realized by the Government from a sale years after it acquired the property. If this principle is to obtain, then, by the same token, if the Government had sold the property for less than the amount it had paid the owners it should have an equitable claim upon the owners for the losses. Such a principle in its application as to either a gain or a loss by the Government is believed to be utterly indefensible. Furthermore, if such a principle is to be recognized it would seem to be applicable in every similar case where the Government has acquired property from individuals and thereafter has realized a profit on the same.

For the reasons set forth, I feel that my approval of this legislation is not justified.

COLLIER MANUFACTURING CO.—VETO MESSAGE (S. DOC. NO. 260)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, received by the Senate on June 1, 1936, which was read, and, with the accompanying bill, referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed, as follows:

To the Senate:

I return herewith, without my approval, Senate bill no. 1431, entitled "An act for the relief of the Collier Manufacturing Co., of Barnesville, Ga."

This act authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the Collier Manufacturing Co., of Barnesville,

Ga., the sum of $48,718.70 in full settlement of all claims against the Government for losses sustained on account of the manufacture of undershirts for the United States Army in the year 1918.

The claim which this act seeks to settle and pay grows out of three separate contracts made and entered into between the Government and Clift & Goodrich, who had the sole and exclusive control of the merchandise output of the Collier Manufacturing Co., each of which contracts provided for the manufacture and delivery of 120,000 summer, cotton-ribbed undershirts, the product of the Collier Manufacturing Co. In October 1918 supplemental contracts were entered into between Clift & Goodrich and the United States, which canceled the unperformed parts of the three contracts previously entered into between the contractor and the Government. The supplemental contract agreements contained the following provisions:

> That * * * any and all debts, liabilities, claims, or causes of action, if any, existing between the parties hereto, one against the other, by reason of or arising out of the aforementioned modifications of the original contract are hereby released and discharged.

Thereafter the Collier Manufacturing Co. presented its claim before the War Department Board of Contract Adjustment, with the result that the board found the claimant had no contract, either express or implied, with the Government, the contracts having been in fact entered into between the Government and Clift & Goodrich (vol. 6, p. 461, Decisions of War Department Board of Contract Adjustment), and from this decision an appeal was taken to the Secretary of War, who affirmed the decision theretofore made (vol. 8, p. 8, Decisions of War Department Board of Contract Adjustment). Thereafter the Collier Manufacturing Co. brought suit against the United States in the Court of Claims, which decided:

> The only thing in the contract that identified the plaintiff with them was that the goods were to be of their make. But this was an undertaking by Clift & Goodrich so far as the Government is concerned, and having made the contract with them, whether they were sales agents of plaintiff or not, the Government had a right to deal with them, and did so. The plaintiff had no enforceable contract with the Government. When the matter was heard before the Board of Contract Adjustment they came to that conclusion, and the conclusion was confirmed by the Secretary of War. (See Decisions of War Department, vol. 6, p. 461, and vol. 8, p. 8.) There being no contract, express or implied, between the Government and the plaintiff, it cannot recover (Collier Manufacturing Co. v. U. S., 61 C. Cls. 32).

Since this act seeks to pay to the beneficiary named therein, which had no contract with the Government, express or implied, losses which it is alleged to have sustained by reason of the cancelation of the contract between the United States and its contractor, Clift & Goodrich, the question is presented whether the Government is warranted in paying such claim. In considering this matter I am mindful of the fact that there must be a vast number of materialmen and subcontractors who, by reason of the cancelation of war contracts between the Government and principal contractors, may have sustained losses. This act singles out the Collier Manufacturing Co. from the large number of subcontractors and materialmen who may have been adversely affected by the cancelation of the war contracts and gives this company preferential treatment over those similarly situated.

For these reasons I am impelled to withhold my approval of the act for the relief of the Collier Manufacturing Co.

WILLIAM W. DANENHOWER—VETO MESSAGE (S. DOC. NO. 261)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, received by the Senate on June 1, 1936, which was read, and, with the accompanying bill, referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed, as follows:

To the Senate:

I am returning, without my approval, S. 925, Seventy-fourth Congress, entitled "An act to carry into effect the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of William W. Danenhower."

This bill authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Sallie M. Danenhower, executrix of the estate of William W. Danenhower, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $34,260 in full settlement of all claims against the United States for damages caused by the depreciation in value of said William W. Danenhower's property, situate in square 737 in the city of Washington, D. C., due to changes in the grades of streets and the relocation of tracks of the Baltimore & Potomac Railroad in connection with the construction of the Union Railroad Station in Washington in accordance with the act of February 12, 1901 (31 Stat. 774), as found by the Court of Claims and reported in Senate Document No. 2, Sixty-seventh Congress, first session.

The act of February 12, 1901, and the amending acts of February 28, 1903 (32 Stat. 909), and June 29, 1906 (34 Stat. 624), authorizing claims for damages by property owners on account of losses incident to the construction of such Union Station, provide that the funds to pay such damages shall be derived 50 percent from revenues of the District of Columbia and 50 percent from the general funds of the Treasury.

The bill S. 925 provides that the full amount in settlement of the claim involved therein shall be paid "out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated." Since this provision is not in accord with the expressed policy of the compensatory legislation, I feel compelled to withhold my approval of this bill.

ZELMA HALVERSON—VETO MESSAGE (S. DOC. NO. 262)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, received by the Senate on June 1, 1936, which was read, and, with the accompanying bill, referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed, as follows:

To the Senate:

I return, without my approval, S. 952, entitled "An act for the relief of Zelma Halverson."

This bill authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the sum of $50 per month, in an amount not to exceed $5,000, to Zelma Halverson, to compensate her for the death of her husband, Harry Halverson, who lost his life August 21, 1933, while fighting a forest fire in Montana.

It was established by investigations made by officials of the Department of Agriculture and by the Comptroller General of the United States that Harry Halverson was not an employee of the United States at the time of his death, and there is no claim that his death was in any manner due to fault or negligence on the part of the United States or any employee thereof. From the facts of record it appears that he was employed by a private livestock company to assist in combating a forest fire in the vicinity of its holdings, which fire was not on or adjacent to a national forest and did not threaten national-forest timber, and that while so engaged in such private employment he lost his life.

The Federal Government is greatly concerned in the prevention and suppression of forest fires on State and private lands and contributes annually approximately a million and a half dollars to aid in such work, and while I appreciate the strong sympathetic appeal of the case under consideration, I do not feel that by any method of reasoning the Government would be justified in paying compensation for the injury or death of persons employed on such work by States or private interests.

For the above reasons I do not feel that I would be justified in giving my approval to this bill.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 1, 1936.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I should like to be heard briefly with reference to the veto messages which have just been received from the President. I am in agreement with the President in these matters. I wish to say, as chairman of the Committee on Claims, that I believe it would be a good policy for all Members of the House and Senate who intend to introduce bills asking for relief against the Government to obtain first from the department a report tending to show that the department itself will approve such claims.

For the remainder of this session I think no one should ask us to approve a claim against which the statute of limitations has run, nor should we be asked to report favorably any claim which has not been approved by the department. I think the President's course is one to be commended. Of course, there will be no effort on my part, and I am sure no effort on the part of the committee, to report the measures back with a view to overriding the vetoes.

MINORITY VIEWS OF SENATOR HASTINGS ON THE TAX BILL (PT. 3 OF REPT. NO. 2156)

Mr. HASTINGS, from the Committee on Finance, submitted his views on the bill (H. R. 12395) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes, which were ordered to be printed and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The President has recommended the present revenue bill to the Congress upon the ground that it is necessary in order that the permanent expenses of the Government may not exceed the revenue received by the Government. He makes no recommendation with respect to raising revenue for what he calls emergency expenditures.

Reference to his last Budget message shows that the expected revenue for the next fiscal year amounts to $5,654,000,000 and the permanent expenses to $5,649,000,000, thus showing a surplus of $5,000,000. It will also be noted that in that Budget message the President deliberately placed the money to be paid to the farmers, amounting to $499,054,935, in the category of permanent expenses and $246,000,000 of the expenses of the Civilian Conservation Corps in the same category.

Both of these in the previous Budget message had been treated as emergency expenditures, and it is perfectly clear that they were transferred to the permanent expenses only because the President believed the increased revenue from present sources would permit it to be done without showing a deficit of receipts over permanent Government expenses. His only excuse for his present recommendation is that the Supreme Court decision invalidating the processing tax, and the passage of the Veterans' Adjusted Compensation Act over his veto, destroyed his effort to balance permanent expenses with existing revenues. In other words, this bill is forced upon the Congress merely to maintain the President's pride in his own mental process. So far as the taxpayer is concerned, and so far as concerns those who are practically forced to purchase the securities of the Government, the shifting of one expense from the President's emergency budget to his permanent Budget is immaterial. It is about as unimportant to the taxpayer as a request of a creditor of his debtor to divide his obligations into two promissory notes and at the same time instead of including the whole sum in one note.

I am opposed to any increase in taxes until there be shown some affirmative evidence upon the part of the President and the majority of the Congress of a real appreciation of their respective responsibilities to the taxpayers of this and future generations. I do not believe in the theory that it is wise at this time to levy heavier taxes upon all the people of the Nation in order that they may better appreciate the extent of the present extravagance in the Federal Government. Such a plan would simply mean a greater distribution to a larger group of the voters of the Nation, and does not make more secure the credit of the Nation. It would not assure the balancing of the Budget because the power to put the Budget out of balance is without limit so long as the credit of the Government exists.

I have agreed upon the bill presented to the Senate only because I believe it to be so much better than the House bill. I am opposed to either of them.

The House bill is framed upon a theory that might well have been expected from this administration. In theory it looks fair enough to compel a corporation to distribute all of its profits, tax the persons receiving the dividend just as other individuals are taxed, and thus put them all on the same basis. The evidence submitted to the Committee on Finance showed conclusively that this would not work out in actual practice without destroying the framework of corporate business itself.

The bill presented to the Senate does great injustice to the millions of stockholders of corporations. The existing tax on corporations is high enough to impose a real penalty upon those who adopt the corporate form to do business. The advantage of the corporate form has been sufficient to warrant the investor in adopting it. We must not overlook the fact, however, that there must be a limit to the penalty we impose. Under the present law the small investor, as well as the large one, is paying a normal tax of about 15 percent upon the earnings of his investment in a corporation. This compares with 4 percent upon his income from sources that are not incorporated. The bill presented to the Senate increases that tax to 18 percent if all the income is distributed, an additional 7 percent tax upon that portion which is not distributed.

The House bill undertakes to put all on an equality. The Finance Committee very properly found this was not a practical thing to do. Instead of that it has increased the normal tax from approximately 15 percent to 18 percent and added an additional 4 percent upon the amount distributed, making a certain increase of nearly 7 percent, and if the corporate income is not distributed an additional 7 percent. This is a sure increase, directly or indirectly, upon the stockholder of about 46 percent, and in many cases it will mean an increase of about 93 percent.

The hope for the unemployed depends largely upon the revival of business. Most of the business is conducted through corporations. Corporations dare not spend more than they find necessary when they know the administration is endeavoring to punish them. There should be no tax bill at this time. The Congress should agree to no tax bill until there appears some evidence of economy. When a tax bill is proposed it should be submitted to careful study in order that reasonable justice could be done to all who are called upon to bear the burden.

DANIEL O. HASTINGS.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED

Mrs. CARAWAY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that on May 29, 1936, that committee presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bill and joint resolution:

S. 4533. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Mississippi State Highway Commission to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Pascagoula River at or near Wilkerson's Ferry, Miss.; and Joint resolution granting the consent of Congress to the States of New York and Vermont to enter into an agreement amending the agreement between such States consented to by Congress in Public Resolution No. 9, Seventieth Congress, relating to the creation of the Lake Champlain Bridge Commission.

CHILD LABOR

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I ask consent to introduce a bill for reference to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, and also ask to have printed in the RECORD at this point an explanation of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be received, referred, and the statement printed in the RECORD, as requested by the Senator from Washington.

The bill (S. 4736) to divest goods, wares, merchandise, products, and commodities manufactured, produced, or mined by minors under the age of 18 years of their interstate character in certain cases was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

The statement presented by Mr. SCHWELLENBACH relative to the bill is as follows:

The first governmental recognition of the importance of the child-labor problem in the United States was given by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. In 1825 a committee of the Massachusetts Legislature investigated the educational industrial problem of child labor. It was not until 1836, however, that legislative recognition of the importance of the problem was given through the medium of a legislative enactment. One hundred years ago this year the State of Massachusetts adopted the first child-labor legislation in an act which provided that children under the age of 15 employed in manufacturing establishments had to attend school at least 3 months in the year. Connecticut and Rhode Island were the only other States which attempted to provide legislative regulation until 1850. After this date several other States adopted regulatory laws.

The first Nation-wide recognition of the problem came with the first convention of the American Federation of Labor in 1881, at which was adopted a plank calling for the complete abolition by the States of employment of children under 14 in any capacity. Two years later a committee of the United States Senate heard testimony concerning the relationship between the employment of young boys and girls in department stores and the problem of labor in general. It was not, however, until 1904 that a Nation-wide organization having as its purpose the curtailment of child labor came into existence. That organization was known as the National Child Labor Committee.

The first recognition by the Federal Government of the problem occurred in 1907, when investigation of conditions of child wage earners was conducted by the Bureau of Labor in the Department of Commerce and Labor. The results of that investigation are shown in the United States Bureau of Labor Statistics Bulletin No. 175. It is significant that that report shows very definitely that juvenile delinquency was more frequent among working children than among nonworking children and that the health of working children was definitely impaired as the result of their employment. In 1912 the Federal Children's Bureau was established and directed by Congress to investigate and report upon all matters pertaining to the welfare of children, including all phases of child employment.

As the result of the report of this Bureau and the previous report of the Department of Labor, in September 1916, the Keating-Owen bill was adopted by the Congress of the United States. The bill attempted to prohibit the shipment in interstate commerce of goods produced in mines, quarries, factories, canneries, or workshops in which children were employed in violation of specified age and hours standards. On June 3, 1918, the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Hammer v. Dagenhart (247 U. S. 251) declared this law unconstitutional. The basis of the decision may be found in the last paragraph of the majority opinion, which read:

> In our view the necessary effect of this act is, by means of a prohibition against the movement in interstate commerce of ordinary commercial commodities, to regulate the hours of labor of children in factories and mines within the States a purely State authority. Thus the act in a twofold sense is repugnant to the Constitution. It not only transcends the authority delegated to Congress over commerce, but also exerts a power as to a purely local matter to which the Federal authority does not extend. The far-reaching result of upholding the act cannot be more plainly indicated than by pointing out that if Congress can thus regulate matters entrusted to local authority by prohibition of the movement of commodities in interstate commerce, all freedom of commerce will be at an end, and the power of the States over local matters may be eliminated, and thus our system of government be practically destroyed.

The next effort to control child labor by the Federal Government occurred in 1919 when the act of Congress was passed by which a tax of 10 percent on the annual net profits of any establishment employing child labor in violation of the standards was levied. This was declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court on May 15, 1922, on the ground that its objects were too remote from its avowed object.

In the Sixty-eighth Congress, by action of the House of Representatives on April 26, 1924, and the Senate on June 2, 1924, there was submitted to the legislatures of the several States a constitutional amendment providing as follows:

> SECTION 1. The Congress shall have power to limit, regulate, and prohibit the labor of persons under 18 years of age.
> SEC. 2. The power of the several States is unimpaired by this article except that the operation of State laws shall be suspended to the extent necessary to give effect to legislation enacted by the Congress.

Approximately 12 years have elapsed since the submission of this amendment to the legislatures of the States. During this 12-year period only 24 of the legislatures have ratified the amendment. When we take into consideration the fact that during this 12-year period the Nation has been confronted with the most serious unemployment problem in its history, and that there has been a general recognition of the direct relationship between child labor and the problem of unemployment, and despite that fact we have come no closer to ratification than the securing of the assent of 24 States, it must be recognized that further effort along this line must be viewed as futile for all practical purposes.

During these periods in which the Federal Government has been ineffectually attempting to cope with this problem, various States have also through legislative enactment, attempted to find its solution. Although these State regulations have been to some extent effectual, nevertheless they have been unable to bring about any real solution. The census of 1930 disclosed that children between the ages of 10 and 13 years, inclusive, were gainfully employed in the United States to the number of 235,328. Children 14 and 15 years of age were employed to the number of 431,790. Children 16 and 17 years of age were employed to the number of 1,478,841. This makes a total of 2,145,959. Various estimates up to a number of 3,000,000 are made as to the number of children of the same ages gainfully employed in 1936. It is impossible to judge the accuracy of these estimates. Suffice it to say that the number is somewhere between 2,145,000 and 3,000,000 children who are employed in the United States at the present time. When we take into consideration the fact that some 10,000,000 adults are unemployed, and that the country today and for the last 6 years has faced its most severe crisis as the result of that unemployment, and that the Federal and State and local governments are being compelled to assume unnatural and almost impossible burdens of debt in order to provide those unemployed with the bare necessities of life, it seems that this year, 1936, on the one-hundredth anniversary of the first governmental effort to prevent child labor, the Federal Government should seek some effective method with which to cope with this problem.

I shall not attempt here to discuss in detail the economic and social cost of child labor. There can be made available to the committee to which the bill hereinafter described is referred the result of many studies and investigations that definitely prove the economic and social cost involved as the result of the employment of children. Some of the reports which will be presented to the committee are: Report on Medical and Health Service at West Side Continuation School, by Sophie Rabinoff, department of health, New York City, 1931; the Health of the Working Child, New York State Department of Labor Special Bulletin No. 134, 1924; Report of the Medical Department of the Burroughs Newsboys Foundation for the Year 1931–32; the Report of the United States Children's Bureau, Publication No. 188, 1928; United States Children's Bureau Publication No. 134, 1924; United States Children's Bureau Publication No. 187, 1929; the Report of the White House Conference on Child Health and Protection, with specific reference to the report of the subcommittee on child labor, edited by the Century Co., 1932; the Monthly Bulletin of the Pennsylvania Department of Labor and Industry, volume 19, no. 9, page 10. From these and other reports of investigations it will be definitely established that the employment of children in industry and agriculture results in (1) economic instability, (2) the impairment of health, (3) the increase of illiteracy, (4) the increase of delinquency and crime, (5) a lowering of the standards of industrial and social efficiency.

In the light of the foregoing facts, the question presents itself as to whether or not the Federal Government can overcome the previously recognized barriers of constitutional inhibitions. I believe it can. With that purpose in mind I am today introducing the following bill:

> A bill to divest goods, wares, merchandise, products, and commodities manufactured, produced, or mined by minors under the age of 18 years of their interstate character in certain cases
> Be it enacted, etc.—
> SECTION 1. That it is hereby declared to be the policy of this bill to regulate interstate commerce to the extent of forbidding and punishing the use of such commerce as an agency to promote the spread of the hereinafter-described evils or harm to the people of other States from the State of origin and to enable the States to exercise their right and power by nondiscriminating legislation to prevent such evils or harm to the people of said States. The evils against which this bill is intended to enable the States taking advantage of its provisions to protect themselves and their people are: (1) The economic instability; (2) the impairment of health; (3) the increase of illiteracy; (4) the increase of delinquency and crime; and (5) the lowering of the standards of industrial and social efficiency, that inevitably result from the importation into a State of goods, wares, merchandise, products, and commodities manufactured, produced, or mined under conditions of child labor.

SEC. 2. That all goods, wares, merchandise, products, and commodities manufactured, produced, or mined, wholly or in part, by minors under the age of 18 years, transported into any State or Territory of the United States and remaining therein for use, consumption, sale, or storage, shall upon arrival and delivery in such State or Territory be subject to the operation and effect of the laws of such State or Territory to the same extent and in the same manner as though such goods, wares, merchandise, products, and commodities had been manufactured, produced, or mined in such State or Territory, and shall not be exempt therefrom by reason of being introduced in the original package or otherwise.

SEC. 3. That all goods, wares, merchandise, products, and commodities manufactured, produced, or mined, wholly or in part, by any person, firm, copartnership, or corporation employing in the enterprise of manufacturing, producing, or mining such goods, wares, merchandise, products, and commodities, minors under the age of 18 years, whether such minors shall have been directly employed in the manufacturing, producing, or mining of the particular goods, wares, merchandise, products, and commodities or not, transported into any State or Territory of the United States remaining therein for use, consumption, sale, or storage, shall upon arrival and delivery in such State or Territory be subject to the operation and effect of the laws of such State or Territory to the same extent and in the same manner as though such goods, wares, merchandise, products, and commodities had been manufactured, produced, or mined in such State or Territory, and shall not be exempt therefrom by reason of being introduced in the original package or otherwise.

SEC. 4. That if any portion of this bill be held unconstitutional, such decision shall not affect the remaining provisions of the bill.

At this late date in the session I, of course, have no hope of consideration or adoption of the bill at this session of Congress. I present it now merely that it may become, if possible, the subject of discussion.

In order that we may judge the question of the constitutionality of this proposed act, it is first necessary that we consider the grounds upon which previous acts have been declared unconstitutional. Since the second effort of the Congress was exclusively in the nature of an effort to regulate by means of taxation which bears no relationship to the proposed bill, it is not necessary to discuss the case of Bailey v. Drexel Furniture Co. (259 U. S. 20), in which that act was declared unconstitutional.

However, it is desirable to consider the Keating-Owen bill, passed by Congress in 1916, and the Dagenhart decision, which nullified it.

The question posed by Mr. Justice Day in the Dagenhart case was, "Is it within the authority of Congress in regulating commerce among the States to prohibit the transportation in interstate commerce of manufactured goods the product of a factory in which, within 30 days prior to their removal therefrom, children under the age of 14 have been employed or permitted to work, or children between the ages of 14 and 16 years have been employed or permitted to work more than 8 hours in any day, or more than 6 days in any week, or after the hour of 7 o'clock p. m., or before the hour of 6 o'clock a. m.?" In the opinion in that case we find the following discussion:

But it is insisted that adjudged cases in this Court establish the doctrine that the power to regulate given to Congress incidentally includes the authority to prohibit the movement of ordinary commodities, and, therefore, that the subject is not open for discussion. The cases demonstrate the contrary. They rest upon the character of the particular subjects dealt with and the fact that the scope of governmental authority, State or National, possessed over them is such that the authority to prohibit is as to them but the exertion of the power to regulate.

The first of these cases is Champion v. Ames (188 U. S. 321), the so-called Lottery case, in which it was held that Congress might pass a law having the effect to keep the channels of commerce free from use in the transportation of tickets used in the promotion of lottery schemes. In Hipolite Egg Co. v. United States (220 U. S. 45), this court sustained the power of Congress to pass the Pure Food and Drug Act, which prohibited the introduction into the States by means of interstate commerce of impure foods and drugs. In Hoke v. United States (227 U. S. 308), this court sustained the constitutionality of the so-called White Slave Traffic Act, whereby the transportation of a woman in interstate commerce for the purpose of prostitution was forbidden. In that case we said, having reference to the authority of Congress, under the regulatory power, to protect the channels of interstate commerce:

"If the facility of interstate transportation can be taken away from the demoralization of lotteries, the debasement of obscene literature, the contagion of diseased cattle or persons, the impurity of food and drugs, the like facility can be taken away from the systematic enticement to and the enslavement in prostitution and debauchery of women and, more insistently, of girls."

In Caminetti v. United States (242 U. S. 470), we held that Congress might prohibit the transportation of women in interstate commerce for the purpose of debauchery and kindred purposes. In Clark Distilling Co. v. Western Maryland Ry. Co. (242 U. S. 311), the power of Congress over the transportation of intoxicating liquors was sustained. In the course of the opinion it was said:

"The power conferred is to regulate, and the very terms of the grant would seem to repel the contention that only prohibition of movement in interstate commerce was embraced. And the cogency of this is manifest since if the doctrine were applied to those manifold and important subjects of interstate commerce as to which Congress from the beginning has regulated, not prohibited, the existence of government under the Constitution would be no longer possible."

In each of these instances the use of interstate transportation was necessary to the accomplishment of harmful results. In other words, although the power of interstate transportation was to regulate, that could only be accomplished by prohibiting the use of the facilities of interstate commerce to effect the evil intended.

This element is wanting in the present case. The thing intended to be accomplished by this statute is the denial of the facilities of interstate commerce to those manufacturers in the States who employ children within the prohibited ages. The act in effect does not regulate transportation among the States, but aims to standardize the ages at which children may be employed in mining and manufacturing within the States. The goods shipped are of themselves harmless. The act permits them to be freely shipped after 30 days from the time of their removal from the factory. When offered for shipment, and before transportation begins, the labor of their production is over, and the mere fact that they were intended for interstate commerce transportation does not make their production subject to Federal control under the commerce power.

When the commerce begins is determined, not by the character of the commodity, nor by the intention of the owner to transfer it to another State for sale, nor by his preparation of it for transportation, but by its actual delivery to a common carrier for transportation, or the actual commencement of its transfer to another State.

It is further contended that the authority of Congress may be exerted to control interstate commerce in the shipment of child-made goods because of the effect of the circulation of such goods in other States where the evil of this class of labor has been recognized by local legislation, and the right to thus employ child labor has been more rigorously restrained than in the State of production. In other words, that the unfair competition, thus engendered, may be controlled by closing the channels of interstate commerce to manufacturers in those States where the local laws do not meet what Congress deems to be the more just standard of other States.

There is no power vested in Congress to require the States to exercise their police power so as to prevent possible unfair competition. Many causes may cooperate to give one State, by reason of local laws or conditions, an economic advantage over others. The commerce clause was not intended to give to Congress a general authority to equalize such conditions. In some of the States laws have been passed fixing minimum wages for women; in others the local law regulates the hours of labor of women in various employments. Business done in such States may be at an economic disadvantage when compared with States which have no such regulations; surely this fact does not give Congress the power to deny transportation in interstate commerce to those who carry on business where the hours of labor and the rate of compensation for women have not been fixed by a standard in use in other States and approved by Congress.

In our view, the necessary effect of this act is, by means of a prohibition against the movement in interstate commerce of ordinary commercial commodities, to regulate the hours of labor of children in factories and mines within the States, a purely State authority.

The proposed statute is constitutional and does not come within the purview of the Dagenhart decision for the following reasons:

First. It is fundamentally different from the Keating-Owen bill for the reason that it does not have as its purpose the prevention of the entrance into interstate commerce of goods manufactured or produced by child labor, but rather the protection of the State into which it is proposed that such goods are to be imported. The Supreme Court has repeatedly recognized the right of the Congress to assist in the protection of States by removing from goods shipped into States in violation of State laws their interstate-commerce character.

On August 8, 1890, Congress enacted the so-called Wilson Act, which reads:

That all fermented, distilled, or other intoxicating liquors or liquids transported into any State or Territory, or remaining therein for use, consumption, sale, or storage therein, shall upon arrival in such State or Territory be subject to the operation and effect of the laws of such State or Territory enacted in the exercise of its police powers, to the same extent and in the same manner as though such liquids or liquors had been produced in such State or Territory, and shall not be exempt therefrom by reason of being introduced therein in original packages or otherwise.

Thereafter, one Charles Rahrer, of Topeka, Kans., in violation of the laws of the State of Kansas, caused to be shipped into the State of Kansas from the State of Missouri a carload of intoxicating liquors. In the case of In re Rahrer (140 U. S. 545), the Supreme Court upheld the constitutionality of the Wilson Act and stated:

In surrendering their (the States) own power over external commerce, the States did not secure absolute freedom in such commerce but only the protection from encroachment afforded by confiding its regulation exclusively to Congress.

By the adoption of the Constitution the ability of the several States to act upon the matter solely in accordance with their own will was extinguished, and the legislative will of the General Government substituted. No affirmative guaranty was thereby given to any State of the right to demand as between it and the others what it could not have obtained before; while the object was undoubtedly sought to be attained of preventing commercial regulations partial in their character or contrary to the common interests. And the magnificent growth and prosperity of the country attest the success which has attended the accomplishment of that object. But this furnishes no support to the position that Congress could not, in the exercise of the discretion reposed in it, concluding that the common interests did not require entire freedom in the traffic in ardent spirits, enact the law in question. In so doing, Congress has not attempted to delegate the power to regulate commerce, or to exercise any power reserved to the States, or to grant a power not possessed by the States, or to adopt State laws. It has taken its own course and made its own regulations, applying to these subjects of interstate commerce one common rule, whose uniformity is not affected by variations in State laws in dealing with such property. * * * No reason is perceived why, if Congress chooses to provide that certain designated subjects of interstate commerce shall be governed by a rule which divests them of that character at an earlier period of time than would otherwise be the case, it is not within its competency to do so.

That the shipment or transportation, in any manner or by any means whatsoever, of any spiritous, vinous, malted, fermented, or other intoxicating liquor of any kind from one State, Territory, or District of the United States, or place noncontiguous to but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, into any other State, Territory, or District of the United States, or place noncontiguous to but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, or from any foreign country into any State, Territory, or District of the United States, or place noncontiguous to but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, which said spirituous, vinous, malted, fermented, or other intoxicating liquor is intended, by any person interested therein, to be received, possessed, sold, or in any manner used, either in the original package or otherwise, in violation of any law of such State, Territory, or District of the United States, or place noncontiguous to but subject to the jurisdiction thereof, is hereby prohibited.

The Supreme Court upheld that act in the case of Clark Distilling Co. v. Western Maryland Railway Co. (242 U. S. 311), and stated in reference to it that the purpose of the act—

Was to prevent the immunity characteristic of interstate commerce from being used to permit the receipt of liquor through such commerce in States contrary to their laws, and thus in effect afford a means by subterfuge and indirection to set such laws at naught.

The contention made by distinguished constitutional lawyers that the power of Congress to extend the protection to the States in the enforcement of their own laws by releasing articles of commerce from their interstate character applies only to those articles which are malum per se is answered by the recent decision of the Supreme Court involving convict-labor goods. The Convict Labor Act, passed January 19, 1929, to become effective on January 19, 1934, provided:

That all goods, wares, and merchandise manufactured, produced, or mined, wholly or in part, by convicts or prisoners, except convicts or prisoners on parole or probation, or in any penal and/or reformatory institutions, except commodities manufactured in Federal penal and correctional institutions for use by the Federal Government, transported into any State or Territory of the United States and remaining therein for use, consumption, sale, or storage, shall, upon arrival and delivery in such State or Territory, be subject to the operation and effect of the laws of such State or Territory to the same extent and in the same manner as though such goods, wares, and merchandise had been manufactured, produced, or mined in such State or Territory, and shall not be exempt therefrom by reason of being introduced in the original package or otherwise.

This, it will be seen, involves goods, wares, and merchandise manufactured, produced, or mined wholly or in part by convicts. There is nothing about the goods themselves which is in any way harmful, and there certainly can be no claim that convict-made goods are any more harmful than goods manufactured or produced by children. The State of Ohio has a statute which provides that after January 19, 1934, no goods, wares, or merchandise manufactured or mined wholly or in part in any other State by convicts or prisoners, and so forth, should be sold on the open market of the State of Ohio. The question involved in the case of Whitfield v. Ohio (p. 527 of Supreme Court Law Edition Advance Opinions, vol. 80), decided on March 2, 1936, was the constitutionality of the Federal Convict-Labor Manufactured Article Act. Concerning it the Supreme Court said:

The act is in substance the same as the Wilson Act, with respect to intoxicating liquors, passed August 8, 1890. * * * In effect, both acts provide (the one as construed and the other in terms) that the subject matter of the interstate shipment shall, upon arrival and delivery in any State or Territory, become subject to the operation of the local laws as though produced in such State or Territory; and shall not be exempt therefrom because introduced in original packages. Each statute simply permits the jurisdiction of the State to attach immediately upon delivery, whether the importation remain in the original package or not. In other words, the importation is relieved from the operation of any rule which recognizes the right of sale in the unbroken package without State interference. * * * The view of the State of Ohio that the sale of convict-made goods in competition with the products of free labor is an evil finds ample support in fact and in the similar legislation of a preponderant number of other States. Acts of Congress relating to the subject also recognize the evil. * * * All such legislation, State and Federal, proceeds upon the view that free labor, properly compensated, cannot compete successfully with the enforced and unpaid or underpaid convict labor of the prison. A State basing its legislation upon that conception has the right and power, so far as the Federal Constitution is concerned, by nondiscriminating legislation, to preserve its policy from impairment or defeat by any means appropriate to the end and not inconsistent with that instrument. The proposition is not contested that the Ohio statute would be unassailable if made to take effect after a sale in the original package; and the statute, as it now reads, is equally unassailable, since Congress has provided that the particular subjects of interstate commerce here involved "shall be governed by a rule which divests them of that character at an earlier period of time than would otherwise be the case" (Re Rahrer, supra, 140 U. S. 562, 35 L. ed. 576, 11 S. Ct. 865), namely, upon arrival and delivery. If the power of Congress to remove the impediment to State control presented by the unbroken-package doctrine be limited in anyway (a question which we do not now find it necessary to consider), it is clear that the removal of that impediment in the case of prison-made goods must be upheld for reasons akin to those which moved this Court to sustain the validity of the Wilson Act.

Another opinion having bearing upon this issue is that recently written by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit, in the case of Griswold against the President, on March 30, 1936, which is not yet reported. In that opinion we find:

We cannot agree with appellant's argument that the act (Connally Act of Feb. 22, 1935, ch. 18, 49 Stat. 30) under which the injunction issued is an invasion of State powers, that it is not a true regulation of interstate commerce, but an attempt, by indirection, to control the production and marketing of a natural product of a State. We cannot agree with the subtleties of his view, that the act abdicates the power of Congress over interstate commerce, and delegates it to the States. Nor can we agree with the implications of his argument that contraband oil, that is, oil made forfeit to the State and prohibited by State law from being moved or transported, is a lawful product, and, therefore, beyond the power of Congress to exclude from interstate commerce. These arguments overlook, they disregard, the dominant, the controlling fact that the act, though passed in aid of State purposes and powers, deals with and only with commerce interstate. It takes up where State power ends, and by supplementing State legislation it makes completely effective the general will of the people of the State of Texas, expressed in its conservation laws. Congress has validly done this same thing in connection with the transportation into dry States of intoxicating liquor (Clark Distilling Co. v. Western Maryland R. Co., 242 U. S. 311); into States which prohibit such goods, of goods made by convict labor (Whitfield v. State of Ohio, — U. S. ——). It has done it as to the transportation out of States of birds or wild game killed there contrary to its laws (Bogle v. White, 61 Fed. (2d) 930), and as to motor cars stolen in violation of State laws (Brooks v. U. S., 267 U. S. 432).

Second. The declaration of policy contained in this bill will be amply supported by the legislative record before the committee. Proof can be produced that the sale in a State of goods manufactured by the low-paid child labor in another State, through its competition, results in the use of low-paid child labor in the State seeking to protect itself, which results in economic instability, a detriment to the health, increase of illiteracy, increase in delinquency and crime, and a reduction of the social standards of the people of the State attempting to be protected. Surely this is just as much of a harm to the people of the State into which the child-labor manufactured or produced goods are introduced and sold as was denounced by the Supreme Court in the case of Brooks v. U. S. (267 U. S. 432), in which it upheld the constitutionality of the Dyer Act—the National Motor Vehicle Theft Act. In the opinion in that case, Chief Justice Taft said:

> Congress can certainly regulate interstate commerce to the extent of forbidding and punishing the use of such commerce as an agency to promote immorality, dishonesty, or the spread of any evil or harm to the people of other States from the State of origin. In doing this it is merely exercising the police power, for the benefit of the public, within the field of interstate commerce.

It must be remembered that it is the use of the articles prohibited by congressional act within the States to which they are introduced that is harmful. Their mere transit in interstate commerce is not in itself harmful. The act of Congress excluding diseased stock from interstate commerce, in order to prevent its use in such a way as to thereby injure the stock of other States, upheld by the Supreme Court in the case of Reid v. Colorado (187 U. S. 137), had as its purpose the protection of the stock and the people of the State to which the diseased cattle were shipped. So long as they were in transit they hurt no one.

Lottery tickets, while in transit in interstate commerce, are not harmful. It is only after they are sold to an individual within the State that they become harmful; and yet the act of Congress preventing the use of interstate commerce for the transmission of lottery tickets was upheld by the Supreme Court in the Lottery case (188 U. S. 321). The acts of Congress prohibiting the transportation in interstate commerce of adulterated articles were upheld by the Supreme Court in the case of Hipolite Egg Co. v. United States (220 U. S. 45). These adulterated eggs did not in any way harm anybody while in transit. Even the White Slave Traffic Act, which was upheld by the Supreme Court in the case of Hoke v. United States (227 U. S. 308) and Caminetti v. United States (242 U. S. 470), had a similar result. Prostitutes while in transit from one State to another are in most instances not harming anybody. It is only when they reach the State for which they are destined and engage in their immoral purposes that the evil effect results; but the right of Congress to prevent their being transported from one State to another has been repeatedly upheld. Congress' right to prohibit the importation of moving pictures of prize fights was upheld in the case of Weber v. Freed (239 U. S. 325), not because the pictures harmed anybody in interstate commerce but because of the demoralizing effect of such exhibitions in the State of destination.

I recognize that this act must necessarily be supplemented by State statutes. However, of the 24 States, the legislatures of which have ratified the child-labor amendment, it seems reasonable to presume that legislative enactment protecting the people of the State, both the employers and the employees, both capital and labor, from the effect of competition from goods manufactured or produced by children, would be reasonably sure of enactment. It would not require many of the States to secure the desired result. If the State of New York alone would take advantage of this statute and remove the market of its 13,000,000 people from producers or manufacturers in States employing child labor, the problem would be very quickly solved. If any one of the populous States should take advantage of this enactment, and since it would be to such a great advantage of all classes within any State that already had child-labor legislation to take advantage of this statute, it seems reasonably certain that it would only be a matter of a few years until it would be possible to eradicate the child-labor evil in the United States. When we consider that the first legislative recognition of the problem occurred 100 years ago, in 1836, and that after 100 years' effort we still find between 2,000,000 and 3,000,000 children employed in this country, the possibility of securing its solution within a period of 2 or 3 years certainly makes the enactment of this law worth while.

PAYMENTS UNDER SOIL CONSERVATION AND DOMESTIC ALLOTMENT ACT

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill amending the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, and that the bill be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. I also request that there be published in the RECORD a letter from the President of the United States, and that together with the letter the bill may be published in full as part of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill (S. 4740) to provide a graduated scale of reduction of payments under section 8 of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A bill to provide a graduated scale of reduction of payments under section 8 of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act

Be it enacted, etc., That section 8 of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, approved February 29, 1936, is amended by adding a new subsection, as follows:

"(d) Any payment that would otherwise be made to any producer pursuant to the terms of this section shall be reduced as follows:

"A total reduction equal to the sum of (a) 25 percent of that portion of the payment, that would otherwise be made, which is included within the interval of $2,000 to $10,000; (b) 50 percent of that portion of the payment, that would otherwise be made, which is in excess of $10,000."

The letter from the President of the United States is as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, June 1, 1936.

Hon. JOSEPH C. O'MAHONEY,
The United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR O'MAHONEY: In connection with the proposed legislation with respect to sugar, which you and Congressman JONES are sponsoring, I believe that the principle of graduated payments might well be incorporated. Large corporate organizations, whether in industry or agriculture, in the past have obtained from the Government certain advantages which oftentimes have enabled them to profit to an unusual extent. This situation was recognized to some extent last year when the graduated income tax was applied to corporations, and I would ask your most earnest consideration of the advisability of applying the same principle to the sugar payments by means of an amendment to Senate Joint Resolution 278 which would provide for payments at rates for large operating units lower than those applicable to family-size farms.

I trust it will be possible to incorporate this principle in the sugar legislation and that steps may be taken to consider the advisability of applying the same principle to payments under the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act.

Very sincerely yours,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

INTERNAL-REVENUE TAXATION—AMENDMENTS

Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. BARBOUR, Mr. POPE, and Mr. SHIPSTEAD each submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by them, respectively, to the bill (H. R. 12395) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes, which were severally ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

Mr. BLACK and Mr. LA FOLLETTE jointly submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them to the bill (H. R. 12395) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE—AMENDMENT

Mr. STEIWER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the proposed amendments of Mr. COPELAND, Mr. GUFFEY, and Mr. GIBSON to the bill (H. R. 8555) to develop a strong American merchant marine, to promote the commerce of the United States, to aid national defense, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

WORKS PROGRESS ADMINISTRATION IN PENNSYLVANIA

Mr. DAVIS submitted a resolution (S. Res. 314), which was ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Whereas serious charges have been made by Members of this body and by newspapers reflecting upon the administration and operation of the Works Progress Administration in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania; and

Whereas all official information on this subject has been denied to the General Assembly of Pennsylvania: Be it

Resolved, That the Director of the Works Progress Administration transmit to the Secretary of the Senate within 15 days after the adoption of this resolution all records relating to the personnel of the Works Progress Administration in Pennsylvania, together with all disbursements on Works Progress projects in Pennsylvania, including the names and addresses, amounts of compensation, and personnel employed by the Works Progress Administration in Pennsylvania, and the names and addresses of all persons receiving employment under the Works Progress Administration.

THE SIGNIFICANCE OF AGRICULTURAL IMPORTS (S. DOC. NO. 263)

On motion by Mr. MURPHY, a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, addressed to Mr. MURPHY, together with a statement prepared by the Department of Agriculture with regard to the causes and the significance of the recent increase in agricultural imports into the United States, was ordered to be printed, with an illustration, as a document.

CORPORATE REORGANIZATIONS UNDER BANKRUPTCY LAW

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, yesterday I objected to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8940) to amend an act entitled "An act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States, approved July 1, 1898, and acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto." I withdrew my objection with the understanding that if today I desired to have the vote by which the bill was passed reconsidered, that could be done. I have discussed the matter with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], and now, in accordance with the agreement, I ask unanimous consent that the action which was taken upon the bill yesterday be reconsidered.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, without interposing an objection, I merely desire to say that the Committee on the Judiciary, which had this matter under consideration, made every effort possible to report the bill in a form acceptable to the executive departments and independent commissions which are interested in pending suits. The committee conferred with representatives of the Department of Justice, of the Treasury Department, and of the Securities Exchange Commission, and the representatives of all these bodies seemed to agree to the form in which the report was prepared.

In the absence of the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS], who was the chairman of the subcommittee, I held a final conference with a member of the Securities Exchange Commission, and, at his suggestion, eliminated a portion of the report which had been prepared by the senior Senator from Indiana, and which had been left in my custody with the understanding that I could do anything necessary to bring the measure into conformity with the ideas of the independent commissions and the departments. When the report was finally submitted it was with the understanding upon the part of the committee that a complete agreement had been reached.

Of course, I shall not object to the reconsideration. I desire to say, however, that there are great benefits to many citizens of the United States contained in the measure as it was reported by the Committee on the Judiciary. The only difficulty seems to be the fear on the part of some that, as it was finally reported, the bill might result in adversely affecting a certain suit which is pending in the Federal courts.

No member of the Committee on the Judiciary and no member of the subcommittee which had charge of this proposed legislation desires to do anything which would in any manner affect that suit, but there was a feeling that it would be a pity if the beneficial effects of the proposed legislation should be sacrificed because of the insubstantial fear that there would be some adverse effect on pending litigation. The committee felt that there would be no adverse effect, but since it has seemed to be the opinion of the Securities Exchange Commission that there would be we have no objection to reconsideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Washington that the vote by which House bill 8940 was passed yesterday be reconsidered and that the bill be restored to the calendar? The Chair hears none, the vote is reconsidered, and the bill will be placed on the calendar.

FUNDAMENTALS OF PUBLIC WELFARE—ADDRESS BY SENATOR GORE

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD an address on Fundamentals of Public Welfare by Hon. THOMAS P. GORE, one of our colleagues. The address was made at the First Triennial Convention of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, held at Detroit, Mich., June 4–12, 1935.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

There are a few fundamental principles underlying and controlling all systems of welfare. There are a few elemental forces which dominate and control all plans and all systems of relief and of welfare. There are certain fundamental laws and forces in the economic, the social, and the moral world, almost as universal and almost as unvarying as the laws and forces of the physical universe itself. You see the balloon go up and the stone come down. They pass each other in transit. They are going in opposite directions. They are behaving in opposite ways. And yet they are obeying the same universal law of nature, the law of gravity.

There is no appearance in all nature more conspicuous than the rising and setting of the sun, and yet even that is an illusion. There are also illusions in the economic, social, and moral world, as in the physical world, which we should always keep clear in our minds.

I wish at this point, even at the risk of being pedantic, to give you my definition of statesmanship. Statesmanship consists in foreseeing. Not merely see first effects, but foreseeing final effects Statesmanship consists in computing not primary reactions alone but secondary reactions. It is not the first effect, it is not the primary reaction; it is the final, finished, secondary reaction that determines the character of your law, determines its wisdom or its unwisdom.

Let me illustrate. The Anti-Saloon League waged a crusade for years in favor of the eighteenth amendment, knowing that the first or primary effect would be the closing of the saloons, a consummation which we all desired. Anyone could foresee that reaction or that result, but I am not certain that many of us anticipated and foresaw some of the ultimate effects, some of the secondary reactions which led the people of this country to do an unprecedented thing, to repeal an amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

It is important in considering or adopting any system of welfare or relief to consider the secondary reactions as well as the primary reactions. Of course, in a system of relief the first effect would be to feed the hungry and to clothe the naked, ends desirable in themselves. Some might justify any means looking toward those ends. Such a conclusion might not be well justified. One of the first lessons learned in human experience, in the administration of charity, was that unless administered with prudence and with care, it might injure the beneficiaries. In considering secondary results, reactions, I was impressed with the remark made by the lady who just preceded me. All human conduct, human action, human behavior, whether on the part of the individual or the group, is governed by two great laws or forces, heredity and environment. The interaction of these forces upon each other determines the conduct of the individual, the group, the Nation, and the race, including, of course, in environment, training and education.

The only way to effectuate progress is so to change the interaction between these two forces as to produce the desired change upon the conduct of the individual or the group. You cannot change heredity in the case of any living individual or generation or group. That is a fixed factor; that is invariable, so you must limit your changes to environment, situations, circumstances, surroundings, education, and training. They alone are subject to change, and, therefore, all your changes must be limited to those factors or to the great factor of environment. Often we are disappointed in the results flowing from changed environments. Sometimes they disappoint our hopes. One of the most tragic chapters in the history of human relations is the disappointed hopes which have followed legislation actuated by the highest purpose. You cannot always tell what will be the result of the changes which you effect.

Let me add at this point that good intentions are not enough. If good intentions were sufficient to guarantee good results, then the task were easy and the problem were solved. But the mother in India who casts a babe in her arms into the Ganges in worship of the sacred crocodile has been led by the most pious intentions. The mothers of ancient Carthage who burned their first born upon the flaming altars of Moloch were inspired by the most devoted and consecrated intentions. And yet it was pretty hard on the infant, and it did but little to propitiate the favor of an insensate god. When I was in Carthage a few years ago I saw a number of little stone caskets that were used to bury the ashes of infants who were burned upon the altars of Moloch. It taught me a tragic lesson—how far training and education can be made to react upon the most sacred sentiments of the human heart. When the mother's love for her child, the finest thing beneath the sun, can be so awed as to induce the mother to sacrifice her child to her god, it teaches a terrific and tragic lesson as to the extent of the influence of training and education upon human behavior. The mother's instinct is to preserve and defend the child, for at every birth the mother goes down to the gates of death. But I guess if we understood you women better we would not like you so well. We never know exactly what you are going to do.

You take the woman with all her paints and powders and curls and frills and furbelows, fainting at the sight of human blood, and yet when a battalion of women are once engaged in battle they will go farther and stay longer than men themselves. That is the reason the battalions of death are made up of women. When overpowered in battle men will retreat if they can and surrender if they must. Women will not. They will neither surrender nor retreat. They die in their tracks. When you once get a woman into a quarrel, she will stay in and pitch, if you will allow a western expression.

But I think there is a deep psychological truth in what I have said. It is the mother's instinct to hover, to defend, and to die for her young.

Hers not to reason why,
Hers but to do and die.

Yet the illustration about the Carthaginian women teaches you and me a lesson in regard to the training and effect of education. Let's consult the truths of history and see what experience can teach us. For my own part, I have no better guide than the lamp of experience. Take Athens in the day of her splendor, in the age of Pericles, the most brilliant period of Grecian history, and, as some say, the most brilliant in human history. And yet Pericles, with all his statesmanship, sowed the seed of death. He it was who began the practice of feeding the people of Athens out of the public treasury. The first reaction was obvious, jubilant, and contented, and rejoicing. But what was the second, the final reaction? I shall not answer that question. I shall let Plato answer it, who, writing 100 years later, said that this policy on the part of Pericles had converted the people of Athens into an idle, loitering, self-respectless set of idlers and gossip mongers. That is the verdict accorded by the great Greek philosopher himself, that it had ruined the character of the Athenian people.

I know that you women have often wondered why it was that the people of Athens ostracized their greatest statesman and their greatest general, the saviors of Athens. Under the laws of Athens when a man was ostracized his estate was confiscated and the proceeds put in the public treasury; and the demagogues of Athens, urging the people to ostracize the saviors of Athens, would make the point that unless they did so there would be no money in the treasury at the next distribution day. It spoiled the souls of the Athenian people, and thus perished the glory that was Greece.

What about Rome? The rugged Roman character, the rugged Roman virtues carried the Roman eagles from the rising to the setting sun. About 120 years before Christ the Gracchi began the policy of selling corn to the people of Rome at less than market price. The first reaction, of course, was plain. One of the secondary reactions was the ruin of the farmers of Italy, who could not meet the state competition. Finally they gave corn to the people of Athens. The politicians urged them on until, instead of selling it at less than the market price, corn was given free to the people of Rome. Others followed with free olive oil, free pork, free wine, free shows, and free baths; and everything was free except the people themselves; and thus perished the soul of the Roman people, and with their soul perished their liberties, their institutions, and the Roman Republic itself—a secondary reaction.

What lesson has England to teach America? Her experience with pauperism began nearly 600 years ago, after the black plague, the black death, about the middle of the fourteenth century. The first general statutes were enacted under the reign of Henry VIII, and then Queen Elizabeth, building a broad and solid foundation, which reformed the systems and which cured the evils which had grown up under the system. They separated pauperism into voluntary and involuntary pauperism, and they characterized the voluntary pauper as sturdy vagabonds, valiant beggars, able-bodied beggars; and Queen Elizabeth, like Augustus of Rome, was one of the greatest rulers the world has known. Both had a great policy of letting problems solve themselves.

The act of Queen Elizabeth worked admirably until the middle of the eighteenth century, when politicians and others began to extend indulgences to the inmates of the workhouses, to the beneficiaries of the poor laws. England made every mistake probably that could be made, tried every expedient, spoiled the characters of those she was seeking to serve and relieve, destroyed the most sacred sentiments of the human heart. Premiums were set on the unmarried mother, agriculture was brought to the verge of ruin, industry was brought to the verge of ruin; and in a famous report made in 1833 it was said that at that time beneficiaries of the poor laws and the expense cast upon the people of England was absorbing almost the entire national income and had brought the Kingdom itself to the very brink of bankruptcy. It was well intended, but the secondary reactions were undesirable, as they had apparently been unanticipated.

Now let us turn to another picture. When the American pioneer set foot upon this western continent, when the Pilgrim Fathers landed in New England, when they landed in Virginia, what equipment brought they along? Nothing but their strong hands, their clear heads and their stout hearts, and with their primitive implements the pioneers of America felled the forests, bridged the rivers, scaled the mountains, builded for themselves a nest by the side of the eagle's, carried our civilization, the torch of civilization, from the eastern to the western sea, conquering all obstacles, subduing all difficulties, learning how to conquer through adversity and hardship, and, like Caesar, they could well say they came, they saw, they conquered. They obeyed the iron law of survival, adapt or die. And they adapted themselves to their environment, their surroundings, their conditions, and they conquered their destiny.

What virtues were developed in this struggle? They were fortitude, self-help, self-denial, self-reliance, self-respect. I am not sure that too much security is consistent with the struggle for existence. The virtues which they developed made them great. Those virtues made America great. And in my judgment those virtues alone will keep America great. I know it is said that conditions have changed, that environment is different. That is true. I know it is said that we have new problems, calling for new solutions. That is undoubtedly true. But does that mean that the new problems and the new solutions call for a different spirit than that which made America great?

I appreciated your applause, because I want you women, and it is largely in your hands, to inculcate these virtues as the basis of our greatness in the past and of our greatness in the future. So far as I am concerned, I am not willing to admit that America is a mistake.

There is one other point. I might refer to it as the youth problem, whether we like the term or not. I have sometimes wondered about the fate and the future of the youth of this day and the youth of the morrow. I sometimes wonder whether we keep its interest and its destiny as clear in our sight as we should. I sometimes wonder if we are casting burdens upon youth that it will be unable to bear. I sometimes wonder if we are assuming that the youth of this day and the morrow will have no problems of their own, calling for extra exertion and extraordinary drafts upon their resources. I sometimes wonder whether we are depleting the estate of posterity and leaving it a patrimony that is not only impaired but that is incumbered. I sometimes wonder whether we are not forging chains for youth which it will be obliged to bear or obliged to break.

Their destiny is largely in your hands. If you can preserve in them the character and the virtue of our forefathers, and if you can preserve or restore opportunity unto youth, then you have discharged the highest duty and fulfilled the most solemn responsibility resting upon those of the present day, unto the men and the women of the morrow.

This has been the land of opportunity in the past. It should be the land of opportunity in the future. And I hope the evil day will never come in America when every gate shall be barred with gold and shall open but to golden keys. If you preserve the character and the virtues of youth and if you keep the door of opportunity open unto them, I doubt not that they will with their strong hands, their clear heads, and their stout hearts, work out their own destiny and prove themselves worthy and lineal descendants of the mighty men who made our majestic past, men who were not afraid of difficulties, men who did not shrink from obstacles, men who were not discouraged by dangers, men who dallied with danger as the she tiger fondles her young. Bring such a tribe into the world, maintain their character and their soul and their opportunities, and I believe they will prove themselves fit to follow those who have gone before us.

We have received our institutions as an inheritance from our fathers, baptized with the blood of our fathers, baptized and consecrated with the tears of our mothers, but we have received these institutions in trust, charged with a solemn responsibility to pass them on to those who come after. And our own fitness must be judged by the character with which we fulfill that solemn obligation.

You know, I belong to the greatest debating society on the globe, and to me the most extraordinary exhibition of feminine audacity was an effort to limit me to 30 minutes, but I am limited.

In parting, let me say, adhere to the principles of the fathers, preserve the institutions of the fathers, cherish the virtues of the fathers, and I would be willing to underwrite the future, the destiny of America. Forsake those principles, forsake those institutions, forsake those virtues, then all is lost. Let us say constantly, "Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet, lest we forget, lest we forget." Let us not forget to discharge our duty and preserve the legacy which we have received at the hands of our fathers. Let us never say, "God of our fathers, smite us not. We have forgot! We have forgot!"

Again, adhering to these principles, preserving these institutions, perpetuating these virtues, we can say with confidence, "The morrow cometh", and I doubt not that all the glories of the past will be equaled, if not eclipsed, by the glories that are to come.

MONEY, PRICES, AND PROSPERITY—ADDRESS BY SENATOR THOMAS OF OKLAHOMA

Mr. NYE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS]. The address was delivered at a State-wide meeting held in Des Moines, Iowa, and broadcast over the radio, Sunday, May 24, 1936.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

It is a pleasure to be in Iowa, one of the great agricultural, industrial, and influential States of the Union. It is a privilege to address a State-wide meeting of the members of the National Union for Social Justice.

Although direct from Washington, I do not come to you as a Senator of the United States. I was born on a backwoods farm in Indiana and homesteaded a claim in Oklahoma; hence, I come to talk to you about social justice from the standpoint of a westerner. However, the things which I shall say must not be interpreted as either sectional, racial, or political. If I came from any other State or from any other section of the country my views would be the same.

Over a period of years what has been or may be good for the North has been and will likewise be good for the South; and what has been or may be good for the West has been and will likewise be good for the East. Irrespective of location, or race, or creed, or party, this mighty people—now 130,000,000 strong—must go forward to greater heights, or hesitate, falter, and decline, to join the nations which were born and lived and died.

This Nation, our country, is scarcely 147 years of age; yet today we are the strongest, the richest, and the most influential, and have one of the oldest and the best governments in the world.

In the past our Government was exactly what our fathers made it. It is today precisely what we ourselves have builded. Tomorrow it will be exactly what our children ordain and construct. Our goal today should be to develop, perfect, and leave a richer, stronger, and more influential country and Nation than the one we entered.

Such is the goal of social justice.

Today I come to talk to you about the most important questions pending before the people—money, prices, and prosperity.

Money controls prices and prices control prosperity; hence, money is the foundation, the cornerstone and the keystone of progress, prosperity, and civilization.

During recent years, in order to stimulate and hasten the return of prosperity, some of us at Washington and at other points have been striving to secure more business, more employment, higher wages, and higher prices.

Progress and prosperity depend upon prices; prices depend upon money; and the extent of prosperity and the level of prices depend upon the amount of money in circulation.

Let me define money.

In times past money was limited to gold, silver, or copper metal, stamped in the form of coins. Later the term "money" was expanded to include not only metal coins but paper currency as well.

Today we define anything as money that has been, by law, declared to be legal tender for the payment of taxes, interest, duties, and debts.

Formerly, by money we meant only gold, silver, and copper coins. Today, by money we mean legal-tender currency, and by currency we mean gold coin, silver coin, nickel or copper coin, and paper money.

By currency I do not mean bank credit. Currency is money. Bank credit is only a substitute for money.

While bank credit serves as a medium of exchange and may be converted into money, bank credit is not money.

Currency as herein defined measures prices. Bank credit or substitute money does not measure prices. The number of currency dollars in circulation, in the main, controls the value of the dollar. An increase in the number of currency dollars in circulation means increasing the supply of price-measuring money units.

The same economic law which controls and governs the value of wheat and corn and cotton likewise controls and governs the value of money. When any commodity is plentiful, such commodity is cheap; likewise, when dollars are plentiful, dollars are cheap; and when dollars are cheap, prices are high.

On the other hand, when dollars are scare, dollars are high; and when dollars are high, prices are cheap.

The value of money depends upon the number of dollars in circulation. Scarce money means high-valued dollars, and high-valued dollars mean unemployment, low wages, low prices, panic, and depression. Plentiful money means cheap money, and cheap money means employment, high wages, high prices, progress, and prosperity.

If there be those who disagree with the economic principles just stated, then I must leave them to answer, not me but the master financial minds of the thousands of years of recorded history.

Let me call a few witnesses, famous monetary economists of the ancient and modern world, to sustain my position.

Ricardo says: "The value of money is determined by the amount existing."

Ruffner says: "Doubling the amount of money tends to double prices." Again he says: "The price level will tend to rise in proportion to the increase in the money supply."

Taussig says: "Double the amount of money, and, other things being equal, prices will be twice as high as before and the value of money one-half. Halve the quantity of money, and, other things being equal, prices will be one-half what they were before and the value of money double."

Gustav Cassel, perhaps the greatest living authority on money, says that the value of money depends upon its supply and the demand therefor.

In harmony with these quotations, let me call your attention to the following facts:

In Andrew Jackson's day money was plentiful, prices were high, and prosperity was enjoyed by all.

Following the Civil War greenbacks or United States notes were plentiful, prices were high, prosperity returned, and reconstruction was quickly accomplished.

During and after the World War money was plentiful, prices were high, work was plentiful, wages were good, and America became the leading creditor nation of the world.

History sustains the contention that plentiful money makes good prices, and good prices make good times and general prosperity. Likewise, scarce money makes low prices, and low prices make hard times, panics, and depressions.

In 1873, through the demonetization of silver, one-half the basic money of our country was struck down and discredited. The destruction of silver, by closing the mints for its coinage, brought about a scarcity of money, causing a fall in prices, deflation, and depression. The demand for more money and higher prices led to the Bryan free-silver campaign in 1896.

In 1921 prices were lowered by the process of taking money out of circulation. Beginning on March 4, 1921, and lasting for 18 months, the party in power deliberately made money scarce by taking out of circulation over $100,000,000 per month.

Thereafter, in less than 2 years' time, wheat fell in price from $2.50 to $1 per bushel, cotton fell from 40 to 20 cents per pound, and other prices were reduced in proportion. This deflation of our currency ruined agriculture first; then livestock, lumber, and mining industries followed the decline. Still later, smaller towns and cities suffered, and with one-half the people impoverished the 1929 crash came.

In 1930 to 1933 money was scarce—so scarce and so valuable that prices were the lowest in generations.

In 1933 the administration at Washington proceeded to raise prices by lowering the value of the dollar. The value of the dollar in foreign exchange was lowered by reducing the gold content of such dollar. The value of the domestic dollar was and is being reduced through a planned and orderly increase of Federal Reserve notes and a wider use of silver.

The contraction of the currency just after the World War reduced prices. The expansion of the currency now is increasing prices.

By expansion of the currency I mean a planned, orderly, and controlled increase in the number of currency dollars in circulation. Domestically, our currency dollars are neither based upon nor redeemable in gold; hence such dollars are commodity dollars. Not being based upon gold, the value of such dollars depends upon the number placed in circulation.

The National Union for Social Justice demands that the Congress exercise its constitutional power "to coin money and to regulate the value thereof." The Congress has the right and power to increase or decrease the amount of money in circulation; hence has the right and power, at will, to increase or decrease the general price level, which includes commodity prices and wages.

This power is constitutional.

The National Union for Social Justice demands that prices and wages be increased through an absolutely safe and orderly expansion of the currency.

How may this be accomplished?

Under existing law the Federal Reserve System may expand the currency at will through the policy of open-market operations. Under this policy the Federal Reserve banks may enter the open market and purchase bonds and pay for such bonds with Federal Reserve notes. This policy places new money in circulation and thereby directly expands the currency.

Under existing law the President has the right and power to issue as much as $3,000,000,000 of United States notes and to pay such notes into circulation through the purchase of outstanding interest-bearing Government bonds and obligations.

Under existing law the President has the right and power to issue currency against all silver in the Treasury at the monetary value of such silver or at $1.29 per ounce.

Today our Government owns approximately 2,000,000,000 ounces of silver. This silver embraces silver bullion and coined dollars, halves, quarters, and dimes. The monetary value of such silver is $2,580,000,000. Out of this silver we have coined and have in circulation the sum of $367,000,000. Against the remainder we have issued and placed in circulation silver certificates in the sum of $1,104,000,000; hence, we have surplus silver in our Treasury which we could coin or against which we could issue silver certificates in the sum of over $1,100,000,000.

Under existing law the President has the right and power to purchase additional silver and to issue new currency against such metal to the extent of over $800,000,000.

In addition to our silver, we have in our Treasury some $10,375,000,000 in gold. Although we have this vast gold and silver horde, we have issued currency of all kinds to the amount of only $5,888,000,000; hence, we have ample gold and silver buried and guarded, against which we could issue over $6,000,000,000 of new currency and each new dollar would be backed by 100 cents of gold and silver.

It is not and cannot be denied that we have ample gold and silver to back and support additional currency—dollar for dollar—which could be placed in circulation through the payment of maturing obligations until the general price level is raised to that point which will permit the farmers to secure cost of production plus a reasonable profit and which will permit labor to secure a living wage through humane hours of toil.

Under existing law your officials at Washington have ample power to raise prices through a safe and orderly expansion of the currency. If this program should be inaugurated, and if money should become too plentiful and prices should rise too high, the Federal Reserve System now holds billions of bonds which could be sold, and thereby any amount of currency may be removed at will from circulation.

Economic laws are as immutable as are the laws of gravity. Expanding the currency will cheapen the value of the dollar.

Cheaper dollars mean higher prices. Higher prices mean more profits, higher wages, and increased prosperity.

Prices for raw materials and basic American products, while higher than 3 years ago, still are too low to enable producers to pay costs of production and have left a reasonable margin of profit. Until legitimate business shows a reasonable profit, governmental budgets cannot be balanced, public borrowing must continue, banks dare not expand their credit, industry must continue to seek Federal loans, and the unemployed must continue to be supported by the Government.

The general price level must be raised sufficiently to permit producers, wage earners, and industry to survive and make reasonable profits. The price level must be raised in order that profits may be increased.

Personal income and corporation taxes are levied against profits; hence, profits must be increased in order to make possible the collection of sufficient taxes to balance the Budget. The price level must be raised in order to make it possible for banks to renew the policy and practice of making commercial loans. The price level must be raised prior to any substantial reduction in public relief spending and most certainly before we can stop such spending altogether. The price level must be raised before we can possibly have a return of general and permanent prosperity.

If there be those who disagree with our demand for a higher general price level, then I would call attention to the following facts:

Today our total tax burden—National, State, county, and city—is some $12,000,000,000 per year. Our total massed interest burden is another $10,000,000,000 annually, and our total massed debt burden, public and private, is estimated to be $250,000,000,000. It is now estimated that by 1937 our total Federal debt will reach $35,000,000,000. As taxes, interest, and debts increase, the amount of money available to the people must likewise be increased. As taxes, interest, and debts go up, the price level must likewise go up.

To be able to pay more taxes, interest, and debts, the people must earn and secure more dollars. Higher prices in effect reduce taxes, interest, and debts, while lower prices in effect increase such fixed overhead charges.

Let me illustrate:

In 1932 prices were so low that a farmer in my State of Oklahoma, having $100 taxes to pay, had to raise and sell four bales of cotton, or 400 bushels of wheat, or 600 bushels of corn to settle with the tax gatherer. Today, with higher prices, he can pay the same tax bill with less than two bales of cotton, or with approximately 100 bushels of wheat, or with 175 bushels of corn.

When prices are increased to a reasonable and necessary level farmers may pay $100 in taxes, or interest or debts, with one bale of cotton, or with 75 bushels of wheat, or with 100 bushels of corn.

So long as we are off the gold standard domestically, and our currency is not redeemable in gold, in order to raise the general price level the currency must be expanded. The price level controls the cost of living on the one hand and controls the amount of income on the other. A high price level means high prices and a high income, and a low price level means low prices and a low income—if an income at all.

Again I say: Money governs prices, and prices govern prosperity.

From the beginning of the depression we have demanded that the deflation be checked through an expansion of the currency. We are frequently asked as to the amount of new money necessary to be placed in circulation to restore a necessary, reasonable, and profitable price level. No one could answer such a question accurately, and any answer would be only a guess.

During the War between the States the northern Government issued and placed in circulation less than $500,000,000 of United States notes, and such increase in the amount of money in circulation practically doubled prices of commodities.

In 1921 and 1922 some $1,800,000,000 of real money was taken out of circulation and the result was a fall of 50 percent in prices. At this time I do not think it would require so large a sum to accomplish the purpose we have in mind, such purpose being the raising of the general price level sufficiently to enable the people to make profits with which to pay their taxes, interest, and debts, and to have some surplus buying power with which to secure the necessities and, in addition, some of the luxuries of our boasted civilization.

In Washington we hear the demand made that industry must proceed at once to provide jobs for the unemployed.

What is the answer to this demand?

In order for industry to increase production and expand, there must be a demand at profitable prices for the products of industry. With a low general price level industry cannot produce at a profit. With a low general price level the consuming public does not and cannot have sufficient buying power to permit of the consumption of the products of industry.

The farmers of the Nation, collectively, make up our largest single group of consumers, and until the general price level is raised so that they may secure more than cost of production, no demand may or can be expected from them for the goods produced by the factories of the country.

With a higher general price level some 30,000,000 farmers would have purchasing power, and with such power the products of industry would soon come into demand. An increased farmer demand for the products of industry would result immediately in an increased demand for raw materials with which to fabricate finished products. Such a demand would call for increased employment of labor in the mines, forests, and factories.

In addition, transportation would be stimulated, wholesale and retail merchants would resume activity, banks would have added business, and the public generally would share in the new prosperity.

Neither industry, farmers, nor labor have the power to regulate the value of the dollar and the consequent control of the price level. This power rests with the Congress of the United States. The answer to the unemployment question is that the price level must be raised before industry can possibly absorb any considerable percent of the unemployed.

In Washington we hear demands that the banks proceed at once to the making of commercial loans.

What is the answer to this demand?

To date the banks have been forced to purchase and absorb the bonds necessary to finance the expenses of the Government, hence their loanable funds have found investment in low-yield Government bonds. Because of the low general price level banks have not been justified in loaning other peoples' money on security which could not show or make reasonable profits. Until the price level is raised banks will not and cannot resume the practice of making commercial loans.

Under the present policy our banks are forced to buy our bonds and to live from the meager income derived from such bonds. Today banks are living on the interest received from their holdings of Government bonds; hence, in effect, the failure of official Washington to raise the price level has forced the banks of the country to live upon the Government—in effect, to go upon the dole, and they must remain on the dole until the price level is raised to that point which will permit their depositors and borrowers, farmers and industry, to produce at a reasonable profit.

At Washington we hear the demand that the Budget be balanced immediately.

What is the answer to this demand?

Money to balance the Budget must come from taxes. Taxes, to be sound, must come from profits; hence the Budget cannot possibly be balanced until the people and industry begin to make profits, and such profits cannot be made until the general price level is raised.

In conclusion, using the gold and silver in our Treasury as the basis for our argument and position, those who seek to refute the economic principles controlling the value of money, prices, and prosperity, as outlined today, must argue with the history of nations.

If it is contended that the expansion of the currency will not raise prices, then why oppose the policy?

If it is contended that prices can be raised by an expansion of bank credit, then in 1930, when bank credit was inflated to the highest point in history, why did we not have correspondingly higher prices?

If it is contended that the general price level is now high enough, then why are budgets still unbalanced, why are banks not making loans, and why do we yet have millions of unemployed and other millions on public relief?

We have tried every form of relief save following through with the monetary adjustment program. Insofar as we have gone, satisfactory results have been secured. Only a short section of the road remains to be traveled.

The money question is primarily a domestic problem. However, national and international stabilization of currencies must precede permanent world-wide prosperity and world economic stability.

However, before we are ready to consider permanent international stabilization of the dollar in foreign exchange, we must regulate and adjust the value of such dollar so as to serve best our own domestic economy.

The policy suggested and advocated here today is not in the interest of any one State, group of States, or section of the country. I deny that the program of the National Union for Social Justice is a class or sectional program. It is not a program for the West and against the East; neither is it a program for the debtor class as against the creditor class.

In the Senate of the United States I represent a State which produces wheat and corn and cotton—livestock, oil, and coal—but as I understand the relationship between money, prices, and prosperity—if I should come from the centers of great wealth and if my constituency was made up solely of millionaires, and if my millionaire constituents should have all their wealth invested in bonds, notes, and mortgages, I would not change my position on the money question.

It is obvious to me and should be to the holders of fixed investments that in order for them to collect their interest and principal when due, conditions must be such that the debtors must be able to pay; and in order for the debtors to be able to pay, the price level must be sufficiently high to permit farmers, merchants, wage earners, and industry to produce, transport, and distribute at a profit. Any other viewpoint or policy, if persisted in and followed, will result in defaults, repudiation, and disaster.

The fight already made has been a winning fight. Already what was thought by some as impossible of accomplishment has been achieved. Already almost unbelievable reforms have been made.

Briefly, let me enumerate a few of these changes, reforms, and accomplishments.

Formerly all things financial were managed and controlled in New York. Today such management and control has been transferred to Washington—the Capital of the United States.

Today we are temporarily, at least, off the gold standard, and we will never return to such a monetary standard until and when the other major nations of the world agree to an equitable, fair, and just world-wide stabilization of currencies.

Our program has already cheapened the dollar and as the result the price level has been raised. Had the dollar not been cheapened the prices today would be the prices of 3 years ago.

What would be the condition of Iowa today if corn were selling for 10 cents per bushel?

What would be the condition of the Northwest today if wheat were selling for 25 cents per bushel?

What would be the condition of the South today if cotton were selling for 5 cents per pound? What would be the condition of the banks of the country if such prices prevailed?

What would be the condition of the holders of fixed investments if such low prices were in effect today?

As the result of the efforts of those who believe in social justice, we have made all money full legal tender for all debts, both public and private.

We have abolished gold certificates, national-bank notes, Federal Reserve bank notes, and national currency, and have substituted therefor a wider use of silver. The Government is reducing the currency notes issued by private banks and is increasing and expanding the currency certificates issued by the United States Treasury.

Formerly bonds and notes were payable in gold. We have abolished and abrogated all gold contracts, and today all gold bonds, notes, and contracts are payable in any form of money, as all money is, by law, full legal tender.

Through the efforts of this administration the deposits in our banks have been guaranteed and, in addition, all banks have been placed under the supervision of a board of governors. The board has been given added powers to regulate and control such banks in the interest of the general public.

The fight of the National Union for Social Justice has been and is a winning fight.

All fights for the interests of the masses of the people, if carried through, are winning fights.

Without regard to section, party, race, or creed, we ask all who hope for the preservation of America to support the program for social justice.

SENATOR GORE—EDITORIAL FROM NEW YORK TIMES

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I have before me a copy of the New York Times of Tuesday, May 26, 1936, carrying an editorial in regard to our beloved colleague, the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], in which he is highly complimented. A number of his friends have suggested that I take this opportunity to ask to have the editorial printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in order that his friends may see it. I ask that that be done.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times of May 26, 1936]

SENATOR GORE

THOMAS PRYOR GORE is one of the bravest and wisest men in the Senate. His conscientious vote against the war cost him his seat, which he held for 14 years after 1907. Reelected in 1930, he is again a candidate. In his present term he gave another proof of his rare quality as a public man by voting against A. A. A. on the ground of its unconstitutionality. Seekers of his shoes are Governor Marland, Representative JOSH LEE, "christened Joshua and later given the middle name of Bryan, after the Great Commoner", and Gomer Smith, Townsendite.

Mr. GORE's speeches in Oklahoma are full of the shrewdness and flashing epigrams and "saving common sense" characteristic of his remarks in the Senate. LEE has as good a job as he's running for. Marland says "that he is about the best Governor Oklahoma ever had. Now is the time for me to repay a debt I owe the people of the State. I decided to keep them from losing the best Governor by not letting him win the Senate seat."

JOSH LEE's platform is "a farm for every farmer and a home for every family":

"You old-timers from Texas and Mississippi know about the promise of 40 acres and a mule. Honor bright, now did any of you people ever hear about two cars in every garage and a chicken in every pot?"

If Josh can convince Mr. GORE that he can carry out his promise, the Senator will withdraw from the field. He'd rather see every farmer with a farm and every family with a home than stay in the Senate for the rest of his life. Promises shouldn't be made unless the promiser can "deliver." Can the $200-a-month man "deliver one-half the Nation's income to one-tenth of the population"? Can he "restore purchasing power by taxes"? Anybody that believes so should vote for him, but "one little snowbird in the hand is worth more than a flock of geese flying above the clouds." Mr. GORE's platform is "Less tax, more trade, no trusts, and no war."

Government aid to the unemployed means that the employed are helping the unemployed. Take home these two little aphorisms:

"The worst thing a man can do to get votes is to give false promises."

"If we don't reduce taxes they will reduce us."

In ELMER THOMAS, Oklahoma has a Senator devoted to the romantic school of finance and political economy. Senator GORE is a disciple of experience and common sense. His intellectual standing in the Senate is something for any State to be proud of.

REPRESENTATIVE DENNIS J. DRISCOLL, OF PENNSYLVANIA

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the Pittsburgh Press of May 17, 1936, relative to Representative DENNIS J. DRISCOLL, of Pennsylvania.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Pittsburgh Press of May 17, 1936]

THE FIGHT ON MR. DRISCOLL

One of the most competent of Pennsylvania's Congressmen has been marked for destruction this year. The offense for which he is to be punished is that he did a signal service in behalf of honest government.

The Congressman is DENIS J. DRISCOLL, of the Twentieth District, which includes Clarion, Elk, Forest, Mercer, Venango, and Warren Counties.

It was Congressman DRISCOLL who discovered that representatives of the Associated Gas & Electric Co. were deluging members of Congress with fake telegrams opposing the Wheeler-Rayburn utility holding company bill.

A former high-school principal and a student of names, Congressman DRISCOLL thought it was strange that of the thousands of messages he received urging him to vote against the holding company measure, all save a few were signed with names starting with the first few letters of the alphabet. He wrote some of his constituents and found that the telegrams were forgeries. Whereupon he reported the matter to the Senate Lobby Committee and caused an investigation.

This investigation revealed that an Associated Gas & Electric Co. representative had gone to Warren, Pa., where he had written many telegrams opposing the holding company bill and had signed them with names taken out of the telephone directory. A Western Union messenger boy also testified that he was paid 3 cents for each signature he secured to messages opposing the act. Western Union files at Warren were then destroyed to cover up what had happened.

The procedure which Representative DRISCOLL exposed was so dishonest and unfair that it not only constituted forgery and false pretenses, but was a direct challenge to our system of government.

An attempt was made to intimidate Congressmen by deluging them with telegrams which were deliberate forgeries. It was an indecent, contemptible, and wholly repugnant practice.

For exposing it, Joe Grundy's Pennsylvania Manufacturers' Association has marked Representative DRISCOLL for slaughter in next November's election. Reports are that money will be freely spent to defeat him, and that the full power of the Republican machine will be turned against him. The holding companies, working with Grundy and the other G. O. P. leaders, are determined to make an example of the man who dared expose and oppose their crooked tactics.

To avoid any primary fight, the Republican candidate was decided on at a conference, and since then banquets have been given in various counties to organize sentiment against Mr. DRISCOLL. Small-business men have been formed into branches of the Pennsylvania Chamber of Commerce, to protect themselves against "unjust and discriminatory legislation." That phrase, of course, refers in this instance to the Wheeler-Rayburn bill. The business groups have been strangely silent about the danger from fake telegrams and dishonest lobbies.

Twenty-six of the 28 newspapers in Mr. DRISCOLL's district now are Republican, several having changed hands recently. He will get scant newspaper attention and have little financial support, while his opponent will have plenty of publicity and finances.

Therefore, the Pittsburgh Press, in order that the people of the six counties represented by Mr. DRISCOLL may know the facts, will endeavor to keep his campaign before the eyes of his constituents.

Mr. DRISCOLL, of course, is just an incident in this fight. While he has made a good record and is a splendid citizen, his personal fortunes are unimportant compared to the fortunes of the people whom he represents.

This isn't a battle against Mr. DRISCOLL so much as it is an attack on the public; an effort to punish those who insist on honesty in public affairs and to intimidate those who try to protect the consumers from the misdeeds of great utility combinations. Mr. DRISCOLL has become the symbol of a great issue.

SUPREME COURT DECISION ON MINIMUM-WAGE LAW

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the Philadelphia Record of June 2, 1936, relative to the recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States on the New York State minimum-wage law.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Philadelphia Record of June 2, 1936]

PROMETHEUS BOUND

Women working in laundries for $6 a week.
A great wrong—but we can't do anything about it.
So rules the Supreme Court of the United States.

Two weeks ago this highest tribunal ruled, in the case of the Guffey Act, that for the Federal Government to fix minimum wages would violate States' rights.

Yesterday the same highest tribunal ruled the States haven't got the right.

Low wages pull down living standards. They reduce buying power. They undercut decent competition. They increase crime and ill health, and add to the community's tax bill.

Everybody agrees that the sweatshop is a menace.

The Supreme Court says we're helpless to stop it.

When the Federal Government seeks to wipe out the sweatshop by fixing minimum wages, as in the N. R. A. and the Guffey Act, the Supreme Court throws the legislation out on the ground that it violates the rights of the States.

But when 10 States exercise those rights and enact State minimum-wage laws, the Supreme Court throws those laws out—as a violation of the Federal Constitution.

The Supreme Court's decision yesterday voiding the New York State minimum-wage law creates an impossible situation.

It ties the hands of the States as it has already tied the hands of the Federal Government.

It recognizes the existence of an evil, but forbids either State or Federal Government to do anything about it.

An overwhelming majority of the American people want minimum-wage laws to wipe out the sweatshop—but five men in black robes override them.

The Supreme Court sanctifies the sweatshop and places it above the law.

It seeks to foster wage slavery as it once sought to foster chattel slavery.

It leaves the American people bound, like Prometheus in the fable, to the rock of reaction with the vultures of exploitation at its vitals.

* * * * * * *

Like the Dred Scott decision on chattel slavery, the Supreme Court's decision on State minimum wages brings the American people face to face with an irrepressible conflict.

If this new conflict is not to culminate, as did the other, in civil war, the power of the Court must be curbed and its arrogant usurpations of power ended.

The power of the Court to block peaceful reform by democratic means must be broken once and for all. The problem of breaking that power is the paramount issue of our time. No other issue can be met, until that issue is met.

The administration can no longer evade it.

The advice given to the American people by the fathers in Philadelphia on July 4, 1776, applies even more truly to the Supreme Court than it did to the acts of George III.

"* * * when a long train of abuses and usurpations, pursuing invariably the same object, evinces a design to reduce them to absolute despotism, it is their right, it is their duty, to throw off such Government, and to provide new guards for their future security."

A Government set up to be a government of the people has become a Government of irresponsible Judges.

A government set up to safeguard "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness" has been subverted by judicial autocracy into a government to exalt property rights above human rights—at no matter what cost in constitutional misinterpretation.

There is a sinister parallel between the case of Dred Scott and the case of the New York minimum-wage law.

The Dred Scott case was the first in which the Supreme Court held that due process meant something more than a guarantee against arbitrary action by government.

The New York State minimum-wage decision is the full blossom of the vicious doctrine that permits reactionary judges to call any law a violation of "due process" that they do not happen to like.

As for the part played in this decision by Mr. Justice Roberts, he displays himself in his true colors—the corporation lawyer elevated to the bench. He might have made this a 5–4 favorable decision. He should have made this a 5–4 favorable decision.

When the fixing of milk prices to protect dairy farmers and milk companies was before the Court only 2 years ago, Mr. Justice Roberts wrote the 5–4 majority decision upholding the law.

Had Mr. Justice Roberts been consistent, he would have upheld minimum-wage legislation, for in that case he said "the power to promote the general welfare is inherent in Government." He swept aside the "due process" shibboleth, and he said:

"So far as the requirement of due process is concerned, and in the absence of other constitutional restrictions, a State is free to adopt whatever economic policy may reasonably be deemed to promote public welfare and to enforce that policy by legislation adopted to its purpose. The courts are without authority either to declare such policy or, when it is declared by the legislative arm, to override it."

How much longer will we let the Supreme Court sanctify the sweatshop and pervert democratic process?

NATIONAL FLOOD CONTROL—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. COPELAND submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8455) authorizing the construction of certain public works on rivers and harbors for flood control, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

CHAS. L. MCNARY,
MORRIS SHEPPARD,
HIRAM W. JOHNSON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

RILEY J. WILSON,
WILLIAM M. WHITTINGTON,
GLENN GRISWOLD,
ROBERT F. RICH,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator in charge of the conference report to make a statement explaining it?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I shall be glad to do so, and desire to do so.

Most of the changes are of a minor nature. There was an effort made to have certain soil erosion and forestation and reclamation projects provided for in some way. The language of the bill is made quite general that where a joint survey is to be made it shall be made, not by the Army Engineers and some one of the bureaus of the Department of Agriculture, but by the Secretary of War and the Secretary of Agriculture.

There is one matter to which I should invite attention as it is proper that the Senate should know about it. The conferees considered at one and the same time the omnibus flood-control bill and the lower Mississippi flood-control bill, known as the Overton bill. So far as provision for contributions is concerned, the two measure are now identical. However, the omnibus bill, the conference report on which has just been read, contains two items relating to the St. Francis River and the Yazoo River and tributaries, which items were also found in the Overton bill.

The St. Francis project was not really in conference. It was in the omnibus bill as it came to us and also in the Senate amendment. We have had conferences with all the parties in interest. I am sure the Senator from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] will verify my statement. In view of the fact that the St. Francis River project is in the Overton bill, which has been approved, it was believed it ought not to be retained in the omnibus bill because that would make a double appropriation.

It was understood with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO] that if the conferees should reach a final agreement with reference to the Yazoo River project, which was in the Overton bill and the Senate provisions of the omnibus bill, but not in the House provisions of the omnibus bill, it should come out of the omnibus bill as finally approved.

Both these projects, the St. Francis and the Yazoo, have been eliminated from the omnibus bill, but both projects are in the Overton bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. As I understand the Senator from New York, the two projects mentioned—namely, the St. Francis and the Yazoo—were retained in the Overton bill?

Mr. COPELAND. That is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON. They have been eliminated from the omnibus flood-control bill?

Mr. COPELAND. That is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON. There were certain reservoir projects embraced in both bills in the conference but not included in either bill by the Commerce Committee?

Mr. COPELAND. That is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON. There were 13 reservoirs in the Arkansas River Basin and an equal number in the White River Basin. These were embraced in the original House omnibus bill and eliminated by the Senate committee from the House omnibus bill. They were incorporated in the Overton bill by a vote of the House. What disposition was made of those projects?

Mr. COPELAND. No subject received such serious consideration and such careful study as did the projects referred to by the Senator from Arkansas. The conference committee met three different days, and at the request of the House conferees, to which we were very glad to accede, the projects for the reservoirs on the White and Arkansas Rivers were resubmitted to the Army engineers to see if justification might not be found for their inclusion in the flood-control bill.

There could be no doubt of the great value of the 26 reservoirs, 13 on the White River and 13 on the Arkansas River. They are very valuable projects and ultimately will be developed. It was found in the past, and a restudy has demonstrated further, that the projects are largely power projects. Their value as flood-control projects would not justify their inclusion in the flood-control bill.

I am sorry about that, because I know the great interest of the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mrs. CARAWAY], who pressed the matters upon us in the committee and insisted upon their inclusion. We took the items back repeatedly to the Army engineers, but the verdict has not been changed.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the Army engineers, in a report submitted under section 10 of the 1928 Flood Control Act, recommended those reservoirs, as I read their report, as advantageous features of the plan for flood control of the Mississippi River. I am unable to understand why it is that they have reversed their attitude on those projects. It is apparently true that they have done so.

I know the contention is made that some of the reservoir projects are coupled in with power problems; but it is not my understanding, in the first place, that that is true as to even the greater number of the projects, and it is not my understanding that there is any sound reason for eliminating them even though they do involve power problems.

There are some reservoirs in the bill which admittedly are essentially power projects as well as flood-control projects. According to my understanding, all of these projects are inseparable from the complete and effective flood control of the Mississippi and its tributaries. I know that they would have involved the addition of a large sum to these bills, and I know that it is expected that further studies of them will be made; but I am interested to understand how it is that the engineers now persistently maintain that these projects are not essential, or that they are not parts of a desirable flood-control system.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, if I may reply to the Senator, there has been no reversal of opinion on the part of the Army engineers regarding the value of these projects when consideration is given not alone to flood control but to power development, irrigation, and reclamation. Every one of these projects is an approved project with the Army engineers when all these elements are considered, but we started out in this bill and established a policy. We decided to limit this bill strictly to flood-control projects.

We have on the floor of the Senate a very able Senator, the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], who last year made a remarkable speech, some of which was well founded in fact and other parts visionary, but nevertheless it was effective, because the fact stood out that the bill carried six or seven hundred million dollars, probably between seven hundred and eight hundred million dollars. The particular projects on the Arkansas and the White, if added to this bill, would involve $126,000,000, would be almost a 50-percent addition to the part of the bill we have before us, which is the part to be paid for by the Government. When the projects on the White and the Arkansas are analyzed, and when flood control is given its own value, every one of them falls below $1 investment to 50 cents of return. They are uneconomic. There is not a single project in this bill as to which the return is not dollar for dollar; that is, for every dollar invested for flood control there is an economic return of at least $1, and in many cases twenty-five or thirty dollars; but not one of the 26 projects on the White or the Arkansas, when considered wholly with reference to flood control, is economically justified.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. May I ask the Senator how the economic value of a project with respect to flood control is determined by the engineers? What plan do they follow?

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator is asking me a pretty big question.

Mr. ROBINSON. It is an important question.

Mr. COPELAND. The possible loss of life, the probability of the wiping out by the floods of soil, valuable tillable land, the destruction of other land by bringing down gravel and sand upon it are items which are considered, and I think I may say they are the chief ones.

If we were considering the question of the ultimate full use of the reservoirs upon the White and the Arkansas when built high enough not alone to carry the flood waters but also to have a reserve of water which could be called upon for power development, all right; but to do that, as I have said, would add $126,000,000 to the bill without an economic justification according to the rules laid down. I am sorry. I wish I could be more reasonable about it.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator another question?

Mr. COPELAND. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. What is the provision finally agreed upon by the conferees on the omnibus bill—that is the conference report which is before the Senate—with respect to local contributions?

Mr. COPELAND. The localities must provide the cost of land and damages as set forth in section 3. They must provide, without cost to the United States—

> All lands, easements, and rights-of-way necessary for the construction of the project, except as otherwise provided herein; (b) hold and save the United States free from damages due to the construction works; (c) maintain and operate all the works after completion in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary of War.

Then where these reservoirs are built in a locality which would not be benefited, the cost of the dam sites and the easements must be allocated to the States or localities benefited by the flood control.

Mr. ROBINSON. Is that substantially the Senate provision, or was the Senate provision modified?

Mr. COPELAND. That is substantially the Senate provision. However, the House provision was not unlike it. The House provision, found on page 2 of the bill, provides that before these projects are undertaken, the States or responsible local interests must give—

Assurances satisfactory to the Secretary of War that they will (a) provide without cost to the United States all rights in land and other property necessary for the construction of the project; (b) hold and save the United States free from damages in connection with the construction works; (c) maintain and operate all the works after completion in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary of War.

So there was no difference of opinion between the two Houses with regard to the contributions.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, with regard to the statement of the distinguished chairman of the Commerce Committee on the subject of the St. Francis and the Yazoo Rivers, I should like to say that I was especially interested in the matter of the St. Francis River, and to a lesser degree interested in the Yazoo River, which falls within the same category as the St. Francis from the standpoint of legislation.

I do not believe there is a more meritorious flood-control project in the United States than the St. Francis River, which is located in the alluvial plain of the Mississippi River, and which, owing to the draining of the swamplands in recent years, sometimes has as many as two or three disastrous floods every year.

I therefore urged, both in the committee and in the Senate, that although the St. Francis project—which, I may say, has been reported by the Army engineers at the very head of their list of projects for some years—had already been included in the Overton bill, it should also be included in the omnibus bill, because the situation in the St. Francis Valley was so desperate and so urgent and of such constant recurrence that I was unwilling to take a chance on which bill would pass, the Overton bill or the omnibus bill; and I therefore insisted, both in the committee and in the Senate, that the St. Francis and the Yazoo be included in both bills.

With the meeting of what was virtually a joint conference on the two bills, Mr. President, a practically uniform system has been worked out regarding the controverted matters in the two bills; and after consultation with the other Senators from the area involved, and particularly with the Representatives who are interested in the same subject, I have become convinced that the retention in both bills of the St. Francis and the Yazoo projects would endanger the adoption of the conference reports on both bills in the House of Representatives, and that the same result has been accomplished by the working out of a uniform system through the two bills. Therefore, so far as I was concerned, when the chairman of the Commerce Committee and the head of the Senate conferees consulted me about the matter, and at the urgent recommendation of the Members of the House interested, I consented to the dropping of the St. Francis project from the omnibus bill.

While I am on my feet, Mr. President, I should like to say that I agree very thoroughly with what the Senator from Arkansas has said with regard to the White River projects, and, so far as I know, the Arkansas River projects, although I am not so familiar with them as I am with the White River projects.

Those projects have been favorably reported several times by the Board of Army Engineers; but I should like to say to the Senator from Arkansas that the situation in the committee was that a rule was established—and it was not established by my vote—that only the most urgent flood-control projects should be considered in connection with this bill, and that all projects which were as much power projects as flood-control projects, while they might be meritorious from a flood-control standpoint, should be omitted from the bill; and when that rule was adopted the Army engineers dropped the White River projects and the Arkansas River projects out of their recommendation.

I can say further to the Senator that I had two additional reports made on the White River projects; and while they did not in any way modify the report of 1928, to which the Senator has referred, the engineers were unwilling at this time to include them in the list of the preferred projects in the bill as to which a general estimate had been given respecting the amount the bill was to carry.

I was not satisfied with that. I made a motion in the committee to include the White River projects, and after elaborate debate, and as hard a fight as the Senators interested in the subject were able to make, the motion was defeated by a decisive vote of almost 2 to 1. That having happened in the committee, I did not make the fight—for the same reason, I assume, the Senator from Arkansas did not make the fight—on the Senate floor to include the White River projects or the Arkansas River projects, because we felt it would have endangered the passage of the bill.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BARKLEY in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. CLARK. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I would not say that the Senator from Arkansas did not make a fight. He did. He not only made a fight on the floor but he made a vigorous fight with me, so I know that the Senator from Arkansas has made every effort to have the projects included.

Mr. CLARK. I did not mean to intimate that the Senator did not make a fight for the projects. If I used that expression, I used it inadvisedly. What I meant was that the Senator from Arkansas was not willing to endanger the passage of the bill, nor was I.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the failure to include the reservoirs on the White and the Arkansas Rivers is attributable, in my judgment, to the rule adopted by the committee not to incorporate projects which did not have the approval and recommendation of the engineers. I am of the opinion—and we might just as well be frank about the matter—that the reason for the rule was the desire of the committee to limit in some way the amount of the authorization carried in the bill in the hope that by doing so the bill would receive Executive approval and become law.

The omnibus bill carries many authorizations in which my colleague and I are very sincerely and profoundly interested. As I read the conference agreement, it embraces not only the levees which were included by the Committee on Commerce after our presentation of the matters there, but also those which were incorporated in the Senate by amendments offered by my colleague and myself, having reference particularly to the levee for the north bank of the Arkansas River from North Little Rock to Gillette, and what is known as the Faulkner County levee.

Mr. President, the Senator from New York and I have not had any personal feeling about this matter, and I do not want the Senator to arrive at such an understanding from the language the Senator has used. My colleague and I have pressed these reservoirs which have been omitted, and we are disappointed that they are not included. In my opinion the failure of the engineers to approve them at this time is, in part at least, attributable to the fact that they contemplated a very large authorization in addition to that carried in the bill, and that the projects also involved questions relating to power and perhaps soil erosion which the Executive, and the engineers, felt required further study.

The Senator from New York has said that these projects are worthy and that they may be included in future legislation when further studies shall have been completed. That gives us some measure of satisfaction, although it does not make us happy.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly.

Mr. COPELAND. I wish to say that on the urgent request of both Senators from Arkansas we had repeated studies made of the levees in Faulkner County and other places in that region, and the bill does contain far more in that direction than I originally thought we would be able to include. So I think the Senators from Arkansas have done their full duty by their State, and we were convinced that if we added to the bill a couple of hundred million dollars more, there would not be enacted any law on this subject at this session of the Congress. So what the State of Arkansas will get if this measure becomes law it probably would not have had if we had continued to make additions to the bill.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arkansas yield to me?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. I wish to make a brief statement, with the permission of the Senator from Arkansas, in reference to the 26 reservoir projects. I gave study to them not only in the perfection of the bill which I had the honor to introduce but in considering the omnibus projects bill.

As a member of the Committee on Commerce I urged that these 26 reservoirs be included in the omnibus bill. For the reasons stated by both the Senator from New York and the Senator from Arkansas, they were not included, upon a vote of the members of the Senate Committee on Commerce.

While I was not one of the conferees on the omnibus bill, at the suggestion of the chairman of the committee I remained during the conference which took place upon that bill and made suggestions. Among the suggestions I made was that all or part of these reservoirs be included; and I should say to the Senator from Arkansas that I read to the conferees, and in the presence of the representative of the Chief of Engineers, who was in attendance upon the conference, the recommendations which had heretofore been made by the Chief of Engineers in respect to these reservoirs.

I regret that these projects were not included, but I feel quite sure that in future legislation they will be taken care of, because in my opinion they are meritorious.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I have said all I desire to say at this time on the subject of the reservoirs. I am gratified, of course, that the amendments relating to the levees have been retained in the bill.

Let me add that I think the provision as to local contributions will make improbable the construction of any reservoirs which are authorized under the proposed legislation; and, briefly, I will state my reasons for that opinion.

It is doubtful whether landowners alleged to be benefited by reservoirs far removed from the situs of their property may be induced to make contributions to the costs which are imposed as local contributions under the bill. I think it may operate to prevent, for some time at least, the construction of reservoirs; and also that it may be necessary in the future, after that subject has been further studied, to make some changes in the local-contribution provision. A reservoir constructed, for instance, in Missouri, on the White River, presumably will result in some benefits to landowners all the way down the White and all the way down the Mississippi from the junction of the White with that great stream.

I mention these rivers merely as illustrations. However, I sincerely doubt if any landowner either in Louisiana or in Arkansas—particularly in that part of the State which is remote from the reservoir—would feel that the benefits to be derived from the reservoir would be sufficient to justify him in attempting to meet the requirements as to contributions. That may be added to the consideration that already most of the lands presumably to be benefited are within local levee districts under the authority of which heavy levee taxes have been imposed for generations in some instances, for many years in others, and these local levees have just about exhausted the power of the landowners to pay taxes for improvement benefits.

In addition to that, there is a problem which presents many complications and difficulties, one that under this provision with respect to contribution will devolve upon the engineers. Of course, it may not present all the difficulties to an engineer that it presents to the average citizen, but the task of working out with any degree of accuracy or reliability the measure of benefits to be derived by lands that are remote from the sites of the reservoirs is one that I think will be very difficult to perform effectively and reliably.

I recognize that the subject has received very careful consideration by the committee, and also by the two Houses. I content myself at this time with the statement I have made.

Mr. BILBO obtained the floor.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BILBO. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I think the Senator from Arkansas is entirely correct when he says there are great difficulties involved in the allocation of benefits. I should have a headache right now if I had to start in to make an allocation. It is going to be extremely difficult to make allocations, and it may well be, as the Senator has said, that in the future some different policy may be devised. For the time being, however, it seems to me that what is contemplated by the bill is the wise thing to do, and the Army engineers seem very confident that they can do it, so we shall have to give them a chance to do it.

Mr. ROBINSON. I will simply add one further thought, and that is that it is some measure of consolation to my colleague and myself for the failure to succeed in having the reservoirs heretofore mentioned incorporated in the bill, when we recognize the fact that they probably could not be constructed anyway under the language of the bill.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to take more than a few minutes of the Senate's time on the question of adopting the report from the conference committee on the omnibus flood bill, because I appreciate the fact that the Senate is very anxious to proceed with the discussion of the revenue measure. However, in passing, I should like to say on that subject that I think this is the time when the 15-minute limit on debate should be invoked, because after all the revenue bill should be fought out in conference, and we should get the conferees busy working on the bill as soon as we can in order to adjourn on the date hopefully fixed, June 6.

I desire to make some observations on the flood control bill in response to the statement made by the Senator from New York. He states correctly my agreement to take out of the omnibus flood bill the Yazoo Basin proposition, because it was not my desire to have it in both the omnibus flood bill and the Overton bill. However my agreement—and I am making this statement to keep the record straight—to keep it out of the omnibus flood bill was predicated upon the passage of the Overton flood bill. I am just wondering in what position I would be under such an agreement if the Overton flood bill should meet with Executive veto and the omnibus flood bill should be approved by the Executive. I merely make the statement because I want it understood that my agreement to take the Yazoo Basin out of the omnibus flood bill was predicated upon the final passage and approval of the Overton bill.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BILBO. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. I should feel very sorry indeed if there was any misunderstanding about the matter. Of course I cannot speak for what the Executive will do. That may seem odd to the Senator because, of course, ordinarily I am the Executive's spokesman here, as the Senator well knows, but on this particular matter I am not advised what the President will do. It may well be that flood-control bills will not be signed until after Congress shall have adjourned, particularly if it shall adjourn on Saturday. I should not be willing to have the matter held up that long. If it would make the Senator happier, I should not object at all to delaying final action here until the information comes from the House that the bill has passed the House. However, we are in the fullest agreement. I may say that in the agreement made concerning the Overton bill as regards the Yazoo River, it is provided that reservoirs may be built, or the engineer, in his discretion, may substitute levees, floodways, and channels.

Further, in order to make assurance doubly sure, and having the Senator from Mississippi in mind, a proviso is added to the Overton bill reading as follows:

Providing further, That nothing herein shall be construed to interfere with the completion of any reservoir or flood-control work authorized by the Congress and now under way.

Therefore, whatever is being done on the Yazoo will be continued.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, I appreciate the observations made by the Senator from New York in this connection, and I will say that I much prefer to have the Yazoo Basin proposition included in the Overton bill than in the omnibus flood bill. However, representing a flood-ridden constituency in Mississippi who are keenly interested in this piece of legislation, I did not want them to think for one minute that I had traded them out of relief in making the agreement. I made the agreement with the understanding that the Overton bill would become a law.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BILBO. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. Does not the Senator believe that by the withdrawal of the Yazoo River and the St. Francis project from the omnibus flood-control bill the chances of both the Overton bill and the omnibus becoming law are very much enhanced?

Mr. BILBO. I hope for the best; yes, sir.

Mr. President, I appreciate the fact that by not making opposition to the adoption of the conference report I am giving my consent to a provision of law to which I have every objection in the world, and that is the doctrine of local contribution for flood control. My views on this subject were given to the Senate a few days ago in detail, and I shall not attempt to repeat that argument, but it is gratifying to me that the views advanced on that occasion are already bearing fruit. When the Senator from Arkansas today said those splendid things I was just thinking that if he had said them the other day when this question was before the Senate for discussion possibly my amendment would have received more votes than it did.

I know that some Senators are inclined to become frightened at the large figures that are discussed in connection with flood control in this country. While I did not have the pleasure of hearing his speech, I understand the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], at the last session, routed the advocates of flood-control legislation and defeated it at that time because of holding up before the Senate the enormous amount of money involved in the bill then pending. I repeat that if any Senator has any doubt about where we are headed in the expenditure of public funds for flood control, and if he is not willing to talk about billions, this will be no place for him, because we are beginning a program which will involve the expenditure of from twelve billion to $15,000,000,000 before the job is finished. I have a suspicion that when some Senators get back to their homes and consult their constituents they will find that a majority of them are in favor of this responsibility being assumed in toto by the Federal Government.

Mr. President, of course, I am not going to vote against the conference report because I want these two bills to become laws, and because I have some projects in both the bills as they now stand and as they are now reported by the conference committees; but, in doing so, I want to register my objection to the principle of local contributions in connection with such projects, and I do it with the hope that in the near future the American Congress will realize that flood control in this country is a Federal responsibility and must be assumed in toto as such in the years to come.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I wish to say for the benefit of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO] that his constituents can never fail to be appreciative of the efforts he has made regarding the Yazoo project, and, indeed, in connection with the whole subject of flood control. He was just as urgent and insistent in the committee as he has been here on the floor, and I think that his constituents have reason to thank him for very much that has been accomplished by the provisions which are found in the bill.

I wish to say also that, of course, if the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] had spoken at the time to which the Senator has referred, it might have made a difference in some votes, because the Senator from Arkansas is very influential, but the Congress, for once, was quite united on a policy. I wish to say for myself that I would be ashamed if the State of New York did not pay the six or eight million dollars that it must pay as a local contribution toward this work. I think I may say to Senators from the South that they have been extremely liberal down there. They have spent two or three hundred million dollars in the way of local contributions. But, at least, we must do what we can do to prevent the recurrence of such floods as have taken place in the past.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, in response to what the Senator from New York has said, I will state that the lower Mississippi Valley has spent in the neighborhood of $330,000,000. We have spent "until it has hurt", and we are getting tired of spending. We have done this not asking for any return, but we have done it all the time knowing that it was a Federal responsibility. It is gratifying to know that day by day the sentiment is growing with the American people that this is a total Federal responsibility, and will be so determined in the end. I am sure that, as time goes on, the entire Congress will come to this conclusion.

I appreciate the reasons for the insertion of the local-contributions provision, and I appreciate the reasons for the Congress accepting it at this time, because our country is flood conscious. When Senators realize that their constituents demand that something be done, not only in the lower Mississippi Valley but on the eastern seaboard and throughout the West, in their hurry to do something for their people they swallow a policy which in the end they will find out they cannot pursue.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. BILBO. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not wish the Senator to infer from the statement I made that I think the principle of local contributions should be entirely abandoned. I think it is wholesome and essential in order in some instances to prevent the imposition of impossible burdens on the Federal Government. I think, however, that with respect to reservoirs the provision that is in the bill will be difficult to administer.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, I do not share the views of the Senator from Arkansas that total responsibility on the part of the Federal Government will result in extraordinary expenditures or unreasonable expenditures, for these projects will be safeguarded by the necessity of having the approval of the Board of Army Engineers, as has been the policy of the Government since we have undertaken flood control. With that safeguard, I am sure there will not be what is called the "pork barrel" species of legislation.

As the Senator suggested a while ago, the provision in these bills for the assessment of the expense of building reservoirs on the territories mostly benefited is not feasible; it is not practicable; it will not work. If I had been writing this bill, and wanted to camouflage the measure in order to defeat the progress of flood-control legislation, I could not have devised a better scheme than section 3 of the flood-control bill providing for the contributions from the States that are benefited, to be assessed by the Board of Army Engineers. It is not possible, it is not practicable, and when the assessments are made it will never be possible to collect the assessments in such a way that the work may go on.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I understood the chairman of the committee to say that in conference all power projects were eliminated from this bill. Did I correctly understand the Senator from New York?

Mr. COPELAND. All those projects which were purely power projects and projects which were a combination of flood control and power where the flood control represented less than a dollar-for-dollar return were eliminated.

Mr. WHEELER. I assume that the items were eliminated on the advice or suggestion of the Army Engineers. Is that what I am given to understand?

Mr. COPELAND. That is correct.

Mr. WHEELER. It seems to me, Mr. President, that that is a very foolish idea, because, on the contrary, if, when we are providing for flood control, we can likewise sell some power in connection with the flood-control projects, we are going thereby to help the Government of the United States to pay for those projects.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. CLARK. Is it not true that on the purely flood-control projects, almost without exception—not quite without exception but in a great majority of cases—the benefits inure solely to individuals, while in the case of a flood-control project mixed with a power project the Federal Treasury can be reimbursed to a large extent from the sale of power? So, from the standpoint of ordinary good business, it seems to me that mixed power and flood-control projects should not have been eliminated.

Mr. WHEELER. Of course, that is so. I have been suspicious, as a matter of fact, for some time that some of the Army Engineers have opposed any project where there was any thought or possibility of developing some power. I feel confident the reason why they have been somewhat prejudiced against the Big Horn Canyon is because of the fact that power can be developed there, and if it were developed the project could, by the sale of power, pay every 5-cent piece that the Government expended on it.

I merely wanted to say to the Senators from the South who are interested in flood control that while I have no items in the flood control bill for my State, yet I do not want to do anything to prevent the passage of a bill that is going to help other sections of the country, but I think that it is time that the southern Senators who are interested in flood control in the lower Mississippi Valley ought to cooperate with those of us from the North who are interested in preventing flood control by the building of dams and reservoirs at the headwaters of the rivers. If they are not willing to go along with the development of power on projects which are of benefit to our States but want all the money spent in some of the Southern States, it seems to me that they are pursuing a very short-sighted policy with reference to the whole flood-control problem.

Flood control is not something just for Mississippi and for Louisiana, but it is national in its aspects, and when the problem is looked at from a national standpoint, it has been recognized by engineers for years that one of the best ways to prevent floods is to build dams and reservoirs in the headwaters of the streams.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator from Montana falls into error as to the Board of Army Engineers and in reaching the conclusion that the interests of Senators from the South are confined to the Mississippi River. I have earnestly endeavored to interest the Army Engineers in a project for flood control, navigation, and power development on the Savannah River, a river that has periodical and recurring floods which do great damage. I might say to the Senator from Montana that I have been ready to join with him or any other Senator in the promotion of power projects that have definite flood-control value.

Mr. WHEELER. I thank the Senator, but I am sure, unless the Army Engineers change their minds, that we will not be able to have any project recommended by them where there is any possibility of power development. I do not know what influences are at work with the Chief of Army Engineers, or some of the Army Engineers, who seem to want to condemn every project connected with flood control when some power development is connected with it. In the first place, it is a foolish, unbusinesslike proposition, because if the Government can sell cheap power, and thereby help the citizens of the particular locality, and, in addition to that, get back the money it has expended, that is the kind of policy which should be adopted.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHEELER. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. The people in the basins of the White and Arkansas Rivers are profoundly interested in the development of power. No situation has arisen which enables one readily to know how much power can be utilized in the immediate or early future. That subject is being studied. It is the opinion of the President that the study should be continued and, as speedily as conclusions shall be reached, the projects should be carried forward.

It will be a distinct disappointment to the people in Arkansas who live in the region where the reservoirs are in prospect that they are not to be proceeded with at this time. There is no doubt in my mind about that. One of the controlling considerations in their minds is that some of the reservoirs have great power possibilities. They believe the development would result in the establishment and expansion of industry.

Mr. WHEELER. I thank the Senator. The same thing is true with reference to the Big Horn Canyon project in Montana. The Army Engineers admit it has great power possibilities. It is one of the few great power sites left in the country. Looking at it entirely aside from the question of power development, the local communities have been flooded out on numerous occasions, and the Government of the United States has lost money which it invested in reclamation projects, and yet the Army Engineers, when they come to consider flood control, do not recommend the project because of the possibility that it would develop a lot of power and by so doing the Government could get much of its money back.

Not only would it affect flood control along the Missouri and Mississippi Rivers, but likewise it would assist in keeping the level of water for navigable purposes in the Missouri River.

I appreciate why the chairman of the committee does not want to open up the subject at this time. He is afraid other projects might be injected into the bill and lead to its defeat. However, I serve notice now that this project is going to be included in any flood-control development measure considered in the future, and I hope when the Army Engineers come to examine it they will not close their minds to it simply because some power may be developed in the particular project.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I would not be true to my convictions if I did not say a word in defense of the Army Engineers, although I think they need no defense. I cannot believe my friend the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] was entirely serious in what he said about them. I know how valuable these power developments are found to be. I think the President is right in his plan to have them surveyed and studied with a view to ultimate universal development. I remember seeing in Ireland where the River Shannon had been confined and great power was being developed to the advantage of the Irish people.

When it comes to these projects and the attitude of the Army Engineers, I believe there is no man on that corps who could be approached or influenced in any way. They are hard-boiled. I know that. I have tried time and time again to obtain a favorable report on a little project here or there which I felt was valuable, but I had no influence with them in spite of the fact that I am not only chairman of the Commerce Committee but chairman also of the subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee having charge of the War Department appropriation bill. If anybody in the Senate would have influence with them, I think I would have, and yet I know I have not any.

I believe the Army Engineers are honorable, straightforward, patriotic men. Every one of them is a graduate of the West Point Military Academy. Every one of them is devoted to his country. They are making sacrifices and have all through their lives by remaining in the service. With the engineering training which they have, they could go into private life and make infinitely more money than can be made by remaining in the Army. They are upright, patriotic, noble, self-sacrificing citizens. I feel it only just and proper that I should say at least this much in defense of the Board of Army Engineers.

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, it is my intention to vote for the conference report. I do not want to vote against it, as I should dislike to have Congress adjourn without taking steps looking to flood control.

I quite agree with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO] that flood control is a Federal responsibility. I do not believe we should have or require local contributions. I think that feature of the bill is objectionable because the plan of local contributions is not feasible, is not enforceable, and is not practicable.

I quite agree with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] in his criticism of the policy of the Board of Army Engineers. I agree with the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] in all he said with reference to their integrity and honesty, but they have had only one policy for a hundred years and more so far as taking care of the floodwaters of the country is concerned, and that is to build levees, more levees, higher levees. They have thought nothing about stopping the water before it got into the streams, but only of taking care of it after it entered the streams.

Mr. President, I hope the conference report will be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF EMERGENCY FARM MORTGAGE ACT, 1933

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BARKLEY in the chair) laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9484) to amend section 36 of the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, as amended, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that the Senate insist on its amendment, agree to the request of the House for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. GLASS, Mr. ADAMS, Mr. MCADOO, Mr. STEIWER, and Mr. CAREY conferees on the part of the Senate.

LIMITING OPERATION OF SECTIONS 109 AND 113 OF CRIMINAL CODE

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3781) limiting the operation of sections 109 and 113 of the Criminal Code and section 190 of the Revised Statutes of the United States with respect to counsel in certain cases, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the employment of Angus D. MacLean as an attorney or counselor specially employed, retained, or appointed by the Attorney General or under authority of the Department of Justice to assist in the prosecution of the case pending in the Supreme Court of the United States entitled The Sugar Institute, Inc., et al., appellants, v. The United States of America (docket no. 268, October term, 1935), or the investigation and prosecution of any case pending either in the Federal or State courts in the western district of North Carolina involving lands owned or claimed by the Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians, or by the United States in their behalf, or other public lands owned or involved in litigation in such western district of North Carolina shall not be construed to be employment within the meaning of sections 109 and 113 of the Criminal Code of the United States, as amended (U. S. C., title 18, secs. 198 and 203), or section 190 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (U. S. C., title 5, sec. 99).

Mr. BAILEY. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

BICENTENARY CELEBRATION OF BIRTH OF CHARLES CARROLL OF CARROLLTON

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 151) making provision for a national celebration of the bicentenary of the birth of Charles Carroll of Carrollton, wealthiest signer of the Declaration of Independence, which was, on page 4, lines 3 and 4, strike out "appropriated such sums as may be necessary" and insert "appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, a sum not to exceed $12,500, or the necessary part thereof."

Mr. TYDINGS. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL INDUSTRIAL RECOVERY ACT

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3247) to amend title II of the National Industrial Recovery Act as amended by the Emergency Appropriation Act, fiscal year 1935, and as extended by the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the acquisition by the United States of any real property heretofore or hereafter acquired in connection with any low-cost housing or slum-clearance project heretofore or hereafter constructed with funds allotted to the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works pursuant to title II of the National Industry Recovery Act, the Emergency Relief Appropriation Act of 1935, or any other law, shall not be held to deprive any State or political subdivision thereof of its civil and criminal jurisdiction in and over such property, or to impair the civil rights under the local law of the tenants or inhabitants on such property; and insofar as any such jurisdiction has been taken away from any such State or subdivision, or any such rights have been impaired, jurisdiction over any such property is hereby ceded back to such State or subdivision.

SEC. 2. Upon the request of any State or political subdivision in which any such project has been or will be constructed, the Federal Emergency Administrator of Public Works is authorized to enter into an agreement, and to consent to the renewal or alteration thereof, with such State or subdivision for the payment by the United States of sums in lieu of taxes. Such sums shall be fixed in such agreement and shall be based upon the cost of the public or municipal services to be supplied for the benefit of such project or the persons residing on or occupying such premises, but taking into consideration the benefits to be derived by such State or subdivision from such project. The aggregate of sums payable under such agreements in any year in respect of any project shall not exceed whichever of the following amounts is the greater:

(a) Five percent of the gross rentals of the project for such year; or

(b) The total amount of real-property taxes levied by such State and its subdivisions upon the site (including improvements) of the project for the last tax year which expired prior to the acquisition of such site by the United States.

SEC. 3. Such payments in lieu of taxes, and any other expenditures for operation and maintenance (including insurance) of any low-cost housing or slum-clearance project described in section 1, shall be made out of the receipts derived from the operation of such projects. To provide for such payments and expenditures the Federal Emergency Administrator of Public Works is authorized from time to time to retain out of such receipts such sums as he may estimate to be necessary for such purposes.

SEC. 4. In the operation of any slum-clearance or low-cost housing project described in section 1, the Federal Emergency Administrator of Public Works is authorized to fix the rents at such rates as he shall determine to be necessary in order to make such project available to those families in the community who are unable to pay enough rent to induce private enterprise to supply adequate, safe, and sanitary housing, notwithstanding that the rental rates so fixed may not provide for repayment in full of the funds expended in connection with the project.

SEC. 5. In connection with any low-cost housing or slum-clearance project described in section 1, the Federal Emergency Administrator of Public Works, with the approval of the President, is authorized to dedicate streets, alleys, and parks for public use, and to grant easements.

And to amend the title so as to read: "An act to waive any exclusive jurisdiction over premises of Public Works Administration slum-clearance and low-cost housing projects, to authorize payments to States and political subdivisions in lieu of taxes on such premises, and for other purposes."

Mr. GEORGE. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE subsequently said: Mr. President, this morning there was messaged from the House, Senate bill 3247 with amendments, and upon a motion which I submitted the Senate concurred in the House amendments. I now ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the House amendments were agreed to be reconsidered and that the Senate disagree to the amendments, request a conference with the House thereon, and that the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Georgia that the vote by which the House amendments were agreed to be reconsidered, and that a conference be requested with the House? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. GEORGE. I should like to say, Mr. President, that I am making this request because some Members of the Senate would like to have an opportunity to examine the amendment which was inserted by the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair appoints as conferees on the part of the Senate the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. HASTINGS].

CIVIL GOVERNMENT FOR THE VIRGIN ISLANDS

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4524) to provide a civil government for the Virgin Islands of the United States, which were, on page 20, line 12, to strike out "case, civil or criminal" and insert "criminal case"; on page 26, line 15, to strike out all after "Islands:" down to and including "laws" in line 17 and insert "Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall designate the several ports and subports of entry in the Virgin Islands of the United States and shall make such rules and regulations and appoint such officers and employees as he may deem necessary for the administration of the customs laws in the Virgin Islands of the United States; and he shall fix the compensation of all such officers and employees and provide for the payment of such compensations and other expenses of the collection of duties, fees, and taxes imposed under the customs laws from the receipts thereof"; and on page 27, line 16, after "Interior", to insert ", except matters relating to the judicial branch of said Government which shall be as hereinbefore provided under the supervision of the Attorney General."

Mr. TYDINGS. With the consent of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. GIBSON], I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

CARE AND TREATMENT OF MEMBERS OF NATIONAL GUARD, ETC.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3334) to make provision for the care and treatment of members of the National Guard, Organized Reserves, Reserve Officers' Training Corps, and citizens' military training camps who are injured or contract disease while engaged in military training, and for other purposes, which were, on page 2, line 4, after the word "orders", to insert "in time of peace", and on page 5, line 1, to strike out after "services" down to and including "act" in line 8.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

NEW YORK WORLD'S FAIR, 1939

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 267. Its consideration was objected to yesterday by the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON]. He has now withdrawn his objection. It is simply a joint resolution authorizing the President to invite foreign countries to participate in the New York World's Fair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 267) authorizing the President to invite foreign countries to participate in the New York World's Fair 1939, Inc., in the city of New York during the year 1939, which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Whereas there is to be held at New York City during the year 1939 a world's fair, which has for its purpose the celebration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the inauguration of the first President of the United States of America and of the establishment of the National Government in the city of New York; and

Whereas because of its location and purpose, its scope and aims, said world's fair is deserving of the support and encouragement of the Government of the United States of America: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and respectfully requested by proclamation, or in such manner as he may deem proper, to invite foreign countries and nations to such proposed world's fair with a request that they participate therein.

The preamble was agreed to.

AMERICAN COOPERATIVE ASSOCIATION

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, on May 30 the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] placed in the RECORD the preliminary report of Mr. Omer W. Herrmann on the American Cotton Cooperative Association. I now desire to place in the RECORD the comments of Mr. E. F. Creekmore, vice president and general manager of the American Cotton Cooperative Association, on Mr. Herrmann's report.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COMMENTS BY E. F. CREEKMORE, VICE PRESIDENT AND GENERAL MANAGER, AMERICAN COTTON COOPERATIVE ASSOCIATION, ON THE REPORT SOME OPERATING PROBLEMS OF COTTON COOPERATIVES, BY OMER W. HERRMANN

The report is of sufficient importance to justify all of those interested in the cooperative marketing of cotton to give it careful study and serious consideration. Lack of a full understanding by Mr. Herrmann of the policies adopted, the operations, and the problems confronting the movement in the handling of members' cotton, in my opinion, explains some of the conclusions reached by him. To even a greater extent I believe the same is true of some of the directorate of our member associations.

To me the most startling facts contained in the report are the expressions by some of our member association's directors as to whether or not A. C. C. A. is a farmer-owned, farmer-controlled cooperative association. It is realized that to some extent the statements of some of the directors were probably influenced through policies adopted by A. C. C. A. directors toward certain member associations because of such matters as the Linsteader bonus in the Texas Association, and the failure of the Georgia Association to hold annual membership meetings or elections for directors.

The report covering membership contact and assembling problems carries rather a severe criticism of some of our interior classers and practices adopted by them, but, in my opinion, it carries indirectly a more severe criticism of the management of A. C. C. A. and its member associations in the failure to properly instruct and follow through with the interior classers. An educational program for the classers is suggested as of paramount importance. The criticism is at least partly deserved and the suggestion is good, but I think the education of some of A. C. C. A.'s member associations' directors is of equal or greater importance.

THE OBJECTIVE OF COOPERATIVE COTTON MARKETING

In the report Mr. Herrmann states that our objective is to obtain for the member the highest possible price for his cotton. I believe "the improvement of the financial condition of the member" better states our objective. Our principal operation in attaining our objective is to reduce the spread between the price paid to the member and the price paid by the consumer.

If we should adopt literally Mr. Herrmann's suggestions:

1. Enable the association to sell its members' cotton at the highest possible price; and

2. Perform only essential and necessary marketing services in the most efficient and economical manner, at cost, we would necessarily eliminate our traffic department in insisting on and fighting for rail, truck, and steamship rates on cotton comparative with other commodities.

We would also necessarily discontinue our more or less general activities in legislative and administrative policies in Washington. I believe great care should be taken to minimize legislative activities and the consequent expense involved.

It is realized that the results of these operations have been beneficial to nonmembers as well as members. That they are expensive and that the expenses are paid only by the members has been a matter of concern to the directors and to the management.

As an illustration, it is estimated the movement has recently expended some $2,500 in traveling expenses and telephone calls in regard to a program for the liquidation of the 12-cent-loan cotton, the successful conclusion of which has been materially beneficial to both members and nonmembers alike. Many illustrations of a similar nature can be given; however, mention will be made only of the recent proposal of the railroads to make a flat charge of $1 for the issuance of a shipper's order bill of lading by the railroads. In opposing this proposal several rather expensive trips, a number of telegrams, and much correspondence was necessitated. It is possible that the proposal might have been finally defeated had the cooperatives not taken such an active position in the matter, but, in my opinion, it is doubtful.

MEMBERSHIP CONTACT AND ASSEMBLING PROBLEMS

It is possible my belief that patronage dividends if paid 3 or 4 years out of 5 would take care of membership morale influenced A. C. C. A. directors in practically eliminating membership campaigns. Results of the patronage dividends paid each year by the Southwestern Association have to me demonstrated that patronage dividends will not entirely take care of membership morale. In any event I believe the directorate and the management of A. C. C. A. have, during the past year, realized some membership contact is necessary. In securing the services of Mr. T. B. Clausen for a survey last October, to advise with us in this respect, a start has been made toward a comprehensive plan for better membership contact.

THE PLACING OF INTERIOR CLASSERS IN MEMBERSHIP CONTACT AND EDUCATIONAL PROGRAM

Comment to some extent previously has been made on this subject. That it was necessary to contact 15 interior classing offices before the word "cooperative" was heard used by the interior classer in his dealings with the member, evidences the necessity of immediate attention. It is difficult to believe the classers in any member association's territory employ the old tactics and tricks of the cotton buyer in handling members' cotton. It was recently learned at a membership meeting held in Louisiana some 2 months ago that one farmer stated he did not know if he was a member of the Louisiana association but he sold all of his cotton to a certain classer, apparently not realizing that the classer was employed by the Louisiana association. This in my opinion is a fair illustration of some of the criticism in this phase of the report and evidences the necessity of immediate attention.

Stress throughout the report is laid on the statement that the membership contact job is the job of the State or regional associations. This, I believe, is correct; however, I am inclined to believe that general policies in regard to membership contact should be discussed by the movement as a whole through the directorate of A. C. C. A., thereby working out a more or less unified policy for the movement as a whole.

One of the greatest liabilities of the cotton cooperative movement is the enthusiastic promises made in the past in membership campaigns without the realization of the inability of the movement to carry out the promises made, resulting in disappointments to the members as well as to the public generally. This must not happen in any future campaign.

THE INTERIOR CLASSER'S PROGRAM

The 11 points mentioned in the report are ambitious but not impossible of accomplishment, and in my opinion should be considered as an objective to attain. Comment will be made later on point no. 2.

The questions asked the 62 directors, "Do you believe that cotton cooperatives are justified in dickering with members for a price on their cotton?" is theoretically easy to answer and theoretically the answer should be emphatically "no." In actual practice the human equasion must be considered. Can the attitude of the member who likes to trade be changed? Consideration must be given to the fact that the classing of cotton is not an exact science. Even a good classer with the proper cooperative spirit may necessarily change his opinion on the value of a bale of cotton just as experts of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics often change their opinion and reverse their decision on cotton on which they previously had issued a certificate as to its grade and staple.

QUESTION OF INEQUALITY IN TREATMENT—SHOULD A DISCRETION BE USED?

I believe it would be the unanimous opinion of the directors of A. C. C. A. and its member associations that all members should be treated, as nearly as possible, alike. Special favors to any member or group of members will eventually disrupt any cooperative movement. I believe this is not only true of the cooperative movement but of nearly any large business.

In theory it would seem a discretion should not be used, but in actual practice it would be difficult to operate without at times allowing a discretion to the management of our member associations and through them to the classers. Quality of cotton of the same grade and staple differs materially. The market as well as the basis is changing daily and at times hourly. In my opinion, the use of a discretion does not necessarily cause an inequity among members.

WHAT IS MEMBER COTTON?

This is a subject on which there has been much discussion by the directorate of A. C. C. A. and its general counsel, and between the management of A. C. C. A. and the management of its member associations since the organization of A. C. C. A. It is necessary at times in the successful operation of the movement to buy nonmember cotton. This, I believe, is fully recognized by the directors and management of A. C. C. A. and its member associations.

During the past 2 years' operation, when it seemed desirable to handle as little cotton as possible, the management of member associations have repeatedly insisted to the management of A. C. C. A. that it was necessary to take on some nonmember cotton if orders were to be filled and if the movement was to continue doing a world-wide business.

Taking cotton from commercial gins, and at the same time securing the name of the producer after the title had passed to the gin is, I believe, generally conceded to be nonmember cotton. It occurs to me that an arrangement could be worked out with the producer and with the ginner whereby the ginner would be appointed as agent for the member association and would take cotton direct from the producer for the account of the association.

Taking cotton from supply merchants and bankers who individually are large producers of cotton and are members, and who, through financing the production of cotton, have a material interest in it is, in my opinion, a matter for real consideration. The elimination from membership of supply merchants and country bankers would seriously retard the movement in several States covered by our member associations.

PAYMENT OF PATRONAGE DIVIDENDS TO LANDLORD AND TENANTS

This subject, I believe, is for the time being at least secondary to many other more serious problems we have before us. It should be considered carefully from every angle before any decision is reached. That the recommendations made are in line with cooperative thoughts, there can be no question. That the average deliveries of members is around 3 to 4 bales indicates it is not a serious problem at this time. For this reason I believe the criticism that some classers do not encourage small deliveries is worthy of consideration, but is not serious. It has been my experience with cotton classers that, whether it be 1 bale, 50 bales, or a hundred bales, they have an insatiable desire to buy.

Criticism of signs displayed at some associations' offices is merely another indication that we have allowed our more serious problems to interfere with looking after the necessary details. The criticism is pertinent and timely. I believe that since it has been called to our attention prompt and proper action will be taken.

MEMBERS' LACK OF EDUCATION

To some extent this subject has been previously commented upon. I believe our directors must first know and believe generally in the policies adopted by the movement as a whole. Next, our classers must be properly instructed. I think our member associations' directors and their classers will prove to be the best medium of distributing proper information to our members.

It is debatable in my mind how much, if any, publicity should be given to A. C. C. A. A. C. C. A. is merely an instrumentality to unify the policies and the business management of the movement. I suggest the thought for the directors of A. C. C. A. and the member associations that in the future A. C. C. A. should occupy a secondary position. For those member associations who have functioned properly and therefore have not had a conflict with the directorate and management of A. C. C. A., I believe it does occupy a secondary position. Generally speaking, it is only when a member association has gotten into trouble and A. C. C. A. has taken appropriate action that A. C. C. A. comes into the limelight. It has served some directors of some associations in the past as a splendid alibi.

HOUSE ORGANS

When the work was started by Mr. Herrmann I stated to him we wanted frank criticisms. We got what I requested. The report would have been of no value otherwise, but it was particularly pleasing, and to me somewhat surprising, to see in the report the interest displayed in the American Cotton Grower. I believe that the American Cotton Grower cannot in any way supplant the services to be rendered the member by the local house organ. The question of the success of the paper is the same question which faces the cooperative movement or any other business—policies and efficient and economical management. As there is room for improvement in A. C. C. A., I believe there is equally room for improvement in the American Cotton Grower and in the local papers of our member associations. I am inclined to believe we do not profit from comparisons between member associations of the operations and costs as much as we should. Many business firms would consider the comparisons available to the cooperatives invaluable.

DIRECTORS AND MEMBERSHIP CONTACT WORK

With the exception of Oklahoma, I believe no director of a member association is working as a salaried employee of his association. The situation in Oklahoma is rather complicated. All directors are on full-time pay, $125 a month. There are, I believe, a majority of the directors in Oklahoma whose loss would be keenly felt by the movement if they resigned from their present position, either as director or as full-time employees acting on behalf of the members in their district. I understand the matter was presented to the members of the Oklahoma association at their last annual meeting and was approved by them.

VOLUME COMPLEX

I believe Mr. Herrmann evidences under this heading a complete lack of understanding of the operating policies of A. C. C. A. during the past 2 years. Because of premiums on the near months and discounts on the distant months, the policy of operations was seriously considered by the directorate of A. C. C. A. at the beginning of the 1934–35 season and again at the beginning of the 1935–36 season. It was realized it would be extremely difficult to take any large volume of cotton without entailing in all probability rather serious losses in the operation, but it was decided after much consideration that it would be best to continue our entire field organization limiting the volume as much as practicable, expenses being considered, rather than to reduce it to a skeleton organization until conditions became better. Morale of the members, maintenance of our sales agencies throughout the world, and maintenance of an organization which has taken 4 or 5 years to build up was considered.

It is true that volume reduces the per bale cost, and reduced per bale costs are necessary if the movement is to be successful. The basis of our assembling operation is through the interior classers. The elimination of interior classers would reduce the volume and would also leave those districts unserved by the movement. Per bale cost of office rent, necessary executives' salaries, and sales expenses could not be materially reduced.

Had the movement decided to reduce its organization to a minimum, doing practically nothing the past 2 years, the loss, in my opinion, would have been greater in dollars and cents and damages resulting to the movement would have been incalculable. Sales agencies throughout the world are not built overnight, and when built cannot be retained unless a certain amount of cotton has passed through them each year. It has been realized services cannot be economically rendered without volume, for without volume per bale costs are excessive, and therefore volume is wanted. The volume is easy to attain if final results of the operation are not considered. Volume cannot be had successfully without due consideration of general business principles, with a full consideration of the result of the operation at the end of the year. A. C. C. A. and its member associations have during the past 2 years been financed and organized to handle 2,000,000 bales annually.

SUBSIDIARY ACTIVITIES

A. C. C. A. never has seriously considered any subsidiary activities, however, based on present policies of operations, subsidiary activities of A. C. C. A. would result equally to all member associations. With the exception of the Texas Cotton Cooperative Association, now in liquidation, Southwestern, and California, I believe no member association has what might be considered subsidiary activities. In considering the report, together with some explanations made by Mr. Herrmann in his talk before the directors, I believe the directors of A. C. C. A. are generally in accord with the general reactions of Mr. Herrmann in regard to subsidiary activities.

CONTROL

This subject is always a matter of debate whether between cooperatives or business generally. I believe control has been and is now vested in the member associations through the directors they elect to A. C. C. A., and that through the representation of the member associations on the directorate of A. C. C. A. policies are unified, and control is placed as the representatives of the member associations in conference decide upon.

DECENTRALIZATION

Decentralization seemingly has had rather a popular appeal to the public during the past several years, but I have seen little evidence of a general adoption of the practice. I believe any plan of decentralization which would cause a more successful operation, would be welcomed by the directorate and management of A. C. C. A.

In considering plans for decentralization, a comparison of the cost of the operations for the past 6 years with the 6 years prior to the organization of A. C. C. A. would be interesting. Consideration in regard to decentralization should be given to policies of operation of some member associations, both prior to and since the organization of A. C. C. A. The study as to the benefits of the movement operating more or less as a unit as compared with independent operations should certainly be made prior to a serious consideration of decentralization.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS

The basis of election of directors of member associations is, as I see it, the same as are our general election laws and compare with the customary rule used by business, with the exception that in business, directors are elected by votes of stockholders in proportion to their stockholdings, while with members or with the member associations, one vote only is accorded regardless of the member's interest in the association or the member association's interest in A. C. C. A.

It is believed as the membership becomes more interested, more consideration will be given the election of directors. There is and has been a feeling on my part that some directors of A. C. C. A. have been careless in keeping their directorate fully and properly informed.

Since the organization of the A. C. C. A. there has been much discussion as to the personnel of the directors of A. C. C. A. It is not a new thought. It has been discussed frequently a number of times with the directors of A. C. C. A. It has recently been brought directly to the attention of the directorate of A. C. C. A.'s member associations. No changes were made in the recent election held for directors.

There are generally certain objections found in any system. The good points against the bad must be considered. It is realized there are certain objections from the public's viewpoint as to an A. C. C. A. director being employed jointly by the member association and A. C. C. A.; however, it is the prerogative of the directors of the member associations to elect their directors to represent them on A. C. C. A. board. It is my belief that A. C. C. A. should have nothing more to say in regard to the matter, other than to approve the third alternative suggested by Mr. Herrmann in removing all managers from the pay roll of A. C. C. A., which, in my opinion, does not fully take care of the situation.

OTHER OPINIONS OF DIRECTORS ON CONTROL

That there seems to be a feeling among quite a number of directors that A. C. C. A. was exceeding the limits of its authority when it arbitrarily changed the boundary lines of associations, shifted counties from one association to another, or organized new associations is another evidence of a lack of real information on the part of those directors on the subject. A. C. C. A. has never initiated the formation of a new association. It has never recognized a new association without the approval and consent of the old association. It has never changed a boundary line of an association.

FUNCTIONS

Previous comment has been made regarding decentralization, as well as control. The expressed desire of two-thirds of the directors interviewed last fall on this subject is to a large extent in operation today. Some general managers do not have complete control of their operations in their respective associations. This may to some extent be because of A. C. C. A. executives' lack of belief in the general managers' ability to assume full responsibility, and to some extent it may be because of the executives of A. C. C. A. questioning to some extent the judgment of policies which might be inaugurated by State directors.

Prior to the beginning of our operation 6 years ago, board members and managers of member associations controlled activities within the area covered by their associations. For 2 years following the organization of A. C. C. A., member associations had complete control of the assembling of cotton other than the limits used in taking members' cotton, which was controlled by A. C. C. A. A review of the operations of member associations acting independently for the 6 years prior to A. C. C. A. as compared with the progress made during the past 6 years should in my opinion be a necessary study in considering control, decentralization, and functions.

Under Mr. Murray's management, and with full control of the policies adopted in assembling cotton, the Texas association in 2 years had a deficit of more than $300,000 in the operation which A. C. C. A. found it necessary to finance. Under the management of Mr. Jackson, the Mississippi association had a material loss in its operation during the 2 years of complete control in the assembling of cotton. The operation of south Texas with the consequent loss involved and the necessary financing by A. C. C. A. is a fair illustration of semicontrol. Mid-South operated on its own responsibility 1 year longer than did other associations. A substantial loss was incurred in those operations but fortunately Mid-South had assets to take care of the loss involved.

North Carolina has had complete independence of action for several years under the management of Mr. Blalock, and his successor Mr. Mann. A comparison of the progress made by the North Carolina association with other southeastern associations would, in my opinion, not indicate particularly sound reasons for complete autonomy on the part of the Southeastern States. It must be recognized that in the past 2 years Mr. Mann, general manager of the North Carolina association has faced extremely difficult operating conditions.

THE SOUTHEASTERN ASSOCIATIONS

Following the report of Fetrow and Herrmann in 1932, South Carolina accepted full responsibility for their operations and were financed by A. C. C. A. It was thought at the time that the South Carolina association would handle its business on the basis of a quick turn-over but the operation resulted in practically the same operation as heretofore conducted by A. C. C. A., and because of conditions in the Southeast, generally speaking, will have to be continued to a large extent whether conducted by member associations in Southeastern States or by A. C. C. A.

To attain volume sufficient to justify the overhead expenses of an association in the Southeast, experience has demonstrated that on any plan developed to date it has been necessary to take on more cotton during the harvesting season than can be sold during the same period. Under normal conditions a majority of the mills in the Southeast buy cotton direct from the producers during the harvesting season, leaving but small opportunity to the cooperatives for a quick turnover at cost plus per bale overhead expenses. During the spring and summer of normal seasons when the major portion of the crop has been marketed by the producer, the basis generally advances and liquidation of stocks received during the harvesting season is generally at satisfactory prices.

Because of the 12-cent loan in 1934 and the consequent scarcity of available spot cotton during the past 2 years, the situation to some extent has been changed in the Southeast, but the uncertainties of governmental policies regarding future loans and disposition of cotton financed have perhaps created even a more difficult situation.

The operation during the past 2 years by the management of the Georgia association and A. C. C. A.'s resident salesmen in Georgia in the quick turn-over of cotton at a low overhead cost demonstrates that progress can be made. During this season the management of Alabama, Georgia, and South Carolina, and in previous seasons Alabama and Georgia, have not alone been permitted but urged to handle cotton without regard to A. C. C. A.'s limit when it could be turned rapidly at cost plus per bale overhead expense. To that extent A. C. C. A. may have anticipated thoughts on decentralization, but as yet Alabama and South Carolina are problems to be further considered.

THE MIDDLE SOUTH AND SOUTHWEST

The general feeling among directors that member associations should have an opportunity to sell cotton through channels other than through the routine delivery to A. C. C. A. is again illustrative of the lack of information on the part of those directors. There is, and has been for the past 2 or 3 years, in the cross contract between A. C. C. A. and its member associations a provision permitting those member associations who wish to assume such responsibility to handle cotton and resell it to the trade. To a nominal extent several associations have in the past year or two taken advantage of this opportunity to serve their members.

From experience it is realized it is sometimes difficult to make some directors of member associations realize that in handling cotton through other sources for their members they must necessarily obtain in the transaction their estimated per bale overhead cost. In my opinion it has been demonstrated that it seldom happens that a sufficiently higher price than the basis offered by A. C. C. C. can be obtained to take care of the overhead expenses of the member associations.

To me it is both amusing and discouraging to realize the negative attitude taken by many of the directors of our member associations as is illustrated by "We found considerable complaint in the field during the past several seasons due to the fact that A. C. C. A.'s basis was in line only a few weeks during the season." Those same directors and their general managers will, in a moment of frankness, state that a great majority of members say: "We want the co-ops, but we must get the high dollar for our cotton."

Based on testimony given by W. L. Clayton at the recent Smith hearing, A. C. C. A. handled more cotton during the 1934–35 season than did Anderson, Clayton & Co. Their volume for 1935–36 is not available, but it is believed that A. C. C. A. has this year handled more cotton than Anderson, Clayton & Co. During the past 5 years A. C. C. A. has handled 11 percent of the crops produced, while Anderson, Clayton & Co. have handled only 13 percent, and yet some directors of our member associations complain of A. C. C. A. being in the market for a period of only a few weeks during the season.

A recent and to me a very powerful illustration as to the general negative position taken in our operation occurred at our last directors' meeting, just at the time the 12-cent loan liquidation had started. A great majority of our directors advised we were from 20 to 100 points out of line with our basis. We have to date handled some 125,000 bales of the 12-cent loan cotton, which is materially more than the usual percentage of volume handled by us, and yet we have reduced our basis several times.

While the education of the directorate of our member associations and the interior classers is conceded to be of importance, I think one of our weaknesses is the expectation on the part of our membership, some of our State directors, and perhaps some of the directors of A. C. C. A. that we can and should attain a measure of success which under present conditions is not possible and probably never will be within the realm of possibility. That those interested in the movement, from the members to the leaders, should have a full knowledge of the possibilities of the movement, is, in my opinion, essential.

I believe the continued propaganda on the part of the trade, reaching not alone to the public generally but to Congress, together with more or less disappointment as to the results achieved during the past 6 years, has placed the leaders of the movement on the defensive. It is probable the continued fight to some extent has had that effect on me and to that extent I have conveyed it to the leaders. No movement, cooperative or otherwise, will be a success if its leaders continually feel they are on the defensive. The Bankhead report and the comment thereon will, I hope, result in a decided change for the better with the leaders of the movement, with the public, and with Congress.

EXPENSES

Generally speaking, I believe with the exception of the Brazos Valley Association the service rendered by A. C. C. A. to member associations is much the same.

Prior to the beginning of the season a budget and estimated receipts prepared by the management of the member associations, and I presume approved by the directors, is submitted to the executives of A. C. C. A. for approval. With but few exceptions, we have found the management of the member associations anxious to cooperate in reducing expenses. The budgets made and finally approved are correct to the extent of our joint ability. The basis paid to members is based on an estimated per bale cost as ascertained by the budget and anticipated deliveries; therefore each member association receives the full benefit expected of efficient and inexpensive operation.

It is true the estimated expenses, after the budget is approved, vary for reasons not anticipated at the time, and it has been and will continue to be true that anticipated deliveries will vary with crop conditions, character of cotton, and the ability of A. C. C. A. to handle the cotton produced within any member association's territory. If member associations should receive the benefit of lower cost as compared with the budget, then other associations who, through perhaps no fault of their own, would necessarily have to become responsible for their higher cost per bale. This would necessarily lead to dissatisfaction, and, in my opinion, would cause an inequity in the treatment of our member associations.

Any manager of any member association who feels there is a tendency to use the full budget if it is available, that it is just like a governmental appropriation, is not suitable for the position he occupies. From my knowledge of the managers of the member associations and my experience in dealing with them, they appreciate and are just as keen to reduce expenses as is the management of A. C. C. A. Full realization of the progress made in reducing expenses can be had by a comparison of operations during the past 12 years. While there is room for improvement in both A. C. C. A. and its member associations' costs, progress has been made and will continue to be made along these lines.

It is true the cotton cooperatives are not financially able to fight all of the agricultural battles of the South single-handed, yet to the extent of the work which has been done, I believe generally that the cooperatives have been conducting the fight single-handed. Just how little or how much of this general legislative work should be done has not been definitely determined and is a matter deserving real consideration.

PROFITS ON COTTON

From an operating standpoint, it would materially decrease the efficiency of the sales organization to keep each member association's profit and loss account separate and distinct, and in my opinion it would prove to be an insurmountable obstacle to the success of the movement.

Sales are made during the beginning of the season and continue during the height of the season with the belief that certain qualities of cotton will be available in certain States. As an illustration, sales of Strict Middling fifteen-sixteenths inch and thirty-one thirty-seconds inch were made at the beginning of last season with the expectation of getting delivery from Texas Cotton Growers Association. Weather conditions were bad. Strict Middling in Texas was practically unavailable. The basis was advanced. Louisiana, Mississippi, and Mid-South deliveries were used to fill the order.

Many other illustrations could be given as to the objections from an operation standpoint for segregation of profit and loss. To a certain extent this was tried out in the Southwide Pool operation which I believe no one but the comptrollers and auditors of A. C. C. A. and member associations understood, and yet with the maze of technicalities in accounting successfully carried out, the operation was not successful and was discontinued.

In considering the individual expenses of member associations and the profit or loss on cotton of the individual member associations' operations, the thought occurs to me that if this is a necessary adjunct to cooperative marketing, should it not be equally necessary and advisable to keep the accounts in such a way that each member association's directors can be advised as to the expense and profit and loss occurring in the operation in their district? Would it not be equally proper to segregate the expenses and profit and loss from each classer's district and if it is carried that far, would it not be proper to segregate each member's deliveries as to expenses and profit or loss? It seems to me if cooperation and averaging is proper in the member association's territories, it should be equally proper and desirable to do so for all cotton-producing States.

ERNEST F. BRASS

Mr. POPE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 4713. It simply involves validating a town-lot certificate, and the enactment of the bill is recommended by the Department of the Interior by way of a correction. A very large improvement is being made in my State, and this particular property is involved in that improvement. It is an emergency matter.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, is this a House bill?

Mr. POPE. No; it is a Senate bill. It merely involves the correction of a record of the Department of the Interior, and authorizes the issuance of a patent on a certificate which has been heretofore issued. The Department recommends the enactment of the bill.

Mr. McNARY. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4713) validating a town-lot certificate and authorizing and directing issuance of a patent for the same to Ernest F. Brass, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys with amendments, on page 1, line 3, after the word "That", to insert "on payment of $63 in addition to the $135 already paid"; and on the same page, line 7, after the word "Idaho", to strike out "on payment of $135", so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That on payment of $63 in addition to the $135 already paid the town-lot certificate which was issued to Ernest F. Brass April 23, 1936, for lots 1, 2, 3, and 4, block 100; lots 1 and 2, block 102; and lots 6, 7, and 8, block 87; in the town site of Ketchum, Idaho, be, and the same is hereby, validated, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to issue a patent thereon.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INTERNAL-REVENUE TAXATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12395) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes.

Mr. KING obtained the floor.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I think we should have a quorum present. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK in the chair). Eighty-one Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it is a matter of profound regret that the chairman of the Committee on Finance, the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] is unable, because of illness, to present to the Senate the bill reported from the Committee on Finance which is now under consideration. He was prevented, because of the condition of his health, from participating in all of the activities of the committee connected with the hearings and the preparation of the measure now before us.

In view of his absence from the Senate today it falls to me to present the measure which has been prepared by the Committee on Finance, following extensive hearings and long and unusually thorough consideration.

The President requested in his message of March 3, 1936, that the Congress raise additional permanent revenue in the amount of $620,000,000 annually, and temporary revenue in the amount of $517,000,000. The need for the permanent revenue is due to the following causes:

First, $500,000,000 is needed annually to offset expenditures to be made under the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act; and Second, $120,000,000 is needed annually to pay amounts on the veterans' adjusted-service certificates due in 1945, but payable, under the Adjusted Compensation Act, beginning on June 15, 1936.

The temporary revenue of $517,000,000 represents the amount lost by the Government in the current fiscal year because of the invalidation of the Agricultural Adjustment Act. This temporary revenue is not required to be raised immediately, but the President called the attention of the Congress to the fact that this amount should be restored in some way to the Treasury even though the process of restoration might be spread over a period of several years.

While recognizing the authority of the Congress to determine the means of raising this additional revenue, the President invited attention to several forms of taxation. Briefly, these consisted of (1) a tax upon the undistributed income of corporations, and (2) a tax upon those taxpayers who received a windfall by shifting to others the burden of processing taxes which were impounded and returned to them, or which otherwise have remained unpaid, and (3) an excise tax upon the processing of certain agricultural commodities.

The House in its bill endeavored to carry out but two of the President's suggestions, namely, by imposing a tax upon undistributed corporate earnings, and a tax upon "unjust enrichment", but did not provide for any tax upon the processing of certain agricultural commodities. The Committee on Finance also decided against levying such processing taxes.

The committee has carefully considered the provisions of the House bill imposing a tax upon undistributed profits. The House plan completely eliminates the existing income tax on corporations, and continues in effect for a period of only 1 year the existing capital stock and excess-profits taxes.

The House bill abandons a plan tried and proven, which, even in periods of depression, yields an annual revenue of $1,100,000,000, for a plan not tested and uncertain as to its results. In other words, it throws away a certainty for an uncertainty and enters an experimental field at a time when revenues are needed to meet the enormous expenditures of the Government. The wisdom of such a course may well be doubted even by those who cherish unrealities.

The House bill imposes by a series of complicated schedules an undistributed profits tax upon corporations with a maximum rate of 42½ percent. Under this plan the rate of tax varies according to the dividend distributions of the corporation or according to the net income undistributed.

Three schedules are used in computing the tax. If the corporation has a net income of $10,000 or less, schedule I is used. If the corporation has a net income of $40,000 or more, schedule II is used. If the corporation has a net income between $10,000 and $40,000, the rate of tax is determined under schedule III or schedule II, whichever schedule gives the lesser tax.

The testimony of the witnesses who appeared before the Committee on Finance—and there were nearly 100—was practically unanimous against the House bill. My recollection is that out of this large number of witnesses there were but two or three, aside from several representatives of the Treasury Department, who approved the House plan. Those opposing the measure represented all branches of business, and most of them spoke for business organizations and enterprises of rather modest proportions.

During my 19 years of service in the Senate I have never seen such a united front against the enactment of revenue provisions. I have examined the record of the hearings before the Ways and Means Committee of the House, which reported the House bill, and nearly all of the 60 witnesses who testified—only 2 as I now remember—aside from a very limited number appearing for the Treasury Department, endorsed the bill.

During the hearings referred to it was shown that the House bill, with its varying schedules and its complicated relief provisions, will impose an undue burden both upon the taxpayer and the Treasury, and cause endless litigation. Moreover, it severely penalizes the small corporation, or the corporation just starting in business, which is not in a position to make dividend distributions to its shareholders. The fact that some of the small corporations might pay as little tax as that now imposed under existing law, does not remove this inequity, because corporations with large accumulated surplus could make dividend distributions without inconvenience, and thereby pay less tax than their less fortunate rivals.

In fact, many of the largest corporations in the country will pay little or no tax under the House bill, while their less fortunate competitors will be forced to pay much heavier taxes than those imposed on them by existing law. It also encourages monopoly, and makes it difficult for small companies to obtain adequate working capital, and has a tendency to encourage corporations to overcapitalize in order to retain earnings needed for reserves or business expansion. This creates a bad competitive condition and tends to stifle the growth and expansion of new business.

Corporations burdened with debt or with restrictions as to payments of dividends are heavily penalized under the House bill. While some attempt has been made to take care of debt-ridden and deficit corporations, the provisions are inadequate, and, in the case of many corporations, afford no relief at all. The House provisions also greatly complicate the present income-tax law, adding more than 21 pages of new matter.

After considering all the testimony submitted in connection with the House plan and its serious detrimental effect upon the stability of the revenues and upon business as a whole, the Finance Committee came to the conclusion that it could not recommend such a plan. Faced with this situation, we were constrained to seek and adopt a plan that would meet the situation.

The plan submitted by the Finance Committee, while it carries out the principle of the undistributed-profits tax, removes many of the complexities and inequities of the House bill. In the first place, the committee plan retains the existing corporation income tax with the graduated rates in the Revenue Act of 1935, but increases the rates by 3 percent. The following table compares the corporate rate under existing law with increased rate under the committee bill:

Corporate net incomes not in excess of $2,000 are taxed under existing law at 12½ percent and under the committee bill at 15½ percent.

Corporate net incomes in excess of $2,000 but not in excess of $15,000 are taxed at 13 percent under existing law and at 16 percent under the committee bill.

Corporate net incomes in excess of $15,000 but not in excess of $40,000 are taxed at 14 percent under existing law and at 17 percent under the committee bill.

Corporate net incomes in excess of $40,000 are taxed 15 percent under existing law and at 18 percent under the committee bill.

The committee at one time considered imposing a flat rate of 18 percent on corporate income as defined in the statute; but upon mature consideration it was decided that the smaller incomes should have the benefit of a lower rate in lieu of any exemption. This consideration is important for about 90 percent of all the corporations in the United States, since testimony shows that the income of about 90 percent of our corporations is $15,000 or less per year. In view of the small income of this large number of corporations, the committee considered, in the absence of any special exemption, that it might prove too heavy a burden to impose the flat 18-percent rate on the small incomes; that is, incomes of $15,000 or less.

Thus, by retaining the existing corporation tax your committee plan assures the Treasury of a certain amount of revenue which the House plan would have relinquished on the sheer possibility that it might be recovered through a new and untried plan. I say "untried" because only two countries in the world, so far as I am advised, have attempted that sort of a plan, and they have abandoned it.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. At that point in the discussion of the able Senator from Utah may I direct his attention to the fact that not only is the House plan untried but it certainly would not have the effect of raising the revenue for the next current year, because even if it forced out the undistributed earnings, the income from the higher surtaxes would not be reflected until the year after they were forced out.

Mr. KING. I thank the Senator from Georgia for his observation. It constitutes an additional reason, justifying the committee in failing to approve the House plan.

Mr. President, this does not seem an opportune time to risk certain revenues from corporate incomes which have been collected under a plan which has been the backbone of corporate taxation for many years. To substitute an untried plan, unfamiliar to Federal taxpayers, might cause endless controversy and litigation and result in failure to secure Federal revenues during a period when revenues are most needed. As just stated by the able Senator from Georgia, I think it will be conceded that the House plan would fail to produce the revenue which the President suggested should be secured. For the same reason your committee deemed it advisable to retain the capital-stock and excess-profits tax at existing rates.

In lieu of the drastic graduated undistributed profits tax of the House bill, your committee has recommended a flat tax of 7 percent upon undistributed profits. The committee realized that some difficulty has been experienced in reaching the incomes of recipients of large incomes by way of the accumulation of corporate profits in the treasury of corporations—that is to say, that with respect to a number of corporations—and these the greater ones—there appeared to have been a policy of accumulating surpluses in excess of any proper and legitimate requirements in order to enable stockholders of large incomes to avoid payment of the high rates imposed under the existing law upon incomes. To this practice the President referred in his message.

It is the view of the committee that a 7-percent surtax upon incomes retained by the corporations will be sufficient to induce such corporations materially to increase dividend payments, thus reducing their accumulated surpluses, coupled with the retention of section 351 of existing law imposing a surtax on personal holding companies and the strengthening of the provisions of section 102 imposing a surtax upon corporations accumulating surpluses to prevent the imposition of the surtax on their shareholders.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I inquire whether that 7 percent applies to all corporations, big and little?

Mr. KING. There are several classes or exemptions, among them, banks. A higher tax might induce corporations to pay out their surpluses improvidently; a lower tax might not be sufficient to cause them to pay out a proper portion of their annual earnings. A 7-percent surtax was arrived at after prolonged consideration. Some of the members of the committee considered that a 4-percent surtax would be sufficient to remedy the situation.

There were others who were of the opinion that a 10-percent tax was required and some of the members of the committee took the view that a graduated tax ranging from 10 percent to higher levels would be necessary. After much discussion and thorough consideration it was substantially unanimously agreed that the 7-percent flat rate was sufficient and that it would meet the necessities of the situation; of course, as Senators know, the Senate bill contains other revenue provisions which, under the 7-percent tax, will produce larger revenues than the House bill.

This tax applies to the undistributed net income of corporations, computed after deducting dividends paid during the taxable year. By this moderate rate your committee has been able to eliminate the complicated relief provisions of the House bill relating to debt and deficit of corporations. The provision of the House bill affording relief to corporations unable to pay dividends because of contracts entered into prior to March 3, 1936, has been retained in substance. Your committee has also deemed it advisable to allow as a credit against the income subject to the undistributed-profits tax the normal tax on corporations restored by your committee to the House bill. This prevents the Government from collecting a tax on a tax. No corporation ought to be forced to pay an undistributed-profits tax on amounts used to pay Federal taxes to the Government.

Your committee has continued the provisions of the House bill exempting from the undistributed-profits tax banks, corporations in bankruptcy and receivership, insurance companies, foreign corporations, China Trade Act corporations, and corporations doing business in possessions of the United States and subject to the provisions of section 251 of the bill. In addition your committee has also exempted trust companies under proper supervision of Federal or State authorities from the undistributed-profits tax.

Your committee has also adopted the provisions of the House bill making dividends subject to the normal tax in the hands of individuals, and providing that dividends received by corporations must be included in net income for the purposes of computing the 7-percent undistributed-profits tax.

The repeal of the existing exemption of dividends from the normal tax brought into agreement on that point the Ways and Means Committee and the Finance Committee. It was considered that in view of the necessity of raising an extraordinary amount of revenue, that dividend recipients within the income class could afford to pay the additional 4-percent normal tax. The exemptions for individuals remain the same, and only those individuals who receive dividends from corporations, and whose incomes are in excess of the exemptions allowed by law are required to pay this normal tax.

The committee bill also provides special relief to holding company affiliates of banks which, under the provisions of the Banking Act of 1933, are required to invest a part of their funds in readily marketable assets other than bank stocks.

Explanation of the importance of that provision is unnecessary.

These banks are given a credit against their income subject to the 7-percent tax of an amount equal to that part of their earnings and profits devoted during the taxable year to the acquisition of readily marketable assets other than bank stocks, as required by law. Your committee has eliminated the provision of the House bill denying a deduction in the case of the undistributed profits tax for dividends paid to corporations owning 50 percent or more of the stock of the payer corporation. This provision was inserted to prevent avoidance in the case of the high taxes imposed by the House bill.

In view of the moderate flat rate suggested by your committee on undistributed profits and the change made by the House making the dividend year correspond with the taxable year, such provision is no longer necessary. It operated unfairly in the case of corporations doing business in foreign countries which were forced under the laws of such countries to incorporate foreign subsidiaries, and raises a serious constitutional question as to its validity due to its arbitrary effect.

Your committee has restored to the House bill the provisions of existing law imposing a surtax on personal holding companies. This section has been very helpful in forcing distributions from certain closely held corporations so that the individual shareholders may be subject to surtaxes. In addition, your committee has strengthened the provisions of section 102, which imposes a graduated tax upon corporations accumulating profits for the purpose of avoiding the imposition of surtaxes. It requires every corporation, except personal holding companies, which retains more than 40 percent of its total income, or more than $15,000, whichever is greater, to include in its return a statement fully explaining the reason for accumulating earnings or profits. It also extends the statute of limitations for assessments and collection from 3 years to 4 years in the case of the tax imposed by section 102.

Your committee has increased by 1 percent the surtax rates on net incomes of individuals between $6,000 and $50,000. As a result of this increase, surtax net incomes in excess of $6,000 are taxed at 6 percent instead of 5 percent, the rate under existing law, and the 1-percent increase in rate continues up to and including surtax net incomes of $50,000, which are taxed at 28 percent instead of 27 percent, as provided in existing law.

It will be recalled that last year Congress imposed exceedingly heavy increases upon incomes above $50,000 a year. It was claimed then that in order to obtain a more harmonious and equitable adjustment of rates that there should be an increase in the tax rates upon incomes falling within the brackets between $6,000 and $50,000, and in order to secure additional revenue, and having in mind a more harmonious adjustment or leveling of the surtax rates, the Committee on Finance decided that some increase should be imposed upon incomes of less than $50,000 and more than $6,000 per year.

It is estimated that this change will increase the revenues between $50,000,000 and $60,000,000 annually.

Another important provision adopted by the committee is to limit the surtax on the portion of an individual's income attributable to the sale of oil or gas property, where the principal value of the property has been demonstrated by prospecting or exploration and discovery work done by the taxpayer, to 30 percent of the selling price of the property or interest. It was found that the result of the high surtaxes in such cases is to discourage individuals from embarking upon or continuing in such enterprises and to throw the business into the hands of corporations which are subject only to the corporation tax rate. The proposed change will encourage individuals to develop oil and gas properties and to sell them, thus stimulating the tax yield from this source.

Your committee has also inserted a provision which exempts common trust funds maintained under proper supervision of State or Federal authorities from taxation as such, but taxes the trusts participating in such fund as ordinary trusts are taxed. Under existing law common trust funds in which the funds of many individual trusts are commingled for purposes of investment are taxable as corporations. This discriminates against the small investor, as the common trust fund affords him an opportunity to obtain a more diversified investment than if his funds were confined to a separate trust. By the committee amendment the individual trusts are taxed like ordinary trusts with respect to their distributive shares in the common fund. This relieves many small investors whose incomes fall in the low brackets from having their funds reduced by a corporate tax.

Your committee has also added a provision to the House bill allowing a deduction from the gross estate for the purpose of the estate tax of proceeds of life-insurance policies payable to the United States in satisfaction of death taxes imposed by the Federal Government, if such policies do not exceed $1,000,000 and if the premium-paying period provided on the policy is not less than 10 years.

The so-called windfall tax contained in the House bill has in the main been adopted by your committee. However, several changes have been made to provide for a simple and more equitable determination of tax liabilities.

I digress here, Mr. President, to pay tribute to the able Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] for the great contribution which he made in working out what I conceive to be a simpler and more equitable plan than that appearing in the House bill for the solution of the problems incident to the processing taxes and the adjustment of claims and controversies resulting therefrom.

Your committee is also in general agreement with the provisions of the House bill relating to refunds in respect of exports, charitable distributions, and so forth, and floor stocks under the Agricultural Adjustment Act.

The committee has also recommended the adoption in this bill of provisions amending section 21 (d) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, relating to refunds of processing taxes under that act. These provisions were not prepared in sufficient time to be incorporated in the bill before it passed the House, but were subsequently included in a separate bill passed by the House.

In the case of foreign corporations your committee has also in substance followed the provisions of the House bill. A foreign corporation engaged in a trade or business within the United States, or having an office or place of business therein, was taxed under the House bill at the flat rate of 22.5 percent upon its net income from sources within the United States. Your committee changed this rate to 22 percent. Under the House bill dividends of such foreign corporations paid to foreign shareholders were not taxable to such shareholders unless 85 percent of their corporate gross income was derived from sources within the United States. Your committee has changed this provision of the House bill and requires that dividends paid by a foreign corporation to its foreign shareholders shall be taxable to the foreign shareholders if the foreign corporation derives 50 percent or more of its gross income from sources within the United States. However, so as not to impose an undue burden upon the foreign corporation, it is not required to withhold dividends paid to its foreign shareholders unless 85 percent of the gross income of such foreign corporation is from sources within the United States.

In the case of a foreign corporation not engaged in trade or business within the United States, and not having an office or place of business therein, the House bill levied a flat tax of 15 percent on the gross income of such corporation from interest, dividends, rents, salaries, wages, and other fixed and determinable income from sources within the United States, not including capital gains, the tax being collected in the usual case by withholding at the source. Your committee has changed the rate on such income from 15 percent to 18 percent. In the case of dividends the rate has been changed to 5 percent in the case of corporations organized under the laws of contiguous countries, and 10 percent in the case of other foreign corporations.

The House provision taxing foreign banks 15 percent on their net income from banking business in the United States has been changed so that foreign banks are taxed in the same manner as other foreign corporations doing business in the United States; that is, at the flat rate of 22 percent. It has been shown that these banks are commonly limited by law to the receipt of deposits from foreigners, and their income is too inconsiderable to warrant special treatment.

The House bill changes the method of taxing nonresident aliens and foreign corporations. A nonresident alien not engaged in a trade or business in the United States, or not having an office or place of business therein, is taxed at a flat rate of 10 percent on his income from interest, dividends, rents, wages, salaries, and other fixed or determinable income, which are collected at the source. In the case of such nonresident aliens living in countries contiguous to the United States the tax rate has been reduced by your committee from 10 percent to 5 percent to conform more nearly to the rates imposed upon our citizens by contiguous countries. These nonresident aliens are exempted under the House bill from the tax on capital gains, including hedging transactions, it being found administratively almost impossible to collect the capital-gains tax in such cases. This exemption will result in increased revenue from transfer taxes or from the income tax in the case of persons carrying on the brokerage business.

Nonresident aliens engaged in a trade or business in the United States or having an office or place of business in the United States, are taxed like American citizens with respect to income from sources within the United States, except that they are only entitled to a personal exemption of $1,000 unless residents of contiguous countries, in which case the $400 credit for dependents is also allowed. The House bill confined the $1,000 exemption to income from wages and salaries and did not allow the $400 credit in the case of residents of contiguous countries. Your committee has also added a provision exempting a nonresident alien from tax on income derived from labor or services performed in the United States under a contract of employment with a nonresident alien individual or a foreign partnership or corporation, provided such services are rendered by such nonresident alien for a period not exceeding 90 days during the taxable year and the aggregate compensation for such service does not exceed $3,000. This permits residents of other countries to make brief visits to the United States for business purposes, such as the buying and selling of goods, without being subject, before leaving the country, to a demand for payment of tax on their compensation during the period of their stay here. The tax involved is rather small, and the attempt to collect it has created irritation and ill will disproportionate to the slight amounts involved.

I might add to what I have said, the consideration moving the committee in its deliberations was, first, the necessity for additional revenues, and, second, the recognition of the fact that the Government has been contributing large sums to the maintenance of the volume of business in our country, and in order to do so has been put to the necessity of extensive borrowing. In view of this fact it seemed but fair to increase the rates of the general corporate tax in order that the Government might recapture a fair share of profits created by its own acts and derived from the credit of the Government. It is quite clear that the Congress has been proceeding to deal with the difficulties of the depression by way of what is technically described as public-loan expenditure, and when this plan of meeting the demands of the depression was decided upon it was in contemplation that the Government should, in a measure, recoup over a period of years, in order to derive sufficient revenue not only to discharge its interest account but also to amortize its obligations and pay them off. Now that there has been a gratifying increase in the volume of business, in the circulation of money, and in the earnings of business enterprises it is believed by many that we should increase the corporate rates with the view of taking reasonably, from the profits of corporations, sufficient sums to protect the public credit, and ultimately to discharge the great obligations which the Government took upon itself and out of which business and enterprise have been enabled to recover to a very great extent.

Under all the circumstances it is deemed necessary that additional revenue be obtained. One reputable witness testified that the volume of business in our country had grown and was growing at such a rate that he believed that we might raise the additional revenue needed without increasing rates or writing a tax bill. The committee took this into consideration, but it could not take the risk of this opinion, fortified as it was by weight and merit. We recognize, to be sure, that there has been considerable increase in the volume of business, and that this increase bids fair to continue at least for a year or more, and, perhaps, for a longer period, as is to be hoped. However, the Congress is confronted with the simple fact that by its own act it has anticipated the maturity of the soldiers' adjusted-compensation certificates, and the Treasury is now issuing bonds on this account to the extent of $2,000,000,000. None of us think it wise to increase the public debt at one stroke by such a sum without making sufficient provisions for the payment of interest and the amortization of the debt.

That was also the view of the President of the United States. It is feared that if we should fail to do this the present confidence in the Government credit might be impaired; and we also recognize the necessity of balancing the Budget, or at least of setting up a plan of revenue raising which will look in that direction. Those who have advocated the necessity of balancing the Budget—and practically all businessmen have taken this position—cannot afford to dissent from the view that with increasing appropriations there must be increasing taxes, and that the increase of taxes must at least be sufficient and sufficiently sure to justify the expectation that shortly we will be reducing our debt and in the meantime we will be meeting all the demands of our public credit.

As I have pointed out, a further reason for immediate action lies in the fact that the Agricultural Adjustment Act was held unconstitutional on January 6 of the present year. Under this act expenditures had been contracted to the extent of about $517,000,000. These expenditures were based upon the processing taxes which were extinguished by the decision of the United States Supreme Court. Congress considered it proper that the farm program should be carried on, and on this account it was necessary to look for new revenue to the extent of $500,000,000 annually to carry out the soil-conservation program. It was the opinion of both the Ways and Means Committee and the Committee on Finance that processing taxes were not justified by the situation.

Conceding that the policy had worked reasonably well, it seemed quite clear that the policy of imposing taxes upon the production of the necessaries of life—meat, bread, and clothing—could not be justified. There had been a rather rapid increase in the cost of living, which had reached a point where the increase tended to work real hardship. The rise in the price of meat and of bread and of cotton goods has been borne because the rise was from a very low point. But it was thought that the very principle of an indirect sales tax at high rates would, in the not distant future, work out an unsatisfactory situation. On the other hand, it was the view of the Senate committee, at any rate, and I think of the House committee and the House, that the time had come to spread the burden of this revenue over the whole structure of incomes and profits, rather than upon particular articles of manufacture.

These were the principal considerations inducing the committee not to recommend the resort to processing taxes, but rather to look in the direction of general taxes. I believe the Senate will agree with the committee that this was the sound and more reasonable course.

It is not contended by the committee that the proposed legislation will actually balance the Budget, but it must be recalled that in the Budget submitted by the President to Congress a balance was set up in contemplation of excluding the necessities of public relief; that is to say, the President proposed within 2 years to balance the Budget, and held out the hope in the meantime that demands for relief would be so reduced that the lack of balance on this account would be extinguished. We cannot tell just what the demands for relief may be, or how long they will exist, but the progress made in the last 3 years justifies the hope that within a year or 2 years business and employment will be reasonably restored to normal. It is an interesting fact that the most reliable charts of production now show that the volume of production, including textiles, electrical energy, automobiles, car loadings, lumber, and steel is equal to the volume of production as of the 1st of July 1930, and the index, as I am advised, continues to rise. If this rate of progress shall be maintained, it is altogether within the possibilities that the revenue now proposed to be raised will be sufficient to carry us through the further period of demands for relief and thereafter may be sufficient to justify an annual process of amortization with the view to reducing the public debt.

This may be an optimistic view, but undoubtedly the country is recovering, and it is not unlikely that the recovery will be accelerated with the income from corporations in the present year and the public spending which will certainly go on for at least 12 months. The committee accepted the view that such legislation is warranted, and, while the rates imposed may seem high, they are deemed necessary. They will at any rate tend to stabilize the public credit and to prevent any impairment of confidence, and they are certainly not high enough greatly to interfere with the progress of business. We could not afford to assume the view taken by an important witness that business is recovering to such an extent as to produce sufficient revenue on the present base, but the view taken by that witness at least justifies the optimistic hopes to which I have just given expression. Certainly, should the volume of business continue to increase and the demands for relief be reduced, we may hold out the hope to the taxpayers that there will be a reduction in rates and that there will be a balancing of the Budget.

I invite attention to the portion of the bill relating to what is known as the "windfall" tax. The Senate is familiar with this subject. Under the Agricultural Adjustment Act a great many processing-tax payers either withheld the tax or impounded the tax in courts. Some of them profited by this process; some did not. Certainly the taxes were imposed with the view to having them passed on to the consumers; and when it appeared that the failure of the Agricultural Adjustment Act under the decision of the Supreme Court had brought about the return of immense sums to taxpayers who had not borne the burden of these taxes but had passed them on to their purchasers, it became necessary to prevent any unjust enrichment of these parties at the expense of their purchasers. The section of the proposed legislation now before us which relates to this subject is not intended to take one dollar from any processing-tax payer who should not pay. The procedure is arranged with great care to distinguish those who withheld the tax for their own treasuries and for their own profits from those who paid the tax, and abundant provision is made where every processing-tax payer may show his costs and prove his case.

The principle followed is simply stated. Where taxes were withheld which should have come to the Treasury, the means are provided for the recovery of them. Where taxes were withheld which were really paid by consumers, it is recognized that the consumer is the real party in interest; but where taxes were not so withheld and where they did not enhance unjustly the profits of processing taxpayers; that is, where they were actually paid to the Government or where recoveries of taxes impounded were reflected in reduced prices under contract or otherwise, abundant provision is made for a just disposal. I may say that the estimate of the Treasury is that this proposed legislation will recover to the Treasury about $82,000,000. I wish to emphasize as strong as I can the terms of the legislation providing a procedure in this important matter under which justice will be done to all concerned.

The committee well understands that the imposition of a large volume of taxes at this time is not an agreeable thing, either to the Congress or to the taxpayers. This measure is proposed because by many it is deemed wise to secure stabilization of business and the protection of the good credit of our Government. It is also regarded by many as a just measure in view of the fact that the Government itself has now for 3 years, by liberal use of its credit, proved a great source of direct business stimulation throughout the land. We have provided for building, for the refinancing of mortgages, for the purchase of homes, and for the necessities of public relief, thereby increasing buying power.

We have provided considerable subsidies or benefit payments to our farmers; we have provided employment, and all of these provisions have brought money to the treasuries of business enterprises throughout the country. If the stimulation of trade had been derived otherwise, these taxes might not be deemed necessary, but the committee believes that business generally throughout the country—since, in the last analysis, it benefits directly and indirectly, as I have indicated, and since, as a matter of fact, it has made a great recovery and owes no small measure of this recovery to the public-loan expenditures—now that conditions have improved, should be called upon to share its profits in a larger measure, and that the more prosperous should be called upon to share their incomes in a larger measure to the end that the Government, which has been responsible to some degree for the increased profits and income, may not only protect its credit and meet its interest charges but may look forward to the time when a plan of amortization will enable it, year by year, to reduce the great burden which it has undertaken.

Before closing I wish to say something about the estimates of the bill. Conservative estimates indicate that the committee bill will yield about $829,000,000, as compared with the yield of $803,000,000 claimed under the House bill. This is $26,000,000 more than the House bill and will amply take care of the permanent revenue of $620,000,000 requested by the President and the temporary revenue for the next fiscal year. The balance of the temporary revenue, namely, $308,000,000, may be provided for at the next session of Congress in the light of conditions then existing.

As I have indicated, the President stated that this amount might be spread over 2 or 3 years. That view was accepted by both the Senate and House committees. In reaching the conclusions respecting the revenue yield, due consideration was given to the Treasury estimates. The committee also gave consideration to the estimates submitted by its own experts, particularly Mr. Parker, who has for years been of incalculable aid to the Committee on Finance. In the report submitted by the committee the Senators will find a statement based upon the Treasury estimates indicating that they were made in an abundance of caution, and that reasonably we may expect, if the Senate bill shall be enacted into law, that the full amount of at least $829,000,000 will be raised in addition to the existing revenue.

I sincerely hope we are entering the time when the public expenditures may be rapidly reduced. Certainly the time is coming when we should reduce expenditures. I think it is not improper to suggest that every time we appropriate money we make taxes necessary.

I am emphasizing this not for the purpose of criticizing the administration or any officials of the administration. The public has demanded the enormous expenditures which have compelled the imposition of additional taxes.

I sometimes fear that we have fallen into a habit of generously making great appropriations which appear to be popular at the time without reflecting that every dollar we appropriate must come out of the pockets of the American people. We lay to our hearts the flattering unction that the appropriations go for the benefit of the workers and the poor, and the taxes come from the rich. This by many is regarded as a fallacy, and no fallacy could be more fatal to the Government than this fallacy. Conceding that some forms of taxes may not be passed on, we must also recognize that these forms by no means produce more than a small modicum of the necessary revenue. By far the larger portion of the taxes, whether levied by way of tariff, excises, capital stock, corporate income, or individual income, drift out and fall upon the workers and the farmers.

We cannot employ everybody in Government employment. To turn the income of the American people into the channels of public salaries and activities is an impossibility. Some must work to create wealth, and it is from the creation of wealth that governments derive their revenue. Governments derive nothing from their own operations. They may conserve wealth, but they do not create it; and, after all, those who labor and toil are the producers of the wealth from which the public revenue is derived.

To lay a tax with the view to taxing the rich and helping the poor is beautiful theory; but in the last analysis there cannot be enough rich, there cannot be enough fortunes, to pay the tax. Sooner or later the burden falls upon the back of the toiler, increases his rent and thereby depresses his wage, increases the cost of his daily food and thereby further decreases his wages, and, unfortunately, often throws him out of work and deprives him of his all.

The best way to deal with revenue is to make it unnecessary to raise it. We could not do this at this time for manifest reasons. Those who criticize us for not doing it would probably be the first to criticize us if we did it. But certainly we have reached the point when we must realize that the appropriation of money means the writing of tax bills. We must also realize that with an annual revenue now of $5,000,000,000 or more, not to mention the taxes paid from counties, cities, and States, and especially in view of the considerable measure of recovery, the time is at hand for Congress to be even slower in making great appropriations than it is in passing great tax bills.

Mr. President, I hope in the consideration of the bill we may hold to the recommendations of the committee and pass the bill as speedily as possible.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

INTERNAL-REVENUE TAXATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12395) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes.

Mr. KING. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that it be read for amendment, the amendments of the committee to be first considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MOORE in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, has the Senator given consideration to passing over titles I and II, which involve the taxes, considering the amendments to the other titles, and then coming back to titles I and II? I suggest that course.

I have been approached, as I am sure the Senator from Utah has, by members of the committee, who have not yet been able to familiarize themselves with the report, which became available only this morning; and it seems to me it would give more time for Senators to study the report if we could pass on these so-called minor amendments and come back finally to the crux of the whole bill, which is involved in the rates.

Mr. KING. I assent to that view. A number of Senators have spoken to me with regard to these matters, especially my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. It seems to me the request which they have submitted is reasonable, and I readily assent to it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BLACK. It seems to me that in addition to Senators having time to read the report they should have made available to them the hearings before the Senate committee. That has not yet been done; and, in my judgment, it is wholly and completely impossible for Senators to pass upon the real issue involved in the tax bill unless there are made available to the Senate the complete hearings, both in executive session and otherwise, showing the way in which the taxing feature of our law has worked out in actual practice with reference to the individuals and corporations about whom reports were made to the committee.

I therefore ask unanimous consent that all the hearings, both in executive session and otherwise, be made available for the use of the Senate in connection with the study of the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have no objection to the hearings not in executive session, the testimony of witnesses, and so forth, being made public; but, without consulting with the other members of the committee, I cannot assent to the latter part of my friend's request.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I understand that the public hearings have already been printed and are available to any Member who wishes them.

Mr. KING. Yes; to anyone who desires them.

Mr. BLACK. It is true that the public hearings are available, and I am not complaining about the Senator's statement that he wishes to take up the matter with the other members of the committee; but I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that Senators cannot begin to get a picture of the tax evasion and tax avoidance which have been going on in this country unless they have made available for their use the hearings in executive session, showing how some corporations have evaded the payment of taxes, or have held back dividends which, if distributed, would have resulted in the payment of millions of dollars of taxes to the Federal Government; showing how some individuals, by reason of the tax device which is used, have themselves been able to escape sometimes as much as 50 percent of the total tax which otherwise would have been paid to the Government, in some instances amounting to more than a million dollars to an individual.

Therefore I request that the Senator from Utah, as soon as possible, take up the matter with the committee, in order that the Senate may have made available to it that which the Senate committee had, and which, of course, the Senate itself is entitled to have.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, following the suggestion which I made awhile ago, and which has not yet taken concrete form, I ask unanimous consent that titles I and II be temporarily passed over, and that the amendments beginning with title III be first considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield to enable me to present briefly another matter?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator knows that we are very anxious to secure action upon the tax bill as soon as possible, because it is probably an impediment to speedy adjournment. Does the Senator from Oklahoma think the matter he has in mind is of sufficient importance to justify interrupting the consideration of the tax bill?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. The District of Columbia appropriation bill at the moment is blocked, and unless something is done to secure an adjustment of the differences between the two Houses the Congress may find itself in an embarrassing position some time in the latter days of the session. It is in the hope of providing a plan for adjustment of those differences that I ask for a few moments' consideration at the hands of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. KING. How long will the matter take?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Just a very few minutes.

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator for that purpose.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, in the consideration of the District of Columbia appropriation bill one item has come in for especial consideration between the Senate conferees and the House conferees. Three items in the bill are in controversy, but only one is offering a bar to making progress.

The first of the three items is the amount of the Federal contribution toward the support of the District of Columbia government.

In former years the Federal Government appropriated one-half of the amount necessary to conduct the affairs of this city, the appropriation being on what is known as the 50–50 basis. At a later time a law was passed to change the appropriation from the 50–50 to the 60–40 basis, the Federal Government appropriating 40 percent and the District raising by taxation 60 percent of the total amount necessary. That is the law today; but the law is not being observed. At a later date the amount of the Federal contribution was fixed at a lump sum of $9,000,000 per year. Later on that was cut to $8,000,000; and during the past several years the amount has been fixed at $5,700,000.

In this year's appropriation bill the House of Representatives reduced the Federal contribution from the Budget estimate of $5,700,000 to $2,700,000. In the Senate the action taken was to restore the full amount of the Budget estimate, $5,700,000. The House conferees insist that they will not yield and will not consent to having more than $2,700,000 paid for this purpose by the Federal Government; and, until the Senate conferees have more information, to date they have not been willing to recommend that the Federal contribution be made less.

The Senate committee had rather exhaustive hearings, which tended to show that the total tax paid by the residents of the District of Columbia is relatively high—in fact, the third highest of any city in the entire United States. Of all the cities in the country, the residents of only two pay a higher per-capita tax than do the residents of the city of Washington. It is over that point that the conferees are in disagreement. The House takes the position that the taxpayers of Washington do not pay as heavy a tax as do the taxpayers of other cities. The position taken by the Senate conferees is that the residents of this city pay the third highest per-capita tax of the residents of any city in the entire United States. It is over that point, in the main, that the conferees of the two bodies are in disagreement.

Mr. President, in order to solve the matter for this session and for future sessions, it has been suggested that a commission be appointed to make a thorough study and survey of the fiscal relations between the District of Columbia and the Federal Government. Such a commission, it has been suggested, should be composed of three eminent, qualified citizens, not of the District of Columbia, one to be appointed by the President of the United States, one to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and one to be appointed by the President of the Senate; that these three commissioners be authorized, with a liberal contribution for expenses, to make a survey and to make a report to the President by January 1 next, at which time the President will consider the report, and upon that report base his recommendation, in the form of a Budget estimate, which will come to the two Houses in January. At that time the two Houses, having the report from the commission, will be better able to say how much, if anything, the Federal Government should contribute to the support of the District of Columbia.

Mr. President, that is the substance of the statement I desired to make, and following that statement I introduce, if I may, a joint resolution, which, if agreed to, will provide for the appointment of the commission to which I have referred. I think that before the conferees of the two bodies can make any progress we must provide for such a system of coming to some conclusion at this session, and for future sessions, and it is in the hope of having such a commission appointed, which will furnish Congress unbiased, unprejudiced information upon which it can act, that I introduce the joint resolution.

I first ask permission to introduce the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the joint resolution is received.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I have the support of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS]. I have discussed the matter briefly with the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] and with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE]. I have not conferred with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES], although he was present when the matter was discussed. I ask that the joint resolution be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will read.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 279) establishing a commission to make a study and report with respect to the fair and equitable amount to be paid by the United States toward the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Joint resolution establishing a commission to make a study and report with respect to the fair and equitable amount to be paid by the United States toward the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes

Whereas (a) the 1937 District of Columbia appropriation bill is now in conference; (b) the Budget estimate for the Federal contribution toward the support of the District of Columbia is $5,700,000; (c) the House of Representatives reduced said Budget estimate to $2,700,000; (d) the Senate approved said Budget estimate in the sum of $5,700,000; (e) the two Houses are in disagreement over the amount of such Federal contribution: Therefore, in order to adjust the difference between the House and Senate on said item, be it

Resolved, etc., That the conferees of the respective Houses are hereby authorized and directed to agree to the Budget estimate in the sum of $5,700,000 as the Federal Government's contribution to the support of the District of Columbia for the 1937 fiscal year; and be it further

Resolved, That there is hereby established a commission, to be known as the Commission on Federal Expenditures for the District of Columbia (hereinafter referred to as the Commission) to be composed of three members to be appointed as follows: One member, the chairman, to be appointed by the President, one member to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and one member to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives. No person shall be eligible for appointment as a member of the Commission who is a resident of the District of Columbia or who is, directly or indirectly, the owner of or interested in any real or other property in the District of Columbia. The members of the Commission shall be paid such compensation for their services as shall be fixed by the President, and shall receive their necessary traveling and subsistence expenses while engaged in the work of the Commission.

SEC. 2. It shall be the duty of the Commission to study and report to the President, not later than January 1, 1937, the fair and equitable amount to be paid by the United States as a contribution toward the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and the Commission shall include in such report its recommendations with respect to a fair and equitable formula for the annual computation of the amount of such contribution for succeeding fiscal years. The Commission is authorized to make such surveys and conduct such investigations as it may deem necessary and advisable for carrying out the purposes of this resolution.

SEC. 3. The Commission is authorized, without regard to the civil-service laws, to employ, and, without regard to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, to fix the compensation of, such employees and assistants, and to make such expenditures, as may be necessary for carrying out the purposes of this resolution. The Commission is further authorized to request information from any officer, department, or agency of the United States or the District of Columbia to aid it in carrying out such purposes, and all such officers, departments, and agencies are hereby authorized and directed to supply such information upon request.

SEC. 4. For carrying out the purposes of this resolution, there shall be made available immediately, out of the amount of the contribution by the Federal Government toward the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, the sum of $50,000.

SEC. 5. The budget for the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, may be submitted to the Congress without any provision therein as to the amount of the Federal contribution toward the expenses of such District for that fiscal year, but the President, upon receipt of the final report of the Commission, shall transmit the same to the Congress, together with his recommendation as to the amount of such Federal contribution, if any, for that fiscal year.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I have not conferred with the leader of the majority and the leader of the minority, but if they have no objection to the joint resolution, I ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the Senator from Oklahoma presents a very important matter, and no one has had notice. It proposes an unusual thing, such as I have never heard of in the years I have been a Member of this body, namely, directing a conference to agree upon a specific sum of money in the way of an appropriation.

I shall object to the consideration of the joint resolution at this time. It is an unusual proposal. The appointment of the commission is all right, but directing a conference to agree upon a certain Budget estimate would take away all liberty of the conference, and would give a direction that is unheard of. I object to the consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, if objection is made, of course I appreciate what that means. The House of Representatives has instructed its conferees to insist on a Federal contribution of $2,700,000, and of course they are bound by that instruction. They will not yield in the absence of the Senate taking some action.

The position of the Senate conferees is predicated upon the amount included in the District of Columbia appropriation bill by the Senate, $5,700,000. But with the record which has been made by the Senate, the Senate conferees are unwilling to yield and accept the $2,700,000.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, why is this conference different from any other which occurs from day to day? There is one way to proceed, and that is measured by the rules of the Senate. I shall insist upon that procedure.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, unless the Senate will provide some plan to break the present deadlock, we will be in session indefinitely, or we will adjourn with no funds provided to conduct the affairs of the District of Columbia. The responsibility for providing such funds rests upon the Congress. Under the Constitution and under the law the Congress is to regulate and control the District of Columbia and to legislate for it. The responsibility is placed upon our shoulders by the Constitution. Unless we can agree upon an appropriation, there will be no appropriation. If we can submit to the House conferees a plan whereby we can let them agree to a larger contribution than they are willing now to agree to, on condition that next year, if they are right in their stand, they will have the data upon which to predicate the correctness of their statement, that may be a solution of the problem. If it is true that the District of Columbia is undertaxed, the proposed commission will find that fact, and, in the end, the House position will be justified. On the other hand, if the commission shall find that the District is overtaxed, then the Senate will be sustained.

The conferees cannot agree to the matter, because in conference the House conferees set up their viewpoint and the Senate conferees set up the Senate's viewpoint, and these two viewpoints are in contradiction.

We cannot take the proposed action in conference. We cannot attach such a joint resolution as I have proposed to the conference committee report, because it would be legislation upon an appropriation bill. So this joint resolution is proposed on behalf of the Senate conferees as a plan whereby we can probably secure an adjustment of this difference; at least, that is our hope.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the procedure is so anomalous as to almost challenge my humor. This is not the only bill which has ever been in conference, and this is not the only conference which has ever been held between the House and Senate. Frequently there is disagreement. The Senator from Oklahoma has had some experience along that line and knows what the procedure is. He can bring in a conference report and ask for further instructions. If he desires to present an entirely new situation, as he seems to desire, that can be done by a joint resolution. If it is desired that a board be appointed, that should not be coupled up with instructions as to how a conference shall be handled and what recommendation the conferees shall make.

Let the Senator follow what has been the uniform practice of the Senate and the House for years—bring back a conference report, either in agreement or disagreement, and if he desires to go further, let him present his proposed legislation, as is always done, by some form of joint resolution. I shall adhere to my views and oppose this sort of procedure.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, what I have presented is exactly what the Senator has suggested, a joint resolution, offered in an attempt to adjust the difficulty.

Mr. McNARY. Yes; it is a joint resolution, but the ridiculous part is that it attempts to adjust a conference disagreement by a joint resolution. That is what I object to, and I insist on my objection.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. With all of his experience, Mr. President—and we know how great that is—the Senator from Oregon has never had such an experience as the conferees have had for the past several years in connection with the District bill.

I wish to say a very few words. I hope to be within the rules in saying them. I do not desire to reflect on the other House. However, I say that it is utterly impossible for the conferees to reach any conclusion regarding this matter.

I myself think the chairman of the committee is entirely right in the position he has taken. We cannot hope to obtain an agreement, and the House has done the unusual thing of adopting a resolution saying that its conferees must not change the figure. The Senate conferees are satisfied that the affairs of the District cannot be properly conducted on any such figure as is proposed by the House. The whole matter hinges on whether or not the taxpayers of the District are properly assessed. I think there must be found—if not today, there must very soon be found—some way of adjustment. Otherwise, I think the chairman is entirely right in saying that an agreement is out of the question, and then we shall adjourn without having taken any action whatever.

Mr. McNARY. If an agreement is out of the question and is impossible of attainment, what could be accomplished by a joint resolution of the kind now proposed if the House is going to maintain its position?

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I may suggest to the Senator from Oregon that yesterday, as a member of the conference committee, I participated in the conference with the House conferees; and while the text of this joint resolution was not agreed to, it was agreed that only by such a plan could we obtain facts upon which we could ever agree in the future.

Mr. McNARY. I agree that there is good reason for the legislative proposal to appoint a board to collect, gather, and discover the facts. A joint resolution proposing such action could be introduced by itself. I should at this moment withhold all objection if the joint resolution went only that far; but I should not and I cannot permit myself to consent to an instruction being coupled with the joint resolution, directed at a certain specific sum which we should determine.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, the House conferees come to the conference and say, "We have been instructed by the House to stand firm for $2,700,000, and until you are instructed to stand firm for $5,700,000 we are going to demand that you accept our terms." It is to meet that argument that the joint resolution was framed as it was.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield, so that I may answer that statement?

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I dislike to do so. I shall call for the regular order, because it is obvious that we are getting nowhere with the joint resolution.

Mr. McNARY. May I answer the question just proposed?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; I will withhold my demand and yield to the Senator for that purpose.

Mr. McNARY. As I stated a moment ago, the remedy is to bring back to the Senate a report of disagreement and ask for further instructions from the Senate.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, I shall make one more statement, and then I shall have concluded.

It was my hope to have the joint resolution passed and let it go to the House, where they would probably strike out of the measure the sum of $5,700,000 and insert $2,700,000. Then the joint resolution would come back to the Senate. Then I thought, perhaps, the joint resolution would be sent to the same conference committee which was responsible for it. Then we could adjust the amount in the joint resolution to the amount in the bill. That was my hope and my plan. If that does not work, I shall fail.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I repeat, why does not the Senator bring in a report of disagreement, and ask the Senate further to instruct the Senate conferees, and insist that the sum of money provided by the Senate be appropriated?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the joint resolution will lie on the table.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield to me for a moment?

Mr. GEORGE. I yield.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator from Oklahoma, with amazing patience, held hearings on this bill for a month. He has been trying for a considerable time to get an agreement on the bill in conference. The House has taken a position supporting its conferees. I contend, Mr. President, that we cannot do less in the Senate than to give the support to our chairman that the House has given to its chairman in this particular matter, and I hope that on the morrow the Senator from Oregon will think it may be possible to have favorable consideration on the joint resolution.

Mr. McNARY. Why does not the committee do in this case as it does in all cases—report a disagreement and ask for further instructions? If that is done, I guarantee, so far as I can do so with my own vote, that the Senate will instruct the conferees to insist upon the amount of money it appropriated.

The report was agreed to.

INTERNAL-REVENUE TAXATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12395) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, the first amendment in order is on page 242, in title III, the other titles having been temporarily passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the first committee amendment on page 242.

The first amendment was, under the heading "Title III—Tax on unjust enrichment", in section 501, tax on net income from certain sources, on page 242, line 18, after the word "others", to insert "to any extent"; and in line 19, after the word "tax", to insert "and which does not exceed such person's net income for the entire taxable year from the sale of articles with respect to which such Federal excise tax was imposed", so as to read:

(a) The following taxes shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year (in addition to any other tax on net income), upon the net income of every person which arises from the sources specified below:

(1) A tax equal to 80 percent of that portion of the net income from the sale of articles with respect to which a Federal excise tax was imposed on such person but not paid which is attributable to shifting to others to any extent the burden of such Federal excise tax and which does not exceed such person's net income for the entire taxable year from the sale of articles with respect to which such Federal excise tax was imposed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 242, after line 21, to strike out:

(2) A tax equal to 80 percent of that portion of the net income from reimbursement for Federal excise-tax burdens received by such person from vendors, which is equivalent to the amount of such Federal excise-tax burden which such person in turn shifted to vendees.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

(2) A tax equal to 80 percent of the net income from reimbursement received by such person from his vendors of amounts representing Federal excise-tax burdens included in prices paid by such person to such vendors, to the extent that such net income does not exceed the amount of such Federal excise-tax burden which such person in turn shifted to his vendees.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 243, after line 9, to insert the following:

(3) A tax equal to 80 percent of the net income from refunds or credits to such person from the United States of Federal excise taxes erroneously or illegally collected with respect to any articles, to the extent that such net income does not exceed the amount of the burden of such Federal excise taxes with respect to such articles which such person shifted to others.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 243, after line 16, to insert the following:

(b) The net income specified in subsection (a) (1), (2), or (3) shall not include the net income from the sale of any article, from reimbursement with respect to any article, or from refund of Federal excise tax with respect to any article (1) if such article (or the articles processed therefrom) were not sold by the taxpayer on or before the date of the termination of the Federal excise tax; (2) if the taxpayer made a tax adjustment with respect to such article (or the articles processed therefrom) with his vendee; or (3) if under the terms of any statute the taxpayer would have been entitled to a refund from the United States of the Federal excise tax with respect to the article otherwise than as an erroneous or illegal collection (assuming, in case the tax was not paid, that it had been paid).

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 244, after line 5, to strike out:

(b) The net income from the source specified in subsection (a) (1) shall be computed as follows: From the gross income from the sale of the articles with respect to which a Federal excise tax was imposed on the taxpayer but not paid, there shall be deducted the allocable portion of the deductions from gross income for the taxable year which are allowable under the applicable revenue act. The proper apportionment and allocation of such deductions with respect to gross income derived from the transactions specified in subsection (a) (1) shall be determined under rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I may say in connection with this particular amendment inserted by the Senate Finance Committee that it gives to the taxpayer the option of a simpler method of computing his tax. That is all that is intended to be accomplished by the amendment. The House method of computing the tax was somewhat complicated, and many of the processors on whom this windfall tax would fall asked for the option of a simpler computation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment on page 244, striking out lines 6 to 17, both inclusive.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 244, after line 17, to insert:

(c) The net income from the sales specified in subsection (a) (1) shall be computed as follows:

(1) From the gross income from such sales there shall be deducted the allocable portion of the deductions from gross income for the taxable year which are allowable under the applicable revenue act; or

(2) If the taxpayer so elects by filing his return on such basis, the total net income for the taxable year from the sale of all articles with respect to which each Federal excise tax was imposed (computed by deducting from the gross income from such sales the allocable portion of the deductions from gross income which are allowable under the applicable revenue act, but without deduction of the amount of such Federal excise tax which was paid or of the amount of reimbursement to purchasers with respect to such Federal excise tax) shall be divided by the total quantity of such articles sold during the taxable year and the quotient shall be multiplied by the quantity of such articles involved in the sales specified in subsection (a) (1). Such quantities shall be expressed in terms of the unit on the basis of which the Federal excise tax was imposed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 245, after line 14, to insert:

For the purposes of this section the proper apportionment and allocation of deductions with respect to gross income shall be determined under rules and regulations prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 245, line 19, before the word "the", to strike out "(c)" and insert "(d)"; in the same line, after the word "reimbursement", to insert "or refunds"; in line 20, before the word "shall", to insert "or (3)"; in line 22, before the word "of", to insert "(1)"; in line 23, after the word "excise", to strike out "taxes" and insert "tax burdens"; in line 24, after the word "vendors", to insert "or (2) of refunds or credits to the taxpayer of Federal excise taxes erroneously or illegally collected,"; and on page 246, line 3, after the word "reimbursement", to insert "or refunds", so as to read:

(d) The net income from reimbursement or refunds specified in subsection (a) (2) or (3) shall be computed as follows: From the total payment or accrual (1) of reimbursement to the taxpayer from vendors for amounts representing Federal excise tax burdens included in prices paid by the taxpayer to such vendors or (2) of refunds or credits to the taxpayer of Federal excise taxes erroneously or illegally collected, there shall be deducted the expenses and fees reasonably incurred in obtaining such reimbursement or refunds.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, those are merely clerical amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next committee amendment.

The next amendment was, on page 246, after line 3, to strike out:

(d) For the purposes of subsection (a) (1) and (2), the extent to which the taxpayer shifted to others the burden of a Federal excise tax, shall be presumed to be an amount computed as follows: From the selling price of each article there shall be deducted the sum of (1) the cost of such article plus (2) the average margin with respect thereto. The balance (to the extent that it does not exceed the amount of the Federal excise tax) shall be the extent to which the taxpayer shifted to others the burden of such Federal excise tax with respect to such article.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

(e) For the purposes of subsection (a) (1), (2), and (3), the extent to which the taxpayer shifted to others the burden of a Federal excise tax shall be presumed to be an amount computed as follows:

(1) From the selling price of the articles there shall be deducted the sum of (A) the cost of such articles plus (B) the average margin with respect to the quantity involved; or

(2) If the taxpayer so elects by filing his return on such basis, from the aggregate selling price of all articles with respect to which such Federal excise tax was imposed and which were sold by him during the taxable year (computed without deduction of reimbursement to purchasers with respect to such Federal excise tax) there shall be deducted the aggregate cost of such articles, and the difference shall be reduced to a margin per unit in terms of the basis on which the Federal excise tax was imposed. The excess of such margin per unit over the average margin (computed for the same unit) shall be multiplied by the number of such units represented by the articles with respect to which the computation is being made; but

(3) In no case shall the extent to which the taxpayer shifted to others the burden of the Federal excise tax with respect to the articles be deemed to exceed the amount of such tax with respect to such articles minus (A) any payments or credits with respect to the articles made to purchasers as specified in subsection (f) (3) and minus (B) the amount of any increase in the tax under section 602 of the Revenue Act of 1932 for which the taxpayer under this section became liable as the result of the nonpayment or refund of the Federal excise tax with respect to the articles.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, if I may be permitted, I should like to make an explanation at that point. These are merely companion provisions to the amendments considered on page 244, giving to the taxpayer an option of computing his liability for tax. The provisions had to be repeated under the framework of this particular title, as the matter came from the House, in two places.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment on pages 246 and 247.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 247, line 23, to strike out "(c)" and insert "(f)"; in line 25, after the word "of", to strike out "an article" and insert "articles"; on page 248, line 4, after the word "his", to strike out "five" and insert "six"; and in line 6, after the word "such", to insert "six-year"; so as to read:

(f) As used in this section—

(1) The term "margin" means the difference between the selling price of articles and the cost thereof, and the term "average margin" means the average difference between the selling price and the cost of similar articles sold by the taxpayer during his six taxable years preceding the initial imposition of the Federal excise tax in question, except that if during any part of such 6-year period the taxpayer was not in business, or if his records for any part of such period are so inadequate as not to furnish satisfactory data, the average margin of the taxpayer for such part of such period shall, when necessary for a fair comparison, be deemed to be the average margin, as determined by the Commissioner, of representative concerns engaged in a similar business and similarly circumstanced.

Mr. GEORGE. That is an amendment of substance, but it merely extends the period specified in that particular section from 5 years, according to my recollection, to 6 years.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 248, line 15, after the word "of", to strike out "an article" and insert "articles"; in line 18, after the word "the", to strike out "article" and insert "articles plus direct manufacturing costs"; in line 19, after the word "of", to strike out "an article" and insert "articles"; in line 21, after the word "such", to strike out "article" and insert "articles"; and in the same line, after the word "reduced", to insert "in both cases", so as to read:

(2) The term "cost" means, in the case of articles manufactured or produced by the taxpayer, the cost to the taxpayer of materials entering into the articles plus direct manufacturing costs; or, in the case of articles purchased by the taxpayer for resale, the price paid by him for such articles (reduced in both cases by the amount for which he is reimbursed by his vendor).

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 248, line 24, after the word "paid", to insert "or credited"; and in line 25, after the word "before", to strike out "March 3, 1936, or pursuant to any bona-fide agreement in writing" and insert "the thirtieth day after the date of the enactment of this act, or thereafter in the bona-fide settlement of a written agreement", so as to read:

(3) The term "selling price" means selling price minus (A) amounts subsequently paid or credited to the purchaser on or before the thirtieth day after the date of the enactment of this act, or thereafter in the bona-fide settlement of a written agreement entered into on or before March 3, 1936, as reimbursement for the amount included in such price on account of a Federal excise tax, and minus (B) the allocable portion of any professional fees and expenses of litigation incurred in securing the refund or preventing the collection of the Federal excise tax, not to exceed 10 percent of the amount of such tax.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 249, line 12, before the word "In", to strike out "(f)" and insert "(g)"; in the same line, after the word "determining", to strike out "costs and selling prices" and insert "costs, selling prices, and net income"; and in line 16, after the word "acquired" and the period, to insert "Where the taxpayer's records do not adequately establish the quantity of a commodity taxable under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, entering into articles sold by him, such quantities shall be computed by the use of the conversion factors prescribed in regulations under such act, as amended", so as to read:

(g) In determining costs, selling prices, and net income, the taxpayer shall, unless otherwise shown, be deemed to have sold articles in the order in which they were manufactured, produced, or acquired. Where the taxpayer's records do not adequately establish the quantity of a commodity taxable under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, entering into articles sold by him, such quantities shall be computed by the use of the conversion factors prescribed in regulations under such act, as amended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 249, line 22, to change the letter of the paragraph from "(g)" to "(h)."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 250, line 3, to change the designation of the paragraph from "(h)" to "(i)"; and in line 4, after the word "subsection" to strike out "(d)" and insert "(e)", so as to make the paragraph read:

(1) Either the taxpayer or the Commissioner may rebut the presumption established by subsection (e) by proof of the actual extent to which the taxpayer shifted to others the burden of the Federal excise tax. Such proof may include, but shall not be limited to:

The next amendment was, on page 250, in line 12, after the word "costs", to strike out "of production" and insert "not considered in computing the margin", so as to make the paragraph read:

(1) Proof that the change or lack of change in the margin was due to changes in factors other than the tax. Such factors shall include any clearly shown change (A) in the type or grade of article or materials, or (B) in costs not considered in computing the margin. If the taxpayer asserts that the burden of the tax was borne by him while the burden of any other increased cost was shifted to others, the Commissioner shall determine, from the respective effective dates of the tax and of the other increase in cost as compared with the date of the change in margin, and from the general experience of the industry, whether the tax or the increase in other cost was shifted to others. If the Commissioner determines that the change in margin was due in part to the tax and in part to the increase in other cost, he shall apportion the change in margin between them.

Mr. GEORGE. That is merely a clerical amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 251, line 16, after the word "articles", to insert "in question", and in the same line, after the word "sold", to strike out "with respect to which there was imposed the Federal excise tax which was not paid", so as to read:

(2) Proof that the taxpayer modified contracts of sale, or adopted a new contract of sale, to reflect the initiation, termination, or change in amount of the Federal excise tax, or at any such time changed the sale price of the article (including the effect of a change in size, package, discount terms, or any other merchandising practice) by substantially the amount of the tax or change therein, or at any time billed the tax as a separate item to any vendee or indicated by any writing that the sale price included the amount of the tax, or contracted to refund any part of the sale price in the event of recovery of the tax or decision of its invalidity; but the taxpayer may establish that such acts were caused by factors other than the tax, or that they do not represent his practice during the period in which the articles in question were sold.

Mr. GEORGE. That also is merely a clerical amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on the same page, at the beginning of line 19, to change the designation of the paragraph from "(i)" to "(j)".

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 252, line 5, after the word "to", to strike out "any commodity (or the processing of any commodity), or with respect to any", and insert "(or with respect to the processing of) any commodity or"; so as to read:

(1) The term "Federal excise tax" means a tax or exaction with respect to the sale, lease, manufacture, production, processing, ginning, importation, transportation, refining, recovery, or holding for sale or other disposition, of commodities or articles, provided for by any Federal statute, whether valid or invalid, if denominated a "tax" by such statute. A Federal excise tax shall be deemed to have been imposed with respect to an article if it was imposed with respect to (or with respect to the processing of) any commodity or other article, from which such article was processed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 252, line 8, to insert:

(2) The term "date of the termination of the Federal excise tax" means, in the case of a Federal excise tax held invalid by a decision of the Supreme Court, the date of such decision.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 252, after line 12, to insert:

(3) The term "refund or credit" does not include a refund or credit made in accordance with the provisions and limitations set forth in title VII of this act, or in section 621 (d) of the Revenue Act of 1932.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 252, after line 16, to insert:

(4) The term "tax adjustment" means a repayment or credit by the taxpayer to his vendee of an amount equal to the Federal excise tax with respect to an article (less reasonable expense to the vendor in connection with the nonpayment or recovery by him of the amount of such tax and in connection with the making of such repayment or credit) if such repayment or credit is made on or before the thirtieth day after the date of the enactment of this act, or thereafter in the bona-fide settlement of a written agreement entered into on or before March 3, 1936.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, the amendments now being considered are clarifying, in the first instance, and also provide definitions to conform to the changes made in the text of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 253, at the beginning of line 3, to strike out "(2)" and insert "(5)", so as to read:

(5) The term "taxpayer" means a person subject to a tax imposed by this section.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 253, after line 4, to strike out:

(j) All references in this section of Federal excise taxes imposed but not paid shall be deemed to include Federal excise taxes paid but refunded or credited to the taxpayer, except where such refund or credit is made in conformity with the provisions and limitations set forth in section 21 (d) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, or in section 621 (d) of the Revenue Act of 1932.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 253, line 25, after the word "exceed", to strike out "such Federal excise tax" and insert "the amount of such Federal excise tax with respect to such services minus any payments or credits with respect to the services made to purchasers as specified in subsection (f) (3)"; on page 254, in line 6, after the word "such", to strike out "5-year" and insert "6-year"; and in line 15, after the word "subsection", to strike out "(h)" and insert "(i)", so as to read:

(k) All references in this section to the purchase or sale (or to parties to the sale) of articles with respect to which a Federal excise tax was imposed shall be deemed to include the purchase or sale (or parties to the sale) of services with respect to which a Federal excise tax was imposed, and for the purposes of subsection (a) the extent to which the taxpayer shifted to others the burden of such Federal excise tax with respect to such services shall be presumed to be an amount computed as follows: From the selling price of the services there shall be deducted the average price received by the taxpayer for performing similar services during the six taxable years preceding the initial imposition of the Federal excise tax in question. The balance (to the extent that it does not exceed the amount of such Federal excise tax with respect to such services minus any payments or credits with respect to the services made to purchasers as specified in subsection (f) (3)) shall be the extent to which the taxpayer shifted the burden of such Federal excise tax to others. If during any part of such 6-year period the taxpayer was not in business, or if his records for any part of such period are so inadequate as not to furnish satisfactory data, the average price of the taxpayer for such part of such period shall, when necessary for a fair comparison, be deemed to be the average price, as determined by the Commissioner, of representative concerns engaged in a similar business and similarly circumstanced. The presumption established by this subsection may be rebutted by proof of the character described in subsection (i).

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 255, "Sec. 502. Credit for other taxes on income", line 8, after the words "amount of", to insert "the other", so as to read:

(a) The amount of the other Federal income and excess-profits taxes payable by the taxpayer for the taxable year, over

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on the same page, line 11, after the words "the amount", to insert "the other", so as to read:

(b) The amount of the other Federal income and excess-profits taxes which would have been payable by the taxpayer for the taxable year if his net income were decreased by the amount of net income taxable under this title.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 255, "Sec. 503. Administrative provisions", line 21, after the word "sections", to insert the numerals "21", so as to make the clause read:

SEC. 503. ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS.

(a) All provisions of law (including penalties) applicable with respect to taxes imposed by title I of this act, shall, insofar as not inconsistent with this title, be applicable with respect to the taxes imposed by this title, except that the provisions of sections 101, 131, 251, and 252 shall not be applicable.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on the same page, line 23, after "(b)", to strike out "The return with respect to the taxes imposed by this title" and insert "Every person (1) upon whom a Federal excise tax was imposed but not paid, or (2) who received any reimbursement specified in subsection (a) (2), or (3) who received a refund or credit of Federal excise tax, shall make a return under this title, which return", so as to make the clause read:

(b) Every person (1) upon whom a Federal excise tax was imposed but not paid, or (2) who received any reimbursement specified in subsection (a) (2), or (3) who received a refund or credit of Federal excise tax, shall make a return under this title, which return shall contain such information and be made in such manner as the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, shall prescribe. For any taxable year ended prior to the date of the enactment of this act the return shall be filed, and the total amount of the taxes shall be paid, not later than the 15th day of the third month after the date of the enactment of this act, in lieu of the time otherwise prescribed by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 256, after line 12, to insert:

(c) If the Commissioner finds that the payment, on the date prescribed for the payment thereof, of any part of the amount determined by the taxpayer as the tax under this title, or of any deficiency with respect thereto, would impose undue hardship upon the taxpayer, the Commissioner may grant an extension for the payment of any such part for a period not in excess of 3 years. In such case the amount with respect to which the extension is granted shall be paid on or before the date of the expiration of the period of the extension, and the running of the statute of limitations for assessment and collection shall be suspended for the period of any such extension. If an extension is granted, the Commissioner may require the taxpayer to furnish a bond in such amount, not exceeding double the amount with respect to which the extension is granted, and with such sureties as the Commissioner deems necessary, conditioned upon the payment of the amount with respect to which the extension is granted in accordance with the terms of the extension. There shall be collected, as a part of any amount with respect to which an extension is granted, interest thereon at the rate of 6 percent per annum from the expiration of 6 months after the due date thereof to the expiration of the period of the extension.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I should like to call attention to the amendment that has just been agreed to on page 256, paragraph (c). It is an amendment comparable to the provision of the Federal inheritance tax law in that it gives to the Commissioner a discretion under the conditions named in the section and the power to spread the payment of the windfall tax over a period of not exceeding 3 years. The committee believed that was a wise provision, particularly in view of the evidence which tended to indicate that certain classes of taxpayers who would be taxable under the so-called windfall or unjust enrichment tax provision would suffer a very severe penalty if they were required to pay the tax in 1 year.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment has already been agreed to. The clerk will state the next amendment reported by the committee.

The next amendment was, on page 257, after line 15, to strike out:

SEC. 505. GEOGRAPHICAL SCOPE OF TITLE.

For the purposes of this title—

(1) The term "United States", as used in any provision of law, includes only the States, the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii, the District of Columbia, the Philippine Islands, and Puerto Rico.

(2) Income taxes paid to the Philippine Islands or Puerto Rico shall be deemed to be Federal income taxes for the purposes of section 502.

(3) In applying section 501 to income from sources within such possessions, the gross income and deductions shall be determined as if such income were taxable under the revenue act applicable to the taxable year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 258, after line 5, to insert the following new section:

SEC. 505. APPLICATION OF TITLE TO POSSESSIONS.

With respect to the following income, the tax under this title shall be in force in any possession of the United States (including the Philippine Islands); such tax shall (without regard to the residence or citizenship or place of organization of the taxpayer) be collected by the appropriate internal-revenue officers of such possession; and the proceeds thereof shall accrue to the general government of such possession: (a) Any income specified in subsection (a) (1) or (3) of section 501 if the Federal excise tax with respect to the articles in question accrued in such possession; and (b) any income specified in subsection (a) (2) of section 501 if the reimbursement specified therein relates to articles sold in such possession by the taxpayer under this title and if the geographical scope of the Federal excise tax in question extended to such possession. Such agreement shall be a final settlement of the liability for tax and the claim or claims for refund covered by such agreement, except in case of fraud, malfeasance, or misrepresentation of a material fact. No refund under this section shall be allowable to any person with respect to any articles where such person prior to January 6, 1936, paid an amount as tax under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, by taking as a credit against such amount an amount otherwise allowable as a refund with respect to such articles under sections 15 (a), 15 (c), 16 (e) (1), 16 (e) (3), or 17 (a) of said act. No refund under this section shall be allowed to any person except to the extent that he establishes that he has not received, and is not entitled to receive, reimbursement of such amount from the processor or other vendor with respect to the articles on which the claim is based. No claim under this section (except claims of processors under section 15 (a)) shall be disallowed on the ground that the tax with respect to the article or the commodity from which processed has not been paid.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, the Senator from New York asked that the provisions relating to the tax on oil be passed over temporarily. I therefore ask that the sections dealing with the tax on oils, being title V, be passed over temporarily.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection title V will be passed over temporarily. The clerk will state the next amendment reported by the committee.

"(c) For the purposes of this section the value of the net estate shall be determined as provided in title III of the Revenue Act of 1926, as amended, except that (1), in lieu of the exemption of $100,000 provided in section 303 (a) (4) of such act, the exemption shall be $40,000; and (2) there shall be deducted from the value of the net estate as thus determined the proceeds (to the extent included in gross estate) of life-insurance policies payable to (and received by) the Treasurer of the United States in trust for the payment of estate, inheritance, succession, legacy, or other death duties levied by the United States against or with respect to the estate of the decedent, exclusive of any excess over the amount of such taxes which excess shall be accounted for (without interest) to the executor or administrator of the decedent for the benefit of the persons entitled thereto: Provided, however, That the proceeds of policies on which the premium-paying period provided in the policy is less than 10 years, or on which the premiums are not substantially equal in amount for each of the first 10 years of the life of the policy, or on which more than 1 year's premium has been paid in advance, shall not be deductible: Provided further, That the amount deductible as aforesaid shall not include premiums paid in advance, and shall not exceed $1,000,000."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I have just been advised that title VI, section 801, has been agreed to. I was called out of the Chamber, and, if the section has been agreed to, I ask that the vote whereby it was agreed to may be reconsidered and that it may be passed over temporarily.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote whereby the amendment referred to by the Senator from Wisconsin was agreed to is reconsidered, and the section will be temporarily passed over.

Any tax that has been paid under such act prior to the date of the enactment of this act, if in excess of the tax imposed by such act as modified by this section, shall, subject to the statutory period of limitation properly applicable thereto, be credited or refunded to the taxpayer as provided by law in the case of other overpayments of income tax imposed by such act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 272, after line 12, to insert:

TITLE VII—REFUNDS OF AMOUNTS COLLECTED UNDER THE AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT

SECTION 901. REPEALS.

Sections 21 (d), 21 (e), and 21 (g) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, as amended, are hereby repealed.

SEC. 902. CONDITIONS ON ALLOWANCE OF REFUNDS.

No refund shall be made or allowed, in pursuance of court decisions or otherwise, of any amount paid by or collected from any claimant as tax under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, unless the claimant establishes to the satisfaction of the Commissioner in accordance with regulations prescribed by him, with the approval of the Secretary, or to the satisfaction of the trial court, as the case may be—

(a) That he bore the burden of such amount and has not been relieved thereof nor reimbursed therefor nor shifted such burden, directly or indirectly, (1) through inclusion of such amount by the claimant, or by any person directly or indirectly under his control, or having control over him, or subject to the same common control, in the price of any article with respect to which a tax was imposed under the provisions of such act, or in the price of any article processed from any commodity with respect to which a tax was imposed under such act, or in any charge or fee for services or processing; (2) through reduction of the price paid for any such commodity; or (3) in any manner whatsoever; and that no understanding or agreement, written or oral, exists whereby he may be relieved of the burden of such amount, be reimbursed therefor, or may shift the burden thereof; or

(b) That he has repaid unconditionally such amount to his vendee (1) who bore the burden thereof, (2) who has not been relieved thereof nor reimbursed therefor, nor shifted such burden, directly or indirectly, and (3) who is not entitled to receive any reimbursement therefor from any other source, or to be relieved of such burden in any manner whatsoever.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 274, to insert:

SEC. 903. FILING OF CLAIMS.

No refund shall be made or allowed of any amount paid by or collected from any person as tax under the Agricultural Adjustment Act unless, after the enactment of this act and prior to January 1, 1937, a claim for refund has been filed by such person in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary. No claim may be allowed in an amount less than $10. All evidence relied upon in support of such claim shall be clearly set forth under oath. The number of claims filed by any person shall be subject to such regulations as the Commissioner may prescribe, with the approval of the Secretary.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, in several places in previous sections of the bill which we have just approved I observe the same provision as that appearing on page 274, line 8, reading, "No claim may be allowed in an amount less than $10", has been eliminated.

In the committee amendment now under consideration, I move to eliminate those words in line 8, page 274.

Mr. GEORGE. I may say that that is consistent with the action taken under title IV of the bill. The committee was of the opinion that the small claimant, although his claim for tax refunds amounted to $10 or less, should nevertheless be entitled to his refund, and to eliminate the words in this provision, although it applies to the processing taxes, would be consistent with the action taken under title IV.

Mr. COUZENS. In other words, under title IV, a man with a $9 claim for a refund would be permitted to get it, if approved, just as a man with a claim for a $11 refund could collect his claim.

Mr. GEORGE. Exactly. I think the Senator is quite right, and I think the words he has mentioned should be stricken out on page 274.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Michigan that this is a rewriting of section 21 (d) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act providing for refunds and it applies to the processors. It was not thought originally that any claims by processors for less than $10 would be sufficiently interesting even to the claimant to cause him to prosecute it, but, inasmuch as we have changed it with respect to the floor tax and other taxes, there is no objection to the elimination of the words referred to from this rewriting of section 21 (d).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment, on page 274, in lines 8 and 9, it is proposed to strike out the words "No claim may be allowed in an amount less than $10."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 274, after line 13, to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 904. STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.

Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no suit or proceeding, whether brought before or after the date of enactment of this act, shall be brought or maintained in any court for the recovery, recoupment, set-off, refund, or credit of, or counterclaim for, any amount paid by or collected from any person as tax (except processing tax, as defined herein) under the Agricultural Adjustment Act (a) before the expiration of 18 months from the date of filing a claim therefor under this title, unless the Commissioner renders a decision thereon within that time, or (b) after the expiration of 2 years from the date of mailing by registered mail by the Commissioner to the claimant a notice of disallowance of that part of the claim to which such suit or proceeding relates. Any consideration or any action by the Commissioner with respect to such claim following the mailing of notice of disallowance shall not operate to extend the period within which any suit or proceeding may be brought.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 275, after line 7, to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 905. JURISDICTION OF COURTS.

Concurrent with the Court of Claims, the district courts of the United States (except as provided in sec. 906 of this title) shall have jurisdiction of cases to which this title applies, regardless of the amount in controversy, if such district courts would have had jurisdiction of such cases but for limitations under the Judicial Code, as amended, on jurisdiction of such courts based upon the amount in controversy. The United States Customs Court shall not have jurisdiction of any such cases.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 275, after line 17, to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 906. PROCEDURE ON CLAIMS FOR REFUNDS OF PROCESSING TAXES.

(a) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no suit or proceeding, whether brought before or after the date of the enactment of this act, shall be brought or maintained in any court for the refund of any amount paid or collected as processing tax, as defined herein, under the Agricultural Adjustment Act, except as provided in this section. The Commissioner shall allow or disallow, in whole or in part, any claim for refund of any such amount within 3 years after such claim was filed, unless such time has been extended by written consent of the claimant. Such allowance or disallowance of the Commissioner shall be final unless, within 90 days after the date of mailing by registered mail by the Commissioner of notice that a claim for refund of any such amount has been disallowed, in whole or in part, the claimant files a petition with the Commissioner requesting a hearing on the merits of his claim, in whole or in part, and a reconsideration of such allowance or disallowance. Upon the filing of any such petition, the claimant shall be entitled to a hearing as provided herein, and within 90 days after the date of such filing the Commissioner shall set a date for such hearing which shall be not more than 2 years from the date of filing of the petition. Such hearing shall be held in Washington, D. C., or in the collection district in which is located the principal place of business of the claimant, as the claimant may designate in his petition, and may be continued from day to day until the Commissioner shall make his findings of fact and conclusions of law. The Commissioner shall notify the claimant of the time and place set for such hearing by registered mail.

(b) Such hearing shall be conducted by the Commissioner or such officials of the Treasury Department as he may designate to act as presiding officers and shall be open to the public. The proceedings in such hearings shall be conducted in accordance with such rules of practice and procedure (other than rules of evidence) as the Commissioner may prescribe with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, and in accordance with the rules of evidence applicable in courts of equity of the District of Columbia. The claimant shall be entitled to be represented by counsel, to have witnesses subpenaed, and to examine and cross-examine witnesses. The Commissioner or presiding officer shall have authority to administer oaths, examine witnesses, rule on questions of procedure and the admissibility of evidence, and to require, by subpena in the Commissioner's name, the attendance and testimony of witnesses, and the production of all necessary returns, books, papers, records, correspondence, memoranda, and other evidence, from any place in the United States at any designated place of hearing, and to require the taking of a deposition by any designated individual competent to administer oaths. The presiding officer shall recommend findings of fact and conclusions of law to the Commissioner. The Commissioner shall make his findings of fact and conclusions of law and mail a copy thereof by registered mail to the claimant within 6 months after conclusion of the hearing.

(c) The Commissioner is authorized to draw up a table of costs and fees relating to such hearings, and the preparation of transcripts of record thereof, not to exceed with respect to any one item those charged in the Supreme Court of the United States. Such costs and fees shall be paid by the claimant and be collected in accordance with such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Commissioner with the approval of the Secretary. If the hearing provided herein results in a modification of the allowance or disallowance of the Commissioner, such costs shall be returned to the claimant.

(d) A review of the determination of the Commissioner, made after the hearing provided in this section, may be obtained by the claimant by filing a petition for review in the Circuit Court of Appeals of the United States within any circuit wherein such claimant resides, or has his principal place of business, or in the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, within 90 days after the date of the mailing to the claimant of the copy of the findings and conclusions of the Commissioner. A copy of such petition shall forthwith be served upon the Commissioner or upon any officer designated by him for that purpose, and thereupon the Commissioner shall certify and file in the court, in which such petition has been filed, a transcript of the record upon which the findings and conclusions complained of were based. Upon the filing of such transcript, such court shall have exclusive jurisdiction to affirm the determination of the Commissioner, or to modify or reverse such determination, if it is not in accordance with law, with or without remanding the cause for a rehearing, as justice may require. No objection to the determination of the Commissioner shall be considered by the court unless such objection shall have been urged before the Commissioner or the presiding officer, or unless there were reasonable grounds for failure so to do. If the claimant or the Commissioner shall apply to the court for leave to adduce additional evidence, and shall show to the satisfaction of the court that such additional evidence is material, and that there were reasonable grounds for failure to adduce such evidence in the hearing before the Commissioner or the presiding officer, the court may order such additional evidence to be taken before the Commissioner or such officer, and to be adduced upon the hearing in such manner and upon such terms and conditions as to the court may seem proper. The Commissioner may modify his findings of fact and conclusions of law by reason of the additional evidence so taken and he shall file with such court such modified or new findings and conclusions. The judgment of the court shall be final, subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States, upon certification or certiorari as provided in sections 239 and 240 of the Judicial Code, as amended. Such courts are authorized to adopt rules for the filing of petitions for review, the preparation of the record for review, and the conduct of the proceedings on review. If the determination of the Commissioner is affirmed, costs shall be awarded against the claimant, and if such determination is reversed, the judgment shall provide for a refund of any costs paid by the claimant. In case of modification of such determination, costs shall be awarded or refused as justice may require. The determination of the Commissioner made after the hearing provided herein shall become final in the same manner that decisions of the Board of Tax Appeals become final under section 1005 of the Revenue Act of 1926, as amended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 280, after line 17, to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 907. EVIDENCE AND PRESUMPTIONS.

(a) Where the refund claimed is for an amount paid or collected as processing tax, as defined herein, it shall be prima-facie evidence that the burden of such amount was borne by the claimant to the extent (not to exceed the amount of the tax) that the average margin per unit of the commodity processed was lower during the tax period than it was during the period before and after the tax. If the average margin was not lower, it shall be prima-facie evidence that none of the burden of such amount was borne by the claimant but that it was shifted to others.

(b) The average margin for any period shall be determined by computing the average receipts per unit of commodity, and deducting therefrom the sum of (a) the average cost to the claimant per unit of the commodity with respect to which the tax was paid and (b) the amount of any processing tax paid with respect thereto. The average receipts per unit of commodity shall be determined by dividing the total amount obtained from the sale of articles processed from the commodity by the number of units of the commodity processed during the period. The average cost per unit of the commodity shall be computed by using either the current market price at the time of processing, or the actual cost of the commodity processed, according to the usual accounting procedure of the claimant. The amount obtained from the sale of the articles shall be computed by using either the current market price at the time the commodity was processed, or the actual receipts from the articles sold, according to the usual accounting procedure of the claimant. If the accounting procedure of the claimant is based upon the actual cost of the commodity or actual receipts from the articles, and specific lots thereof cannot be traced, then the claimant may be considered to have processed each unit of the commodity in the order in which it was acquired and to have sold each article in the order in which it was processed.

(c) The "tax period" shall mean the period with respect to which the claimant actually paid the processing tax to a collector of internal revenue and shall end on the date with respect to which the last payment was made. The "period before and after the tax" shall mean the 24 months (except that in the case of tobacco it shall be the 12 months) immediately preceding the effective date of the processing tax, and the 6 months, February to July 1936, inclusive. If during any part of such period the claimant was not in business, or if his records for any part of such period were so inadequate as not to provide satisfactory data, the average margin of the claimant for such part of such period shall, when necessary for a fair comparison, be deemed to be the average margin, as determined by the Commissioner, of representative concerns engaged in a similar business and similarly circumstanced.

(d) If the claimant made any purchase or sale otherwise than through an arm's-length transaction, and at a price other than the fair market price, the Commissioner may determine the purchase or sale price to be that for which such purchases or sales were at that time made in the ordinary course of trade.

(e) Either the claimant or the Commissioner may rebut the presumption established by subsection (a) of this section by proof of the actual extent to which the claimant shifted to others the burden of the processing tax. Such proof may include, but shall not be limited to—

(1) proof that the change or lack of change in the margin was due to changes in factors other than the tax. Such factors shall include any clearly shown change (A) in the type or grade of article or commodity, or (B) in costs of production. If the claimant asserts that the burden of the tax was borne by him and the burden of any other increased costs was shifted to others, the Commissioner shall determine, from the respective effective dates of the tax and of the other increases in costs as compared with the date of the change in margin, and from the general experience of the industry, whether the tax or the increase in other costs was shifted to others. If the Commissioner determines that the change in margin was due in part to the tax, and in part to the increase in other costs, he shall apportion the change in margin between them;

(2) proof that the claimant modified contracts of sale, or adopted a new contract of sale, to reflect the initiation, termination, or change in amount of the processing tax or at any such time changed the sale price of the article (including the effect of a change in size, package, discount terms, or any other merchandising practice) by substantially the amount of the tax or change therein, or at any time billed the tax as a separate item to any vendee or indicated by any writing that the sale price included the amount of the tax, or contracted to refund any part of the sale price in the event of recovery of the tax or decision of its invalidity; but the claimant may establish that such acts were caused by factors other than the processing tax, or that they do not represent his practice at other times during the period under consideration. If a claimant processed any product or products in addition to the commodity with respect to the processing of which there was paid or collected an amount as tax for which he claims a refund, and if the Commissioner determines that the burden of such amount was shifted in whole or in part by means of the transactions relating to such product or products, the average margin with respect to such product or products shall also be considered in the manner and with the effect provided in subsection (a) of this section.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, that completes title VII. Before passing from title VII permit me to say that the committee perhaps will desire to offer some amendments to it. This title is a rewriting of section 21 (d) of the Agricultural Adjustment Act. For that purpose I should like to ask at this time unanimous consent that we may recur again to title VII for the purpose of considering any committee amendments we may desire to offer to the title.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, that is entirely agreeable, because the subcommittee is working on that title and may desire to offer certain amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Georgia? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

INTERNAL-REVENUE TAXATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12395) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I suggest that the Senate now consider such amendments as may occur in title VIII. I believe they are nothing but technical amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first amendment in title VIII will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 290, in line 18, it is proposed to strike out the roman numeral "V" and insert the roman numerals "VIII", so as to read:

Title VIII—General provisions.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that throughout the entire bill the clerks may be authorized to correct paragraph and section numbers and to make other changes of that character.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GEORGE. That completes the amendments in title VIII. I ask that we now return to title V.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, is it necessary to consider title V at this time?

Mr. GEORGE. We have passed over all provisions in the bill except titles I and II which raise the main points in controversy. Therefore, it is desired to consider title V at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first amendment in title V will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 267, after line 9, it is proposed to insert the following new paragraph:

TITLE V—AMENDMENTS TO TAXES ON CERTAIN OILS

SEC. 701. TAX ON CERTAIN OILS.

The first sentence of section 601 (c) (8) of the Revenue Act of 1932, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"(8) Whale oil (except sperm oil), fish oil (except cod oil, cod-liver oil, and halibut-liver oil), marine-animal oil, tallow, inedible animal oils, inedible animal fats, inedible animal greases, fatty-acids derived from any of the foregoing, and salts of any of the foregoing; all the foregoing, whether or not refined, sulphonated, sulphated, hydrogenated, or otherwise processed, 3 cents per pound; olive oil and sesame oil, provided for in paragraph 1732 of the Tariff Act of 1930, sunflower oil, rapeseed oil, kapok oil, hempseed oil, fatty acids derived from any of the foregoing, and salts of any of the foregoing; all the foregoing, whether or not refined, sulphonated, sulphated, hydrogenated, or otherwise processed, 4½ cents per pound; any article, merchandise, or combination, 10 per centum or more of the quantity by weight of which consists of, or is derived directly or indirectly from, one or more of the products specified heretofore in this paragraph or in section 602½ of the Revenue Act of 1934, as amended, a tax at the rate or rates per pound equal to that proportion of the rate or rates prescribed in this paragraph or such section 602½ in respect of such product or products which the quantity by weight of the imported article, merchandise, or combination, consisting of or derived from such product or products, bears to the total weight of the imported article, merchandise, or combination; hempseed, rapeseed, sesame seed, and kapok seed, 2 cents per pound."

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, may I have the attention of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY]? On page 267, line 23, reference is made to "rapeseed oil." I have a telegram asking me to have inserted, after the words "rapeseed oil", the words "unless denatured." Does the Senator know what effect that would have?

Mr. BAILEY. Then the tax proposed in the amendment would fall upon the edible oil and not the denatured oil. It would affect to that extent the agricultural interests. I question whether it would have the desired effect with respect to the fishing interests. Denatured oil is inedible and therefore not supposed to be competitive with vegetable oil.

Mr. COUZENS. Then I understand from the point of view of the Senator, who is the proponent of the amendment under discussion, he would not object to inserting the words "unless denatured"?

Mr. BAILEY. I do not know that I am prepared to acquiesce. I was induced to propose the amendment because of a realization of the fact that since we passed the 1934 act relative to imports of oils and fats competitive with oils and fats produced on the farms in our country, the foreign exporters have found substitutes for those oils and fats, and also for the oil-producing seeds, in lieu of the articles on which we had imposed the tax, with the resultant effect that the real purpose of the 1934 act has been to a great extent defeated.

The primary purpose of the amendment is, with respect to these substitutes, to give the same benefits to the American producers that they at first received with respect to the articles imported from other countries on which the tax was imposed in the 1934 act.

Incidentally, while we are undertaking to enact legislation for the benefit of the American farmers producing fats and oils, I will state that I have here letters from the great farm organizations heartily supporting the portion of the amendment which gives like benefits to the fishermen, the producers of oil from the fish that are caught off our shores. The two are together, and I do not think I am at liberty to separate them. I should be perfectly willing to submit the matter to the Senate, just as I submitted it to the committee; and if any Senator has an amendment of that character to put forward, while I do not think I am in fairness quite at liberty to accept the amendment, I question whether it would be worth my while to oppose it.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. Because of lack of information, may I ask the Senator to accept this amendment? Then, if there is any substantial reason why it should not be accepted when we get fuller information, we can take the amendment out in conference.

Mr. BAILEY. That is looking forward to a rather unknown situation.

Mr. COUZENS. The only point is that I raised the question because the suggestion came to me by telegraph, and I have not adequate information to sustain the amendment.

Mr. BAILEY. I understand that the Senator from Michigan is largely in sympathy with the purposes of the amendment.

Mr. COUZENS. I voted for it in committee on the basis of the good, sound argument made by the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. President——

Mr. BAILEY. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. LONERGAN. I have the same request as that presented by the Senator from Michigan—in line 23, page 267, after the words "rapeseed oil", to insert the words "unless denatured."

Mr. BAILEY. That is precisely the suggestion made by the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. LONERGAN. Will the Senator accept the proposal, or does he desire a vote of the Senate upon it?

Mr. BAILEY. I think we may take the sense of the Senate without the necessity for a vote. Let us see if we may not.

I am not disposed to be arbitrary or stubborn in matters of this sort, but I do not wish to begin my argument by way of concessions. There are some 15 or 20 articles here, and if I concede on one I shall have to concede on all, and then I shall be in the position of the fellow who got all the flesh picked off his bones; and I do not care to reduce myself to that state.

Mr. KING and Mr. COPELAND addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BACHMAN in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield first to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I do not wish to be a party to depriving the Senator of any of his flesh; but I wish to call his attention to the fact that the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], a member of our committee who unfortunately is not here, has sent me a number of telegrams in which he urges that the amendment suggested by the Senator from Michigan be adopted; and in his behalf I present his petition.

Mr. BAILEY. I realize that there is quite a sentiment for that here. My effort is to drive the amendment through with the support of the Senate, if possible, with as little delay as possible. I realize that we have no opportunity here for a prolonged debate. We wish to get this bill out of the Senate at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. COPELAND. I have an amendment, too, relating to whale oil, which I should like to have excluded:

Except denatured whale oil for inedible use.

Mr. BAILEY. Precisely. That perfectly illustrates what I was anticipating. I might permit the camel's nose to enter the tent, but I am decidedly unwilling to put a whale through the front door. [Laughter.] I am very glad we have this illustration.

I have brought this amendment forward in all earnestness. It did not originate with me.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. MINTON. If I understand the Senator, this amendment is not presented in the interest of the oils and fats produced by the farmer, but is presented in the interest of the fishing industry. Is that true?

Mr. BAILEY. No; precisely the opposite. It is presented primarily in the interest of the farmer, but along with that interest, insofar as we may, also in the interest of the fisherman. The fisherman gets his crop from the sea. The farmer gets his crop from the land. Both of them are Americans, and neither should be subjected to the competition of foreign competitors.

I was saying that the matter did not originate with me; but having had it presented by the representatives of the great farm organizations of our country, as well as by the organization representative of the fishing interest, I made rather a careful investigation of the matter, and became absolutely convinced of the necessity for legislation of this sort. Therefore, I did not hesitate to put it forward; and I was very deeply gratified when the Finance Committee of the Senate, after rather thorough discussion and a delay of 3 or 4 days in order to get the facts before them, gave very hearty support to the amendment.

Now let me lay before the Senate, first, the letter from the Washington representative of the National Grange, Mr. Fred Brenckman. He says:

It has come to my attention that you intend to offer an amendment to the pending revenue bill imposing excise taxes on certain imported oils and oil-bearing seeds for the benefit of domestic producers of oils and fats. Such a step is needed to make more fully effective sections 602 and 602½ of the Revenue Act of 1934. Your proposed amendment could not fail—

I desire Senators to hear this:

Your proposed amendment could not fail to benefit producers of cottonseed, peanuts, soybeans, beef, sheep, hogs, and dairy products.

That takes in the whole range of the output of the farms of our country.

The excise taxes imposed by the act of 1934 have not only brought considerable revenue into the Treasury, but they have greatly benefited the American producers of oils and fats.

We therefore approve your proposed amendment, and trust that it may be adopted.

Very sincerely,

FRED BRENCKMAN,
Washington Representative of the National Grange.

I read next a letter from Mr. A. M. Loomis, secretary of the National Dairy Union. It is dated May 8:

I am taking this occasion to let you know the deep interest which is felt by the members of our organization in the amendments which have been prepared and placed in your hands for introduction concerning the internal-revenue taxes and import taxes on various tropical and other fats and oils.

I have been familiar with the preparation of this amendment, and, as you know, have given much attention to this particular proposition ever since it came to public attention by the most effective action taken by Congress in 1934.

This is an explanation of real value:

The amendment passed in 1934, placing the 3-cent tax on these various oils, was one of the most beneficial pieces of legislation for American agriculture which was passed by that session, benefits running into the hundreds of millions of dollars by direct increases in the values of all domestic fats and oils. Experience has shown, however, that certain interests in the United States have been able to secure substitutes and in other ways avoid and escape these taxes; so the present amendment has been prepared with extreme care to prevent these evasions, place equal taxes on the substitutes, and thereby to carry out the intent of Congress as expressed in the 1934 enactment.

There is a very fine statement of the whole purpose we have in mind.

In particular, we are interested in the dairy industry in having an adequate tax placed upon sunflower oil and sesame oil in refined form which can be used in the manufacture of oleomargarine as a substitute for butter, and in place of coconut oil, which is already subject to tax. I am authorized, as a representative of the dairy industry, to say to you that your efforts in behalf of this proposed amendment to the oils and fats tax enactment will be of great value to the entire dairy industry of the United States, and we are supporting you to the best of our ability in your effort to have this amendment enacted into law as a part of the tax bill which is now under consideration.

Yours sincerely,

THE NATIONAL DAIRY UNION,
A. M. LOOMIS, Secretary.

I also have here a letter from Mr. Chester H. Gray, the Washington representative of the American Farm Bureau Federation, as follows:

You may be assured that the American Farm Bureau Federation is 100 percent in favor of the amendment which you intend to present to the pending revenue bill to place certain excise taxes on a list of oils and fats.

The American Farm Bureau Federation for 10 years has stood firmly on the principle that an imported and competitive product, such as the oils and fats listed in your amendment undoubtedly are, should, before they enter the commerce of our Nation, pay an excise or an import duty, so that when they are sold in our markets they must move at prices which will permit American producers of our own oils and fats to survive.

In fact, your amendment, in a brief way of considering it, is nothing more or less than stopping some leaks and plugging up some holes in the excise taxes which were secured in 1934 on a too limited list of oils and fats.

Anything which I can do to help you in this effort will be gladly done if you will let me know when I can be most effective.

Very respectfully,

AMERICAN FARM BUREAU FEDERATION,
CHESTER H. GRAY, Washington Representative.

I have other letters, but those three are sufficient both to explain the purpose in mind and also to show the necessity for its accomplishment.

I think I have made it perfectly clear that we are not undertaking here to bring in new subjects of tariff legislation. I refrained from bringing into the amendment any new matter, and confined the language of the amendment to oils and fats and oil-producing seeds which were being used as a substitute for those oils and fats and oil-producing seeds upon which the tax had been imposed in the act of 1934.

So it is not a new matter; it does not open the door to a long list of tariff proposals. It merely corrects and makes perfect, so far as we can do so at this time, the law which we enacted in the best of faith and with the best of intentions in 1934.

I desire to say a word about that, though I question whether it is necessary that I should say it. Since I offered the amendment, I have received almost countless complaints and petitions from protected commercial interests in the United States which were unwilling, while they enjoy protection, for the farmer to have a decent share of it.

Now I desire to make a proposition to the Senate, and, so far as I can, to the country. I am no devotee of the protection idea. It grew up in this country long before I grew up. It has been here ever since Alexander Hamilton was Secretary of the Treasury. I am not responsible for this structure. We have all lived under it. If the commercial interests of the United States undertake to deprive the farmers of the United States of a fair share of protection, then the day will come when the farmers will turn upon them, and we will be put on the free-trade basis. That is a warning to them, and I have said that privately as they have talked about the matter, and I have written it in my letters to people who have written protests.

What was done a few days ago? The President of the United States lifted the tariff tax on textiles 42½ percent. That is in behalf of our domestic commerce, and I am not quarreling about it. That is probably a necessity, under the pressure of competition from the Orient. But if we are to do that for the textile industry, from which the farmer has to buy his clothes, and to which the farmer sells a portion of his cotton, why should not the farmer, when he gets into the market, also be protected against those in foreign lands who would bring him down to the oriental standard of living and wages?

So I think that not in the matter of the tariff theory, not only in the matter of the ultimate principle, but on the simple basis of equity and of common sense, the farmers of the United States have a right to this legislation. If they are denied it, those who deny it will live to see the day when 6,000,000 organized farmers, rising in power now as they never rose before, shot through with a sense of their capacity which they never had before, enjoying a leadership which they never knew before, having a place in American politics which they never had before, will undertake to say to those who would deprive them of an equal share in the national policy that if the farmers are denied protection those responsible will likewise be denied.

Mr. President, that is what moves me in this matter. I am willing to be reasonable in matters of this sort. I cannot quite distinguish between one sort of seed and another, and I question whether anyone else can. I do not feel that I should be making concessions here as to one oil and one seed or another. I know that if I make concessions with respect to one I will be called upon to make them with respect to another. I know that if I open the door on one article I will be called upon immediately, as a matter of fairness, to open the door on other articles.

I should like to be conciliatory and I should like to be agreeable, but I am going to ask the Senate not to sacrifice in the slightest respect any of the objectives contemplated by the motive and the principle of the amendment.

I have stated the motive and I have stated the objective. The motive is to give the American farmer, with respect to his fats and his oils, his cottonseed and his soybeans, the benefit of an excise tax which will tend to prevent his articles of produce, the fruits of his labors, being brought down in price to the level of the oriental competitor's price. And likewise with the farmers of the sea—the fishermen.

If we had a free-trade world, if we were starting this Nation anew, and I had to choose between starting on a free-trade basis and a protective basis, I imagine that I would at least think the matter over; I would try to look forward and find what was right and what was best. But I am not permitted to do that. We are dealing with a situation. As the great President Cleveland said, it is a condition and not a theory that confronts us.

Mr. President, what is the condition? The condition is that whenever a farmer buys a plow point, or whenever he buys a hat, or whenever his wife buys a calico dress, or whenever his children buy a pair of shoes, or whenever he buys a harness, he buys in a protected market.

Mr. McGILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. McGILL. I have today received several telegrams, one from the secretary of the State board of agriculture of my State, which reads as follows:

> Under soil-conservation program we believe flax industry will decidedly increase and hence should be adequately protected against foreign oils. Consider it advisable to include perilla oil and hempseed oil in Senate Finance Committee bill.

I also have telegrams urging that perilla and hempseed oil be given an excise tax. That is included in the Senator's amendment, is it not?

Mr. BAILEY. I regret that it is not. Perilla oil was stricken out in the committee, after discussion.

Mr. McGILL. The Senator's amendment has been amended in the committee?

Mr. BAILEY. I may say that my amendment was amended in the committee and was then redrawn by the Treasury to fit in with already existing legislation.

Mr. McGILL. Hempseed oil and perilla-seed oil have been stricken from the amendment by the committee?

Mr. BAILEY. No; I do not think hempseed oil was stricken. It was tung oil and perilla oil that were stricken from the amendment by the committee. I understand an amendment will be offered to include perilla oil and perilla seed, and whenever it is offered I shall be prepared to make a statement.

Mr. President, I was saying that whenever the farmer undertakes to buy something in the United States he walks into a protected market and he pays the American price. We all know that. But whenever he goes to sell anything in the United States, he walks into a free-trade market and sells at the world price. If that were put in the proper language, we could best say it in this way: We have created an American standard of living for American industry and an oriental standard of living for the American farmer. That is precisely the effect.

If we are to have a tariff, let us have it balanced. If we are to have protection, let it be equitable and fair. I will go along either way, but I am utterly unwilling to leave the farmer in the lurch and to give everyone else the benefit of the excise taxes and import taxes.

Mr. President, in conclusion I wish to give just one illustration—I have the data on my desk for the others—of the failure of the 1934 act to accomplish the great purpose for which it was designed. When we passed that law the imports of tallow into the United States amounted to only 245,000 pounds a year. Last year they amounted to 260,000,000 pounds. Senators can figure that out. It is a thousand times increase in the course of a year. One can run down the list and see that, with respect to these articles on which the amendment proposes to levy a tax by way of an import tax or excise in the form of a processing tax, in every case the article has been shipped into this country in substitution for an article upon which we place a tax.

The consequence is that while a great deal of good was done in the 1934 act, with the lapse of time these substitutes have come in. Hear me, Senators! The price of soybeans has gone down; the price of cottonseed has gone down; the price of animal fats has gone down; the price of tallow has gone down. Unless we pass the proposed amendment we can go home with the assurance that the 1934 act will have proved an absolute vanity before December of the present year.

Mr. President, with all earnestness and in the name of the farmers and the fishermen of America, I urge the most favorable consideration of this amendment. I have said a great deal about the farmers. I desire to say something about the fishermen. Off the coast on either shore, the Atlantic or Pacific, there are thousands and tens of thousands of humble men who go down to the sea in ships morning after morning, draw the wealth from those waters, and replenish the life of the American people. Off these coasts is as much wealth as there is off the coasts of any country on earth. The sea on the Pacific side or on the Gulf side or on the Atlantic side is teeming with fish. However, if the fishermen who cast their nets into the Pacific or the Atlantic or the Gulf cast their nets on the same basis as the fishermen who cast their nets in the Indian Ocean or the far Pacific, and if they are required to sell in the domestic market on the world-price basis, then you have doomed them to that competition against which this country has set its policy for 140 years. I make the same argument for the fishermen that I would for the farmers. The fisherman has a very great place in our economy; and if he did not have, his wealth has a great place in our economy. That wealth is not just his wealth—it is for all America. I make the same proposition with respect to him in the same language I used before: Are you going to require him, when he buys his nets or his rope or his boat or his anchor, to buy in a protected market; and when he asks the humble privilege to sell here in his own land on the same terms with those from whom he must buy, shall we deny that equality under the law? The question is practical. It is not theoretical. It is one of justice and common sense—not one of theory.

Mr. President, I ask the Senate to pass my amendment. I am unwilling to compromise it. I would not know how to go about compromising it. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS] asked me if I would agree to an amendment to place after "rapeseed" the language "unless denatured", and have the question wrought out in conference. Let it go to the conference as it is and have it wrought out there. Give us the benefit of the presumption, and we will have it before us.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. COUZENS. Unless the amendment were put in the bill the conferees would not have any jurisdiction. That is the reason why I asked to have it put in, so the conferees could throw it out if it was deemed improper.

Mr. BAILEY. I think the Senator is right about it, although I am not so familiar as he is with procedure in conference. I understand the Senator is correct about that.

Mr. COUZENS. That is correct. I do not ask the Senator from North Carolina to embarrass himself. I will offer the amendment on the floor and have the Senate do as it pleases about it.

Mr. BAILEY. That is very agreeable to me, and we shall hear the discussion and I myself will try to be reasonable about it.

Mr. President, that is about all I have to say about the amendment. I do not wish the Senate to think that it is a trivial matter. I do not wish the Senate to think that it is a political matter, either. This thing strikes at the fundamental problem of our farmers and of our country. Ever since I have been in the Senate we have known that the essential agricultural problem of this land was the disparity between the prices paid by the farmer and the prices received by the farmer. Congress can pass a thousand acts, and it can devalue the currency until it is all gone, but it will never correct that disparity so long as the farmer buys in a protective market and sells in the world market.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I offer as an amendment to the committee amendment, on page 267, line 23, after the words "rapeseed oil", to insert "unless denatured."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS of Utah in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, what the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] has said about the oil amendment is perfectly correct. I very heartily agree with him. The farmers must have protection if they are going to succeed in getting living wages, living prices, for the commodities they produce.

I desire to offer two amendments to the oil provision, section 701, on pages 267 and 268, to include perilla oil and perilla seed. On page 267, line 24, after "hempseed oil", I move to insert "perilla oil."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the matter to which the Senator has referred was very carefully considered by the committee when it had before it the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY]. After due consideration, perilla oil was eliminated from the bill.

There was before the committee considerable evidence based upon the fact that perilla oil, which in some degree competes with linseed oil, contains a higher iodine value, that it has greater drying properties, and has been used in the paint and varnish and linoleum industries in combination with soybean oil, which does not have such a high iodine value.

Virtually all the soybean oil consumed in this country is of domestic production, and soybeans are raised in more than 20 States, among which Illinois, Indiana, and North Carolina are leaders. As stated, soybean oil finds a ready market in the above-mentioned industries when combined with perilla. Thus, a tax on perilla would curtail its use and at the same time close one of the large outlets for the consumption of soybean oil.

The testimony before the committee, the members of which were in sympathy, evidently, with the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina, was to the effect that the inclusion of perilla oil would be injurious to the farmers themselves because its use in the making of varnish and linoleum induces a larger consumption of soybean oil. So the imposition of a tax on perilla oil would result in injuring the soybean industry, to say nothing of the repercussions on the linoleum, paint, and varnish industries.

The committee considered all those facts. I have not time to put in the RECORD the statements which were presented to the committee, but the committee concluded to eliminate perilla oil from the amendment which was offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] to the committee amendment.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from North Dakota what is the argument for the inclusion of perilla oil? I should like to know, because I am not familiar with the facts.

Mr. FRAZIER. I was going to state some of the facts in regard to the matter when I was interrupted. The paint industry is very much opposed to a tax on perilla oil. A tax of 4½ cents a pound on perilla oil would not bar that oil from coming into the country any more than does the tax on hempseed oil or sunflower oil or linseed oil prevents those products from coming in. Perilla oil comes in direct competition with linseed oil, which is produced in the flaxseed States and in the spring-wheat States, especially in the State of California and one or two of the Southwestern States, where, as I understand, a great deal of flaxseed is produced.

Over 3,000,000 acres of land are cultivated to flax, and unless a tax is put on perilla oil the farms now raising flaxseed, from which linseed oil is produced, will be compelled to cease that line of activity.

As to the increase in the imports of perilla oil, in 1931, 13,285,492 pounds were imported, whereas from January to November 1935, 70,412,323 pounds were imported, representing a tremendous increase.

As I have said, perilla oil comes in direct competition with linseed oil. There is a tax of 4½ cents a pound on linseed oil, and there is a tax of 65 cents a bushel on flaxseed itself.

I have another amendment by which I desire to include perilla seed at the end of this paragraph where the other seed items are included, with a rate of tax of 2 cents a pound.

Mr. President, it has been the policy of the Agricultural Department to curtail the production of wheat, especially because a surplus of wheat is produced in ordinary years, and if the 3,000,000 acres that now produce flaxseed are compelled to abandon the production of flaxseed because of the cheap oils coming in from foreign countries, it will be necessary to put those 3,000,000 acres into some other crop. In the spring-wheat States they will go into wheat; in some of the other States into cotton or something else.

So, Mr. President, if we are going to serve the policy of the Agricultural Department in cutting down the acreage of wheat especially, and some of the other farm products which are raised in abundance and in surplus, we must, it seems to me, put a fair tax on perilla oil and give the farmers a fair protection. As the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] has said, perilla oil is used with soybean oil; that is very true; but a tax of 4½ cents a pound on perilla oil would not bar it by any means. It might raise the price of paint a cent or two a gallon and the price of lineoleum perhaps a cent a square yard or something like that; but it would not be burdensome at all. On the other hand, it would mean a great deal to the farmers who produce flaxseed out of which linseed oil is manufactured. So it seems to me if we are going to have fair protection, we must, along with the other duties and taxes on oil, include perilla oil at a 4½-cent-a-pound rate, the same as in the case of hempseed oil and sunflower-seed oil and linseed oil.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FRAZIER. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I have received a number of communications from my State from manufacturers of paints and similar products in which they state that there is no other domestic oil that takes the place of perilla oil with respect to certain classes of paints and varnishes, and, in addition to the probable increase in the price of these products, that there is no domestic oil that will take the place of perilla oil in the manufacture of special types of paints and varnishes. Does the Senator know anything about that phase of this subject?

Mr. FRAZIER. It is true that perilla oil has a somewhat greater drying quality than has linseed oil, but it is no better in any other respect in the drying quality than linseed oil for paints and for varnishes. It does dry somewhat more quickly but if the tax were imposed as suggested by the amendment it would not, by any means, bar perilla oil from coming into the country.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FRAZIER. Yes.

Mr. COPELAND. I assume that the reason the Senator presents this amendment is to protect the flaxseed industry, is it not?

Mr. FRAZIER. That is correct.

Mr. COPELAND. Is the Senator aware that last year this country produced only 14,000,000 bushels of flaxseed and imported 17,000,000 bushels? The United States has never produced flaxseed enough, and I am quite confident that perilla oil is in no sense a competitor which harms the flaxseed industry.

Mr. FRAZIER. Yes, it is. The price of linseed oil is kept down, and the price of flaxseed is kept down, because of the increasingly large imports of perilla oil. As I said, the importations have increased from 13,000,000 pounds in 1931 to over 70,000,000 pounds last year.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, how does that compare with the number of pounds of domestic oil or of flaxseed or linseed oil that goes into this industry? The increase of a few million pounds in the imports of such a commodity does not mean so much unless it proves something by a comparison with the domestic product.

Mr. FRAZIER. Of course, we produce ordinarily about 50 percent of the amount of flaxseed and linseed oil that is used here at home. The remainder is imported.

Mr. BARKLEY. Is it the Senator's desire to prevent this other indispensable 50 percent which we import from coming in?

Mr. FRAZIER. Oh, no.

Mr. BARKLEY. But if it has to come in, anyway, he wants people to pay more for it?

Mr. FRAZIER. The object of any tax is to protect those who are raising the product at home. Of course, it makes people pay a little more for it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Assuming that we produce only 50 percent of what we use, then those who buy the other 50 percent are going to be penalized because the Senator wants to get another cent a pound for that which we produce?

Mr. FRAZIER. There is now a tax of 4½ cents on linseed oil.

Mr. BARKLEY. I know that.

Mr. FRAZIER. And still 50 percent practically of the linseed oil we consume is imported at the present time.

Mr. BARKLEY. And in spite of the fact that perilla oil is not taxed, only a small portion of it is coming in compared to our domestic production of other oils that go into the manufacture of paints.

Mr. FRAZIER. I would not say that at all. In 1931 linseed oil imported into this country amounted only to 235,000 pounds whereas in 1935, 2,232,451 pounds were imported. In 1933, 11,000,000 pounds of linseed oil came in. In the case of flaxseed, in 1935, 17,559,000 bushels were imported.

Mr. BARKLEY. What was the production in this country?

Mr. FRAZIER. We had a rather low production that year, in the neighborhood of 12,000,000 bushels, but ordinarily we produce about 17,000,000 bushels of flaxseed.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is difficult to compare bushels with pounds. What is the comparison?

Mr. FRAZIER. A bushel of flaxseed is 56 pounds, and 18 and a fraction pounds of oil are made from a bushel of flax.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. FRAZIER. Yes.

Mr. COPELAND. I remember very well that we had a debate on this subject in connection with the last tariff act. Under that act flax was given 65 cents a bushel protection, but, in spite of that, there has been a decline in production. And 25 cents a bushel was provided under the farm act.

Mr. FRAZIER. On a bushel of 56 pounds there was a duty of 65 cents.

Mr. COPELAND. The point is that, in spite of the protection this product has had, there has not been an increase of production, and we are still dependent on the foreign market for more than 50 percent of our flaxseed.

Mr. FRAZIER. Of course, we have had a drought in the spring-wheat States, and that was the reason for the reduction in the production of flax.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. MURRAY. Is it not a fact that the State of Montana and other Western States are now in the process of developing the growth of flax? Is it not also true that climatic conditions there are extremely favorable to the production of that crop, and it is regarded as one of the ways to get away from the overproduction of other grains?

Mr. FRAZIER. That is correct.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota yield?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. KING. Is it not a fact that the statement just made by the Senator from Montana is similar to statements made during the consideration of tariff bills for a number of years? I recall that for at least 10 or 15 years, whenever we had a tariff bill under consideration, representatives of the flaxseed producers came before us and insisted that if we would give them tariff protection they would develop the flaxseed industry. What was deemed sufficient protection was given, but the higher the tariff, the less proportionately was produced. An effort is now being made to use the pending revenue bill as a tariff bill in order to make good some of the promises which were made and which were never fulfilled.

Mr. FRAZIER. Of course, it is a revenue bill, and 4½ cents on perilla oil would bring in quite a bit of revenue.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. I do not see what these taxes on imported oils are if not a tariff. That is the reason for all these taxes on the imported oils. It is nothing new.

If the Senator will yield a moment further, I should like to call attention to the imports for the first 3 or 4 months of this year of flaxseed and perilla oil. There were 88,920,000 pounds of flaxseed imported in the first 4 months, and of perilla oil 46,000,000 pounds. There has been a great increase in the 4 months of this year over the same 4 months of last year. Last year there was imported $15,623,000 worth of linseed oil, and on that a duty of $11,420,000 was paid. There was $5,770,000 worth of perilla oil imported, and not one cent of duty was paid on it. Since perilla oil comes in free and linseed oil must pay a tax, the proportion of perilla oil which comes in competition with linseed oil has greatly increased, as the Senator from North Dakota has pointed out.

Four years ago the Tariff Commission reported that flaxseed oil which went into the manufacture of paints constituted 75 percent of the oil used for that purpose, and perilla oil, 1 percent. It is quite evident, from the great increase in the importation of perilla oil, that it has been displacing linseed oil in the paint industry. If Senators want to ruin the flax industry let them advocate the importation of perilla oil in greater and greater quantities. There is not a pound of it produced here. It comes from Manchuria or Siberia. It is a peculiar thing that nearly all the oils which come into the United States come from the Orient in competition with the oils produced by the farmers of this country. What is the reason for it?

We were promised when the new tariff policy was voted here that a trade policy would be inaugurated to help agriculture sell its surplus abroad. Thus far the agricultural interests of the Middle West have been discriminated against. I did not vote for the high-tariff policy, but I voted for the tariff-trade policy of this administration because we were told it was going to be used to trade our agricultural products to other countries. The Canadian treaty discriminated against the farmers for the benefit of the automobile industry, the most prosperous industry in the country. The industry which suffered the most from the tariff and from exploitation by the industrial centers, including the automobile industry, was again sacrificed for the benefit of the most prosperous industry we have in this country, the automobile industry.

I am willing to vote at any time to repeal the law giving the State Department the right to negotiate reciprocal-trade treaties as they have been doing at the expense of agriculture in the United States. We have here a chance to save the few farmers who raise flaxseed and to make the importers of perilla oil pay a small tax on their oil which competes with linseed oil.

Mr. FRAZIER. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] raised the point that a tax on perilla oil might increase the price of paint. The price of paint does not change with the price of oil unless there happens to be a very great change in the price of oil. For the best quality of paint, white lead and linseed oil, we pay now approximately $4 a gallon.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, may I invite attention to the fact that paints, and oils used in paints, enjoy a 25-percent ad valorem duty at the present time. How does it lie in the mouths of those people to complain if the farmer gets a little help?

Mr. FRAZIER. I thank the Senator. It was the paint men who were witnesses on perilla oil, according to the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING].

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FRAZIER. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I stated that the evidence before the committee showed and the facts presented indicated that the soybean is becoming a very important crop, I am told, in the United States. If perilla oil is imported and used, it increases the consumption of soybean oil, and to that extent is beneficial to the farmer.

Moreover, the evidence tended to show that perilla oil makes a better paint than any other oil; that it has qualities to promote rapid drying. Taking it by and large, the farmer would receive benefits from the importation of perilla oil far greater than any advantages which might result from its competition with linseed oil.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, according to the table I have here, the price of soybean oil has gone down during the past few months from a high point of 8.10 to 7.64.

Mr. KING. Was that because of the competition produced by linseed oil?

Mr. FRAZIER. No; perilla oil has gone down to some extent, too.

Mr. KING. Perilla oil is not in competition with soybean oil. It augments the consumption of soybean oil.

Mr. FRAZIER. That is very true, and the tax would not bar perilla oil by any means; but we do need it to protect linseed oil. Linseed oil has gone up a little bit in the past few months because of the scarcity in production last fall.

Mr. President, unless perilla oil is included in this paragraph, it means, according to the Department of Agriculture, that the production of flaxseed in the United States will soon be a thing of the past. I have here letters from the various crushers of flaxseed, the makers of linseed oil, and also from farm organizations, all advocating a tax on perilla oil.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota yield to me?

Mr. FRAZIER. Yes.

Mr. COPELAND. How can the Senator possibly say that the production of flaxseed will decrease when we now import more than we produce? There is always a market for it. It can always be crushed; it can always be used; but we are importing more than we produce, so it is perfectly absurd to talk about any advantage coming by reason of the tax.

Mr. FRAZIER. I tried to explain to the Senator from New York that the reason why the production of flaxseed has gone down is because of the climatic conditions in the past few years. The fact that we import some of these products, and do not produce enough for our consumption, is no argument for doing away with what we do produce, and importing it all. That is not an argument in favor of the farmers of this country, at least.

So, Mr. President, I hope the amendment will be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER] to the amendment of the committee.

On a division, the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk to the committee amendment, and ask to have it stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey offers an amendment to the committee amendment which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment on page 267, line 21, after the semicolon, it is proposed to strike out the words "olive oil and."

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, I am very happy that this amendment does not come within the category expressed by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY]. I am not speaking for those who go down to the sea in ships, or for those who own farms. I am speaking for a lot of plain, ordinary persons who buy from those who owns farms, and who buy from those who go down to the sea in ships, and who should be considered in connection with this bill, because they are having gratuitously laid upon them a tax which is not necessary.

Olive oil is not produced in this country. It is not in any way competitive with any other oil for inedible purposes. Its importation does not affect the fish industry, it does not affect the farm, but it does affect the persons employed in making palm-olive or olive-oil soap throughout the Nation.

In my home city—I speak of my own knowledge—there is one company, employing 2,500 persons, which uses olive oil, and cannot use any substitute. I refer to the Palmolive Co. That is the name of their soap. They have spent millions and millions of dollars to make their soap known throughout the world. Senators know it. Everyone knows it. It is more largely purchased than any other soap. In Kansas, in Indiana, in California, the makers of Palmolive soap employ thousands of persons. In my home city, as I have said, they employ 2,500 persons. This excise tax would make the price of olive oil 12 cents a pound, which would be prohibitive. The makers of Palmolive soap could not use it; they could not make their soap, and would have to close their factories, and 2,500 persons in my city would be coming to me as their Senator to know why they were thrown out of employment.

If inedible olive oil interfered with or competed with any other oil, I should not be here urging the Senate to strike it out of the bill; but it is not necessary to tax it, and it is not fair. I know that the Senate is not going to say to these people, "You must go out of business; you must lose your jobs. You cannot buy from the farmer; you cannot buy from the fisherman; you cannot live."

So, I urge, with all the earnestness of my soul, striking out olive oil, because it in no way competes with anything else.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. MOORE. I do.

Mr. LEWIS. May I ask the Senator from New Jersey if it be a safe assumption that olive oil coming into this country for the uses he has just described, and similar uses, comes principally from Italy? Does the Senator refer to the Italian oil?

Mr. MOORE. It comes from Spain, Italy, France, Greece, and many countries. I refer to the inedible oil, the sulphated oil, used for the purpose of making soap.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President——

Mr. MOORE. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. WAGNER. Of course I am entirely in sympathy with the protest the Senator from New Jersey has made, and I can add nothing to what he has so very clearly stated; but I desire to ask the Senator whether this is not a case where there is no way in which those who hope to force upon this particular industry the use of a substitute can do so. There is not any substitute that can be used. If this amendment should be adopted, as the Senator has said so convincingly that there is no need of my repeating it, it would simply mean that this industry would have to go out of business.

Mr. MOORE. It would have to go out of business, because the Federal Trade Commission would interfere if the manufacturers should attempt to use a substitute for olive oil.

Mr. WAGNER. Exactly; and this particular oil is not in competition with any oil that is produced in this county.

Mr. MOORE. I went to the Department of Agriculture, and they could not show me wherein olive oil competes with any domestic agricultural oil.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President——

Mr. MOORE. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. BARBOUR. If my colleague will permit just a word, I should like to say, in addition to all he has so ably pointed out so far as the soap industry is concerned, that the textile industry also is vitally interested in the elimination of this item from the bill. The sulphated olive oil, which by the same token is inedible, does not compete in any way with either animal fats, fish oils, or other like commodities which should be protected. It is the only commodity which can be used in the uses to which it is put, in view of its peculiar properties, in connection with the textile industry, particularly the silk industry. In other words, if every drop of it were excluded from this country, not one drop of anything else we are all trying to protect would be used in its place, because nothing else could be used. Certainly the amendment of my colleague should be adopted.

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President——

Mr. MOORE. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. MINTON. The situation so clearly outlined by the Senator from New Jersey is entirely applicable to the situation in Indiana. The same industry which has a large factory in New Jersey has a large factory in the State of Indiana. The manufacturers produce there the same well-known Palmolive soap, in which they have invested millions of dollars in developing and advertising. Obviously, Palmolive soap cannot be made out of fish oil. Such soap would be fish soap. Palmolive soap cannot be made out of cottonseed oil. Such soap would be cottonseed-oil soap, and so on down the line. The only oils from which Palmolive soap can be made are olive oil and palm oil, and we do not produce commercially in this country any oil of this kind. It is wholly inedible. It is the residue of the olive pulp that is mixed with a chemical solvent after the edible olive oil is taken out.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MINTON. I yield, although I do not believe I have the floor.

Mr. BAILEY. What is it the Senator from New Jersey proposes?

Mr. MOORE. To strike out the words "olive oil."

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator would strike out not only the inedible but the edible.

Mr. MOORE. No; because paragraph 1732 of the tariff law applies only to inedible olive oil.

Mr. BAILEY. But there is paragraph 3, relating to sesame oil, provided for in paragraph 1732 of the Tariff Act of 1930.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, this is provided for in paragraph 1732 of the tariff act, which paragraph provides only for inedible olive oil. Edible olive oil is already taxed, and it would not be affected by the amendment.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator takes the view that the word "olive" relates wholly to inedible olive oil?

Mr. MOORE. Yes.

Mr. BAILEY. If that is the case, I am prepared to agree to the amendment.

Mr. MOORE. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BAILEY. I assumed that was the case.

Mr. MOORE. That is the case.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, it is my recollection that a good many farm organizations in the country have protested the removal of the excise taxes on any substitute for either the vegetable fats produced in this country or animal fats. I have sent to my office for some letters I have received, but it is my recollection there was a protest against the removal of the excise taxes on any of these fats or fat substitutes.

Mr. MOORE. Not olive oil.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, I confess that I have not as great familiarity with the subject as have the gentlemen who have preceded me, but I congratulate them on the apostrophe to the manufacture of soap. The appeal on behalf of this pungent and beautiful soap for which they speak of course wrings the heart of every one of us and constitutes an ad for their product, beautiful and priceless; but when one of these gentlemen says there is no olive oil manufactured in the State of California he is utterly and absolutely in error. As between the olive groves there and the manufacture of soap in New Jersey, I would not for the world have a clash under any circumstances, but I am not in favor of the particular amendment now pending. While I appreciate all that has been said about Palmolive soap and soaps of every kind and every hue, I can see those green groves out in our territory, with all their magnificence and all their beauty, touched or injured even in behalf of soap, and I would not take from them any protection which might be accorded them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MOORE] to strike out of the committee amendment the words "olive oil and" in lines 21 and 22, page 267.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a memorandum prepared by F. R. Hoisington, Jr., of Greenwich, Conn., on the effect of the proposed 4½ percent per pound tax on inedible olive oil.

There being no objection, the memorandum was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MEMORANDUM OF EFFECTS OF PROPOSED 4½ PERCENT PER POUND TAX ON INEDIBLE OLIVE OIL

The principal interested groups to be considered in an analysis of the proposed tax on inedible olive oil would seem to be:

1. The consumers, both immediate and ultimate, of inedible olive oil;
2. Producers of competitive products, if any;
3. Suppliers of inedible olive oil;
4. United States exporters to Spain and other supplying countries;
5. United States investors in Spain and other supplying countries.

1. CONSUMPTION OF INEDIBLE OLIVE OIL—MAINLY IN SOAP

The term "inedible olive oil" includes both the so-called "commercial olive oil" which is expressed from the olive by the use of steam after the edible oil has been extracted by simple pressure, and "olive oil foots" or "sulphured olive oil", extracted by chemical means from the residue of "commercial olive oil." Ninety-nine percent of the sulphured oil, which constituted 75 percent of our imports of inedible olive oil in 1935, is used in the manufacture of soap and a substantial part of the commercial oil is also used in soap manufacture. (See exhibit 1.)

Imports of inedible olive oil in 1935 aggregated 53,540,670 pounds, valued at $3,730,082, the average cost being approximately 7 cents per pound. The tax of 4½ cents per pound is therefore over 60 percent of the average import value. So substantial an increase in cost to the soap manufacturer will, unless olive oil is replaced by some cheaper material, inevitably result in either a higher price to the consumer of soap (or a decrease in the size of the cake or package), a lower price paid to the producer of the olive oil, smaller profits to the manufacturer, or some combination of the foregoing effects. To the extent that the price was raised to the consumer, the general purchasing power of consumers would be reduced and consumption of soap and other products reduced.

2. INEDIBLE OLIVE OIL ONLY SLIGHTLY COMPETITIVE WITH DOMESTIC PRODUCTION

Only an insignificant quantity of olive oil is produced in the United States.

Although a considerable variety of oils and fats, both imported and domestic, is used in the manufacture of soap (see exhibit 2), each raw material has its peculiar use and in practice their interchangeability is limited. Replacement of one type of oil by another, while possible, would produce a different type of soap. Manufacturers are therefore reluctant to change their formula substantially, although the proportions of some of the materials may be varied within limits. As stated in Report 41 of the United States Tariff Commission, page 13:

"The fact that a given quantity of foreign oil is used does not necessarily mean that corresponding quantities of domestic oil would have been used if the foreign oil had not been imported. Nor does the fact that there has been a given increase in the use of foreign oils necessarily indicate that, without the increase, the consumption of the domestic product would have increased by like amount. Under certain conditions imports of a commodity are in the nature of a supplement to, rather than a replacement of, the domestic product. To what extent this is to be considered the situation with respect to the food and soap oils is a question to which no certain answer can be given, for analysis cannot be carried far without getting into matters which in their very nature are speculative.

"* * * in a brief survey the subject may perhaps best be approached by asking what changes would follow from a drastic reduction or elimination of the imports of foreign food and soap oils and oil-bearing materials. These changes might be qualitative or quantitative. From the qualitative standpoint it might be necessary to make important technical changes in the types of products made from oils. From the quantitative standpoint the effects might relate (a) to the total consumption of oil-containing foods and of soap; (b) to the exports of domestic oils, including lard; and (c) to the production of domestic food and soap oils, including lard.

"* * * a great reduction or the entire elimination of foreign oils would necessitate material changes in the character of many domestic products, particularly domestic soaps. It must be a matter of judgment whether so much foreign oil as may be involved in the production, in approximately the present proportions of the various types of products now being made in the United States, is to be considered as replacing domestic oils, assuming that domestic production could be increased correspondingly. The Commission expressed no opinion on this point but merely calls attention to the problem."

In any case inedible olive oil constitutes only about 3 percent of the total oils and fats used in soap manufacture. Moreover, this percentage has been relatively constant for a number of years and as shown in exhibit 2, the actual amount of inedible olive oil imported into the United States has decreased slightly since 1929. Department of Commerce figures for the first 3 months of 1936 show a further decrease to 4,530,876 pounds, or only about one-third of the amount imported in the average 3 months' period of 1935.

3. SPAIN A PRINCIPAL SUPPLIER OF INEDIBLE OLIVE OIL

In 1935 about 14 percent of the inedible olive oil imported into the United States came from Spain, and the amount of dollars involved was $736,598. (See exhibit 3.) Ninety-eight percent of these imports from Spain were commercial olive oil, since the poor crop left practically no sulphured oil available for export. For this reason Spain's share in the United States olive-oil imports was unusually small in 1935; the average proportion coming from Spain during the 3 years 1932–34 was 23 percent.

So far in 1936 imports from Spain, particularly of sulphured oil, have increased somewhat, due to the better crop, despite the sharp decrease in total imports of inedible olive oil. At the present time Spain is one of the largest suppliers of this material, the other important sources being North Africa and Greece.

Although inedible olive oil constitutes one of the less important of United States imports and constitutes only about 3 percent of the raw material used in the single industry of soap making, the importance of inedible olive oil in the export trade of Spain is potentially much greater. Although in 1935, which was a poor crop year, inedible olive oil accounted for only 4 percent of the United States imports from Spain, it has been as high as 8 percent of the total, having at times been exceeded only by olives and edible olive oil in importance.

4. UNITED STATES HAS LARGE FAVORABLE TRADE BALANCE WITH SPAIN

According to the Department of Commerce, United States exports to Spain in 1935 were $41,340,000 against which United States imports from Spain aggregated only $19,901,000, leaving an excess of exports of $21,439,000. The official Spanish statistics show a much larger unfavorable balance of 91,686,000 gold pesetas, equal to about $29,900,000. The difference between the trade balance reported by the United States and that reported by Spain is accounted for mainly by ocean freight, although differences in valuation and in time of shipment probably also affected the comparison. From the point of view of Spain's ability to furnish foreign exchange, the balance was probably nearer $29,900,000 than $21,439,000. The adverse balance of trade with the United States is understood to represent about one-half of the total adverse trade balance of Spain. Due to this fact and to the enforcement of clearing agreements by certain countries with which Spain possesses a favorable balance the delay in furnishing foreign exchange on ordinary applications on account of imports into Spain is now considerably over 1 year, according to advices from the United States commercial attaché in Madrid, published in European Financial Notes. It is clear that unless steps are taken to facilitate the acquisition of dollar exchange by Spain rather than measures tending to restrict the acquisition of dollars, such as it is believed the proposed tax on inedible olive oil would be, American exporters are going to find it increasingly difficult to collect for goods shipped to Spain, and inevitably will be obliged to restrict their exports to that country.

5. AMERICAN INVESTORS' FUNDS BLOCKED IN SPAIN

The plight of the American investor in Spain is particularly unfortunate at the present time. It is impossible under the present Spanish foreign exchange regulations to obtain any transfer of funds on capital account or even any remittances of dividends or interest except through the medium of facilitating "additional exports." The authorities are extremely reluctant to grant additional export permits and undoubtedly any measure tending to reduce imports from Spain to the United States would make it more difficult to obtain such permits and might even have so adverse a psychological effect on Spanish opinion as to result in the cancelation of existing permits.

It should be pointed out that the foreign subsidiaries of American companies provide employment, both abroad and at United States headquarters, for a large number of Americans on their administrative, technical, and clerical staffs. These employees are paid in dollars which, whether received in the United States or abroad, must necessarily be spent for products of American industry and agriculture, or for American services. The ability of the American companies to continue to pay these employees obviously depends on their ability to transfer funds from foreign countries to the United States.

The United States Department of State has been obtaining good results in reducing the barriers against United States export trade, and it is understood that the Department has been endeavoring to negotiate a reciprocal trade and payments agreement with Spain. The difficulties surrounding such negotiations are considerable in view of the difficult foreign exchange position of Spain, and there can be but little question that any action taken by United States tending to reduce American imports of Spanish goods would magnify such difficulties and might definitely block the conclusion of a Spanish-American treaty designed to aid American exporters to and investors in Spain. In any case, the proposed tax would appear to represent an exorbitant rate in proportion to the value of the product taxed and seemingly ill-advised, considering the essential nature of the product, the probable burden on the American consumer, and a lack of proportionate benefit to other American producers.

"MENACE" OF INCREASED AGRICULTURAL IMPORTS EXAGGERATED

In this connection the remarks of Mr. Lynn R. Edminster are of interest. In the course of an address in Birmingham, Ala., on May 19, 1936, Mr. Edminster explained the increase in agricultural imports, which have unduly alarmed some people, in the following words:

"The unvarnished truth concerning this whole agricultural import matter is that the bulk of the agricultural products which can be produced in this country at less than a prohibitive cost have long since been barred out of our markets by high tariffs. Well over half of our agricultural imports, normally, is comprised of products like rubber and coffee that cannot by the remotest stretch of the imagination be called competitive. Most of the remainder consists either of products, such as sugar and flaxseed, of which we do not produce enough for our needs notwithstanding the high duties we impose on them, or else of products imported because of special considerations of quality or because of seasonal or other special factors.

"The farmers of this country have long had almost complete possession of the domestic market for those agricultural products which could be grown in this country in sufficient quantities and without too great a cost. No one, so far as I know, seriously proposes that it should be otherwise. We could, however, go further and undertake to produce every dollar's worth of imported agricultural products, or substitutes for them, that can be grown at any cost in this country, as some would have us do. But that would certainly not solve the farm problem. It would only aggravate it. We would still have a vast farming area—possible 45,000,000 or 50,000,000 acres—producing for export, and a lot of these acres, I want to remind you, would be cotton acres. Either we must find outlets for these surplus acres or produce less. That explains why the trade-agreements program, far from being a threat to the farmers of this country, is so emphatically calculated to subserve their real interests * * *."

UNEXPECTED EFFECTS OF CERTAIN TAXES

If a tax protects, by excluding the article taxed, it yields no revenue. But often the protection afforded one industry is more than offset by the damage done to another. For example, the tax on whale oil caused a drop in imports of that oil from an average of 50,270,000 pounds in the 5 years 1930–34 to 23,070,000 pounds in 1935. But the Norwegians, instead of reducing their output of whale oil, diverted their exports to other countries, thereby displacing American exports (principally of lard) to those countries. "This oil, used principally in the manufacture of soap in this country, has been diverted to European countries, principally Germany, where the bulk of Norway's whale oil is used largely in the manufacture of margarine and constitutes 50 percent of all oils used, with experiments being made to raise it to 80 percent. This whale oil has helped supply a deficiency in Germany of all oils and fats. The United States in former years shipped large quantities of lard to Germany." Foodstuffs Round the World (Department of Commerce) February 11, 1936.

It is to be hoped that before levying a sales tax at the rate of some 60 percent ad valorem on inedible olive oil the Congress will consider both the burdens which such a tax would impose upon consumers and manufacturers and the danger that the harm to American agricultural and manufacturing producers for export to the countries producing olive oil will far exceed any benefit which may accrue to certain other industries which may derive a small competitive advantage or to the Treasury.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I am about to present an amendment providing that denatured whale oil for inedible use shall be exempted.

I take at par the statement of the able Senator from North Carolina that he desires to help the farmer. I know he is sincere when he so states and that he is telling the truth. However, I am amazed that the Democratic Party should bring forward at this particular time a tariff bill, because this is nothing short of that.

I suppose I should be the last person in the world to find fault with such action on the part of the committee, because when the Smoot-Hawley bill was before the Senate I was accused of having added as many items of protection as any Senator in the body; and the New York Sun, which was then alive, had much to say in criticism of my attitude and my position, because they said it was violative of all the traditions of the Democratic Party. Yet, Mr. President, the pending bill, which is called a revenue bill, which is designed to bring in taxes, has in the title and section under discussion language which is in effect the wording of a tariff bill.

How we are going to go before the people next fall and say we are different from the Republican Party is a mystery to me. For once I am going to pose as a free-trader as regard to one item. I am not going to make any pledges beyond that.

Further, my proposal is in the interest of the American farmer. It is particularly in the interest of the butter farmer of my State, the butter farmer of Wisconsin, and butter farmers everywhere. It is in the interest of the lard producers of the country.

Whale oil, strange as it may seem, in Europe is regarded as an edible oil; and the margarine which is made in Germany and in Norway and other of the Nordic countries is made with whale oil as the base. By reason of a prohibitive tariff upon whale oil, we have had a very great loss of business with Europe.

I do not ask the Senate to take anything from me as of any value so far as my statement is concerned; but I wish to show from the departments of the Government that it is considered desirable to admit inedible denatured whale oil free.

In the first place, I have told the Senate that whale oil is used abroad as a basis for margarine, a substitute for butter. I have before me a letter from the Department of Commerce dated May 20, from which I read as follows:

A marked decline in German imports of our lard coincided with the substantial increase in German imports of whale oil.

That is to say, we placed a high tariff upon whale oil, a tariff so high that the oil was sold so cheaply to Germany by Norway that the Germans now use it in preference to our lard; and most of this whale oil, as the Secretary of Commerce said, came from Norway under Norwegian-German clearing agreements to exchange Norwegian whale oil for German industrial goods.

Further, Mr. President, I have here a long letter from the Department of Agriculture, dated May 29. It is so late, and we are all so tired, that I hope it will not be necessary to read the letter, but I must do so if it is necessary to lay a foundation for the request I am making. The Department of Agriculture makes it very clear that European countries use large amounts of whale oil in producing cheap margarines suitable for their taste, and the margarines compete in a considerable degree with our lard. It is therefore felt that there may be some truth in the assertion that by excluding whale oil from industrial use in this country we are cheapening the price of lard substitutes in Europe, and thus curtailing our market for a major agricultural export. No countervailing advantages for our agriculture in the domestic market are discernible.

I have here, Mr. President, a letter from the Secretary of State, and I hope Senators will listen to it, unless the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] will relieve the situation for all of us by accepting the amendment. Would he be willing to do that?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I shall make my position perfectly plain. I could not personally accept the amendment. I do not think I could ever entertain the thought of accepting it. I like to be agreeable, but if we are going to accept that amendment to the committee amendment we might as well shoot the whole committee amendment to pieces.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I now read the letter of the Secretary of State. He says:

As stated before, my interest in this matter arises from a very deep concern over the adverse effect which this tax has had upon our trade relations with Norway and other countries. I ask you to consider that I have thoroughly weighed the relative benefits or injuries to all sections or classes in the United States before I came to the conclusion that we would be better off without this tax.

This letter was written after a consultation between the Secretary of State, the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Secretary of Commerce.

I continue reading:

The information which I had gathered during the last session convinced me, as well as the President and the Secretary of Agriculture—

I desire to emphasize that. Certainly the President has just as much interest in the welfare of agriculture as anyone of us can possibly have. The Secretary of State says:

The information which I had gathered during the last session convinced me, as well as the President and the Secretary of Agriculture, that this tax could be removed without injury to American agriculture or dairy interests. I regretted that the information which I gave you was insufficient to convince your committee members of the merits of the bill.

That was the bill of last year. This letter, however, is written this year, with reference to the present bill:

As you doubtless recall, the desired measure was passed as an amendment to H. R. 8974 when introduced by Mr. COPELAND in the Senate. When the amendment was sent to conference it was confronted with contentions by Messrs. Bland, Crittenden, George, and others, that whale oil, if admitted in the same quantities as formerly, would seriously compete with such domestically produced edibles as cottonseed oil, peanut oil, corn oil, and fish oil. There was, of course, no time left to secure accurate information to refute those contentions, or, might I say, dispel those fears, but I am glad to say that I now have information which proves those fears to have been unfounded.

I do not blame these men for objecting. The time was very short. The conference was a hurried one, and there was not time to assemble the facts. It was the right of the conferees to give them the benefit of the doubt.

The Secretary of State continues:

I now have information which proves these fears to have been unfounded. At that very time we were importing vast quantities of all of those products, a fact which alone would show that our industries were producing far less than sufficient to meet our domestic requirements. For instance, in 1935 we imported, in the first 11 months, 157,000,000 pounds of cottonseed oil; in the first 10 months, 72,000,000 pounds of peanut oil; in the first 11 months, 23,000,000 pounds of corn oil; in the first 11 months, 1,119,000 pounds of edible fish oil.

In view of the above would it not seem to you a logical conclusion that a product which in 1934 constituted one-fiftieth of 1 percent of all the fats used for shortening in the United States could not possibly compete with domestically produced edibles?

Conversely, the total of all the cottonseed oil, fish oils, and other domestically produced edible fats which have gone into the soap kettle has never at any time constituted more than 2 percent of all the fats in soap making in this country. Would not this fact alone refute any contention that the importation of a product which has never been extensively used for edible purposes in this country—

And, of course, under my amendment, I am not asking that edible whale oil may come in, but that all the whale oil which is permitted to come into commerce shall be denatured. Yet the Secretary of State said:

Would not this fact alone refute any contention that the importation of a product which has never been extensively used for edible purposes in this country could crowd into the soap kettle any appreciable quantity of domestically produced edibles?

Then the Secretary of State continued:

I stated to you last year that the exclusion of whale oil in its usual quantities had only served to stimulate the importation of inedible tallow to replace it in soap making.

No wonder the New York World Telegram and Evening Post are displaying cartoons showing the tallow dip and an effort of the Congress to place upon it a protective tariff, a more wicked protective tariff than was ever placed in the Smoot-Hawley bill, because of its pernicious and damaging effect upon agriculture of this country.

There are some measures against the importation of farm products from abroad which I would endorse with all my heart; but if edible whale oil should have a tariff placed upon it, instead of being a help to the American farmer it would do him positive harm, in that it would cut off the demand for butter and lard in European countries.

The Secretary of State continues:

Whereas our largest importation of whale oil has been 83,000,000 (average 50,000,000 per annum), we actually imported in the first 11 months of 1935, 236,000,000 pounds of inedible tallow.

Why does not someone get excited about that instead of getting excited about inedible whale oil?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly.

Mr. BAILEY. We did get excited about it. The Senator will find it in the bill. It is on a parity precisely with whale oil.

Mr. COPELAND. Will the Senator show me where the American farmer is going to be benefited by a tariff on inedible tallow?

Mr. BAILEY. All the oils are fundamentally the same. Under the process of hydrogenation one can take tallow and convert it into some other type of fat. The same thing can be done with whale oil. The Senator's conception is that simply because oil comes from a whale it is entitled to special consideration.

Mr. COPELAND. My contention is that since it comes from a whale and is edible, it is entirely in a different class from inedible tallow. In the old countries of Europe, if inedible tallow is brought in, it is not helping the American farmer by putting a tariff upon it, while, on the other hand, if a tariff is put upon a product which is edible and which is actually consumed in those European countries to the disadvantage and to the exclusion of lard and butter from America, a direct and positive damage has been done the American farmer.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator seems to think that the American raiser of cattle does not produce inedible tallow, but I imagine it is quite as possible here as elsewhere.

Mr. COPELAND. All the other products which are included in this measure are inedible. It so happens that the oil from a whale is not only edible but is actually eaten and consumed. Every time a ton of whale oil is consumed in Norway or Germany or Sweden or Denmark, the demand is cut off for a ton of lard or butter. That is not the case when we come to inedible tallow or inedible fish oil of any sort.

The removal of the tax on whale oil—

I quote further from the Secretary of State—could therefore only have the effect of admitting whale oil in its usual quantities at the possible expense of foreign inedible tallow. This would give our soap makers the opportunity to be free to purchase that foreign product which best suited their immediate needs. Moreover, if our own shortage of tallow and such fats can be traced to the accident of drought and/or pestilence, it would seem to be reasonable to state that these stocks of foreign tallow might at some time for the same reason be cut off from our soap makers.

To recapitulate—

The Secretary says—

we were forced to employ in 1935 more than 25 percent of the primary animal and vegetable fats and oils used in the production of compounds and shortening. We perforce imported approximately 40 percent of the fats used in the production of soap. There is no record of any domestically produced edible fats going into the soap kettle, while the amount of whale oil used for edible purposes continued to be negligible.

In answer to a question just asked me by the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], I will say that we do not export butter normally to Denmark, of course; they are butter makers; but we do export it to Germany, and we also send lard to these other countries.

The exclusion of whale oil has been definitely injurious to our export trade. First of all, the exchange available to Norwegians for the purchase of American goods has been reduced, and for this, as well as for sentimental reasons, our actual and potential export trade with Norway has been injured. Germany was our second largest market for lard. Norway has been forced to conclude clearing agreements with Germany for the disposition of the whale-oil catch, which our tax made Norway unable to sell here. The greatly increased use of whale oil in Germany for the manufacture of margarine has in part served to reduce our exports of lard to that country from $7,185,000 in 1933 to $1,546,000 in 1934, and to $136,135 in 1935 (11 months).

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. BONE. I am rather curious about one aspect of this problem.

The Senator from New York has read figures indicating that the imports of the commodities he mentions represent but an infinitesimal part of the needs and uses of the country. There are two aspects of this problem: First, whether the farmer is justified in his fears that this imported product is going to injure domestic prices. The second aspect of the problem is, why should there be imports, even in this trifling amount, if these things can be sufficiently produced by Americans? What do we gain in a practical way by continuing the traffic in a product which we can ourselves produce?

I am rather curious about that aspect of the matter.

Mr. COPELAND. It certainly is desirable for us—and I am sure the Senator from Washington will agree with me—to have just as much of an export market as possible for our farm products. There is not any doubt about that. Whenever we have an exportable surplus, we must get rid of it somewhere.

Mr. BONE. I understand that; but a very palpable contradiction lies in the fact that the people who live in America wish to control the American market, and they ask me and they ask the Senator from New York to protect the American market from the competition of foreign products. I think the Senator will agree with me on that. We are going to have to decide before very long the very practical question whether we wish to protect the American market to the very last degree, and thereby surrender all export trade, or whether we are going to try to hold on to the export trade and at the same time keep exports from foreign countries from coming here.

The Hearst newspapers, for instance, are suggesting very vigorously, day by day, that we "Buy American"; and if we should follow the Hearst technique we should not purchase anything from foreign countries. It might interest the Senator from New York to know that we probably should not need an American merchant marine if we did not have any foreign trade, so probably it would all work out all right; but the fact remains that the discussion we have here time after time—we have had it every year since I have been in the Senate—revolves around the fact that these imports constitute but an infinitesimal part of the consumption in this country. If they are so infinitesimal—one-fiftieth of 1 percent, or whatever the Senator states they are—why the necessity for so much discussion when we can certainly dispense with their use and exclude them, and the American farmer desires to have them excluded?

I do not know whether or not that suggestion appeals to the Senator, but the suggestion is a practical one from the attitude of the person whose letter the Senator is reading.

Mr. COPELAND. It might be as regards the other figures, which apply to inedible products, but here is a product which, if we do not buy some of it, will saturate the small foreign market we have left, to which we wish to carry goods by means of the American merchant marine. I would not ask, and do not ask, that whale oil be made free—I am talking only about the inedible whale oil—in order that we may expect to replace abroad the sales here and take over the market.

Mr. BONE. Section 701 is virtually a tariff.

Mr. COPELAND. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. BONE. It is not so much an excise tax as it is a tariff.

Mr. COPELAND. It is strictly a tariff.

Mr. BONE. I am not enough of an expert to know whether the exclusion of one-fiftieth of 1 percent of any commodity would have a very definite and drastic effect on domestic prices, but evidently the farmers of this country who are producing competitive products, both animal and vegetable, feel that it would have a deleterious effect on domestic market prices, and the question in my mind is whether or not that injurious effect on domestic market prices can be offset in any degree, or to a degree that ought to appeal to us as against the advantage of the foreign trade which they could give us.

Mr. COPELAND. I am trying to show to the Senate and trying to show to the American farmer that he is damaged by the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] so far as inedible whale oil is concerned.

Mr. BONE. We are confronted here day after day with the suggestion that imports from foreign countries constitute but a very tiny fraction of the domestic consumption. I have heard the able Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] suggest that there is a constant increase in the amount of imports in certain fields of production in this country; but when we analyze the figures and get a break-down of them, we find that they constitute but a very tiny fraction of the amount of actual consumption in this country.

Obviously, if that be true—it is a digression—I cannot see the object in spending millions and hundreds of millions of dollars on a merchant marine of our own and sweating the taxpayer to carry that infinitesimal fraction of our own local consumption. All of the matter we are discussing here revolves around the use and consumption in this country of but a tiny fraction of what we actually consume, one-fiftieth of 1 percent.

Mr. COPELAND. Would the Senator be willing to build a wall around the country?

Mr. BONE. No; but I certainly desire to know what I am spending money for when I spend it. I should not want to sweat American taxpayers to the extent of hundreds of millions of dollars to build an American merchant marine to carry one-fiftieth of 1 percent of the consumption of this country.

Mr. COPELAND. I suppose, if we had enough products and carried one-fiftieth of 1 percent of each one, we could, after a while, fill a ship.

Mr. BONE. We could fill a ship, and I should be willing to buy one ship; but I should not be willing to spend billions on ships.

Mr. COPELAND. That particular matter is not before us.

Mr. BONE. No; but it is going to be later on.

Mr. COPELAND. I hope it will be before us at some time during the week.

To conclude what the Secretary of State said, I wish to repeat that, in the opinion of the Secretary of State, the Secretary of Commerce, the Secretary of Labor, and the President, the use of whale oil in Europe for making margarine has resulted in the decreased sale of our products. To give again the figures of the Secretary of State, in 1933 the lard sent to Germany was valued at $7,185,000, in 1934 at $1,546,000, and in 1935 at $136,135.

The Secretary continues:

> I am not sure that the shift from lard to whale oil for margarine may not lead to a permanent restriction of some part of our German outlet for lard. It is obvious, therefore, that the tax has not only not benefited American agriculture but has served to react adversely upon our export trade with at least two countries, Norway and Germany.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. BONE. I do not desire to interrupt the Senator's argument, but the Senator comes from a great agricultural State, New York—perhaps one of the greatest in the Union.

Mr. COPELAND. It stands eighth in agriculture.

Mr. BONE. It is a great dairy State, and also produces much fruit. With regard to the statement from the Secretary of Agriculture, to which the Senator has referred, I am wondering whether he feels that the farmers of the United States are in harmony with the view expressed. I doubt whether they are in accord with that view, because a great many farm organizations have written me protesting against the importation of these products. I know the view of the Secretary of Agriculture. He feels that the only way by which the farmer can in the long run make any money is by preserving his foreign market, the market for the things which he is producing on the American farm. But apparently American farmers are not sold on that idea, and they have written to me, and probably to other Members of the Senate, protesting the importation into the United States of these oils and animal fats and substitutes of all kinds.

I am sorry that the farmers and the Secretary of Agriculture are not able to get together on this matter, because obviously—and if I am in error in this, I hope my colleagues will correct me—the farmers of the United States who have written me, and the farm organizations which have written me, have been practically a unit in protesting the importation into this country of these fat substitutes and animal and vegetable fats. Certainly if the farmers themselves are opposed to it, they are placing themselves squarely in the pathway of the logic of the Secretary of Agriculture. As between the two, I confess I should be tempted to follow the farmers.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, what the Senator has said is true. I think several of the large farm organizations are very much in favor of the Bailey amendment. I do not believe they have given any study to the particular matter to which I am addressing myself. I have been trying all afternoon to get hold of Mr. Brenckman, of the Grange. I desire to discuss with him this very matter. I know that the Farm Bureau Federation has taken the view I have set forth.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask for order in the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There must be order in the galleries and on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. COPELAND. I do not blame those concerned. Yesterday I was trying to make some remarks, when a man in the gallery rose and gave me competition. But I have had more competition this afternoon than I had yesterday.

Mr. President, I did not desire to proceed with this matter, and I asked the Senator from North Carolina to accept my amendment and take it to conference, but he would not do that, so I have been forced to make some sort of an argument. Now I desire to continue the argument, and I wish to say to the Senator from Washington that he is right when he states the position of the American Farm Bureau Federation, of which I am a member. The Senator from Washington probably does not know I am a farmer. I live on a farm, and I am a member of the American Farm Bureau Federation. I have a placard on the barn door of my place showing my membership. When I was a boy I went to the Grange picnics on the 22d of every August, so I know about that organization, too, and I have great respect for both organizations. I know the American Farm Bureau Federation in my State is a fine organization, and it deserves well at our hands. But I have known doctors to be mistaken. I perhaps am one who is mistaken today. In every lawsuit there is at least one lawyer who is mistaken, because only one of them wins.

It may well happen that the American Farm Bureau Federation and the Grange have not given attention to this particular matter. It would be strange indeed if we found the Cabinet of the President, beginning with the Secretary of State and going through the departments to the Secretary of Agriculture, to the Secretary of Commerce, and then to the President himself, were all mistaken. I have just tried to read to the Senate from a letter of the Secretary of State pointing out that last year he had failed to impress upon the conferees the importance of what he is doing.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for an inquiry?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. I should like to inquire of the Senator who has the bill in charge whether we cannot come to some agreement regarding a recess about this time.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. KING. I had hoped that the Senator from New York would have concluded his argument before this time, and I sincerely trust he will finish it in a short time.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I cannot promise to finish in a short time, but I am perfectly willing to suspend now and proceed tomorrow.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I am not asking the able Senator to conclude his argument. I hoped I might have an understanding with the Senator from Utah that a recess might be taken at this time. We have made very significant progress with the bill today. We had a very late session last evening, much office work has gone undone, and there is a desire among the Members of the Senate to recess about this time.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I suggest that we continue for 20 minutes longer, and then meet at 11 o'clock tomorrow.

Mr. McNARY. That cannot be done. We have made unusual strides today in the consideration of the bill. There has been an honest effort to go forward. I appeal to the Senator from Utah, in view of the late session last evening, and the very significant and remarkable progress made today, that we take a recess at this time and meet at 12 o'clock tomorrow, and if we can finish with the bill tomorrow night, which I think is possible, or the next day, we will have done splendidly. I am not speaking alone for myself, but I believe for every Member of the Senate. I know the desire of the Senator to get through with the bill, but let the Senator from New York conclude his remarks tomorrow. We will make progress by taking a recess at this time.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Oregon, who is the leader upon the other side of the Senate, always makes an appealing argument. I suggest that we continue until half past five.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a suggestion?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, would the Senator from Oregon be willing to enter into a unanimous-consent agreement to meet tomorrow morning at 11 o'clock?

Mr. McNARY. No, Mr. President. Two or three committees of great importance are meeting, and the members of those committees are also interested in the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from Oregon that we should have a night session tomorrow. I give notice that, if necessary, I shall ask for a night session tomorrow. Meanwhile, I suggest that we continue in session until 5:30, and then take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

Mr. McNARY. I shall agree that we continue in session until 5:30 today if no session is to be held tomorrow night.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, we shall cross that bridge tomorrow.

Mr. COPELAND. I wish to ask the acting floor leader until what hour tomorrow he proposes that the Senate recess.

Mr. KING. Until 12 o'clock noon.

Mr. COPELAND. There is to be an important meeting tomorrow of the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I simply made a suggestion. The action I propose could not be taken now except by unanimous consent, and that cannot be obtained.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask for the regular order.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, why not stop now? I ask the Senator from Utah, if it is proposed to stop 7 minutes from now, why not stop now?

Mr. KING. I supposed the Senator from New York had something on his mind that he desired to say.

Mr. COPELAND. I have a great deal on my mind to say, but I cannot say it in 7 minutes.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, yesterday I asked that Senate bill 4664, Calendar No. 2216, go over until today. It is a bill authorizing the appointment of an additional judge for the eastern district of Pennsylvania. I have just been informed that a similar measure has passed the House. I wish to inform the Senate that I withdraw my objection, and ask unanimous consent that the House bill be considered at this time and passed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have felt compelled to decline to agree to a number of requests of similar character. I think the Senator ought to wait until tomorrow, and at the opportune time the bill may be taken up for consideration.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, all that the Senator from Pennsylvania desires to do is to withdraw his objection to the consideration of the bill. I think his request should be granted.

Mr. KING. I understood the Senator had withdrawn his objection.

Mr. DAVIS. Yes, Mr. President. I now ask unanimous consent that the bill be taken up for consideration and passed this afternoon.

Mr. KING. I suggest to the Senator that he wait until tomorrow.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TRUMAN in the chair). The Senator will state it.

Mr. COPELAND. Have I the floor for the purpose of resuming the discussion tomorrow?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes; the Senator from New York has the floor.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. COPELAND. I do.

Mr. BLACK. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at this point a table of figures which shows the amount of tax which would be paid by a corporation making $100,000 profit on the corporate-tax plan as contained in the House bill, the corporate-tax plan as contained in the bill recommended by the majority of the Finance Committee, and the corporate-tax plan suggested by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] and myself in an amendment.

In addition to that, I ask leave to insert in the RECORD a similar table of figures with reference to corporations making net profits of $30,000, $40,000, and $50,000, which will show the comparative cost to the corporations of the taxes on profits of those amounts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The tables are as follows:

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I have at hand and had intended to ask to have printed in the RECORD in connection with the debate of the tax bill a table identical with one of those submitted by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK], prepared by experts and showing the amount of money that various corporations would pay under the House bill, under the committee bill, and under the proposed Black-La Follette substitute. In view of the fact that the Senator from Alabama has had the table printed in the RECORD, I shall not, of course, ask that the printing be duplicated.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE, LA CROSSE, WIS.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce, I report back favorably, without amendment, Senate bill 4680, authorizing the State of Wisconsin to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Mississippi River at or near La Crosse, La Crosse County, Wis.; and I submit a report (no. 2166) thereon.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, this is a bridge bill which is in the usual form and has been recommended by the Department. It is very important that it should be gotten over to the House of Representatives if action is to be taken at this session, so I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 4680) authorizing the State of Wisconsin to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge across the Mississippi River at or near La Crosse, La Crosse County, Wis., which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to facilitate interstate commerce, improve the postal service, and provide for military and other purposes, the State of Wisconsin be, and is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a free highway bridge and approaches thereto across the Mississippi River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near La Crosse, La Crosse County, Wis., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters", approved March 23, 1906, and subject to the conditions and limitations contained in this act.

SEC. 2. There is hereby conferred upon the State of Wisconsin all such rights and powers to enter upon lands and to acquire, condemn, occupy, possess, and use real estate and other property needed for the location, construction, operation, and maintenance of such bridge and its approaches as are possessed by railroad corporations for railroad purposes or by bridge corporations for bridge purposes in the State in which real estate or other property is situated, upon making just compensation therefor, to be ascertained and paid according to the laws of such State, and the proceedings therefor shall be the same as in the condemnation or expropriation of property for public purposes in such State.

SEC. 3. The right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

INTERNATIONAL COPYRIGHT UNION CONVENTION

Mr. DUFFY. Mr. President, there are on the calendar two treaties, one of them being the International Convention of the Copyright Union, as revised and signed at Rome on June 2, 1928. This treaty has already been ratified by the Senate, and, at my request, by unanimous consent, was reinstated pending an opportunity being given for the House of Representatives to consider Senate bill 3047, which in some respects deals with the same subject.

Inasmuch as we are now approaching the close of the session, and ample opportunity has been given to the House of Representatives to consider the matter, at the first favorable opportunity I shall call up the treaty, which, as I said, once before was ratified by the Senate. I do not intend to call it up for action tonight; but, in view of the fact that many persons interested may desire to know that the treaty may be taken up, I make the announcement at this time.

POSTMASTERS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the first nomination in order on the calendar.

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that nominations of postmasters on the calendar be confirmed en bloc.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, JUNE 2, 1936

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who art the life and the light of the world, the inspiration of good deeds and honest endeavors, guide us that we may not fail to be the true sons of the living God. Use us that we may be fit examples and upright leaders in every situation and under all circumstances. We pray that those inspirational influences which breathe forth from Thy holy bosom may not only touch us but be hastened until the army of the Lord shall have raised the brotherhood of common love. O throne of mystery, where have been clouds and darkness, let the glory of Thy presence break through; cause to be sent forth voices of righteousness and good will and of triumph in all our land. Through Christ our Redeemer. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. MANSFIELD, from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, submitted a conference report and statement on the bill (S. 3071) providing for the placing of improvements on the areas between the shore and bulkhead lines in rivers and harbors.

THE AMERICAN AIRSHIP AND THE AMERICAN PROFESSIONAL ENGINEER

Mr. O'CONNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Mr. Speaker, in the preparation of several articles published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, I have compiled valuable data which should be printed as a reference for those who may consider the design, construction, and operation of American airships.

When I speak of American airships, I refer to those which shall be designed and constructed by American engineers, upon American engineering principles and not to airships constructed, with Government funds, upon German Zeppelin principles or airships built in Germany.

It is not my thought to censure the great work or the accomplishments of the German Zeppelin organization, which for 30 years have concentrated its efforts upon improving airship design, construction, and operations. They have demonstrated the fact that large airships are practical and useful, as a means of air transportation. Improvement as the result of their effort cannot decrease the honor of originating the airship and history shall record the distinction due them for their work.

That such distinction is already conceded is shown by the fact the name "Zeppelin" enjoys such present popularity and is so strongly associated with airship construction in the minds of people that, not alone in Germany, it is thought the type of structure employed in the Zeppelin is the only one that will do for an airship.

As to the construction used in the Zeppelin, the criticism is often heard, even in authoritative German quarters, that it is not the most satisfactory solution and that it becomes less so with increase in size of the airship. The structure is an adaptation of the arch-frame bridge and is indeterminate, therefore cannot be calculated upon normal engineering formulas and is "estimated" upon empirical formulas.

In my remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, April 14, 1936, I said:

It is interesting to know that the empirical formulas are established only through experience of actual construction and use of what is classed as an indeterminate structure.

Prior to the construction of the Akron and Macon, the Zeppelin engineering organization was supplied with data for an airship as large as the Los Angeles or the Graf Zeppelin. They may have desired to construct an airship the size of the new Hindenburg, but perhaps had no data to then warrant such construction. What would they do about it?

It has been stated that when Germany believed it would win the war the German Imperial Command considered who would pay Germany. Their opponents were without resources to pay, and if the United States could be forced into war against Germany then the United States could pay Germany, for the United States was a wealthy Nation. The German Imperial Command, therefore, is said to have deliberately ordered certain naval operations which resulted in the United States becoming involved.

If the German Zeppelin engineers wanted definite information that would warrant them to build the Hindenburg, which is larger than the Akron or Macon, and to advance their empirical formulas with construction and operations data they would need to build larger airships or get someone else to pay for the experiment. My opinion is the United States was again chosen to be "the goat." The construction and destruction of the Akron and Macon undoubtedly supplied valuable data to the German Zeppelin organization for the construction of the Hindenburg.

I do not wish to say anything detrimental to our now-valued American citizens of German birth, who may formerly have been Zeppelin-trained engineers and came to our country to aid in the design and construction of the Akron.

The fact remains, however, that these engineers perhaps had not acquired the full technical knowledge then possessed by the Zeppelin organization, or, if they had such knowledge, they did not insist that the Akron and Macon be constructed with certain important reinforcements which I am informed were employed in the construction of previous Zeppelin airships.

I understand that during the Lighter-Than-Air Forum, at Akron, Ohio, July 25 and 26 last year, the Navy Department was charged with responsibility for the loss of the Akron and Macon because the builders were not allowed to include certain reinforcements which had been considered necessary and were included in previous Zeppelin-constructed airships.

I do not know if an investigation has been made concerning these charges or the result of such investigation, if made.

The loss of the Akron and Macon is thought to be directly the result of structural failure at a place which in other Zeppelin airships was reinforced, and the operating personnel of these airships were no more to blame than a driver of a new automobile should be blamed when a front axle breaks and the automobile is wrecked.

We should at least learn from the loss of $10,000,000 worth of airships, with the lives of scores of men, that we should now question the advice of those who may be responsible for the structure failure of the Akron and Macon and of those who now recommend the continued construction of such airships, when the United States has the most competent structural engineers in the world, who have been ignored when American airship construction has heretofore been considered.

Extending this thought further, I am informed that when the Hindenburg arrived, upon its first trip to the United States, an article was printed in a New York paper stating one of the officials of the Zeppelin organization explained the use of hydrogen gas, when it had been understood the Hindenburg would receive helium gas in America, by the fact the difference of 8 pounds lift per thousand cubic feet in the two gases required they build the Hindenburg lighter, like the Akron and Macon, or build it stronger and heavier.

The Hindenburg employs 7,000,000 cubic feet of hydrogen gas, thus will lift 56,000 pounds more than were helium used. An article in the press stated the payload of the Hindenburg was 28,000 pounds. Thus with helium gas there might be no pay load, in fact the airship might be 28,000 pounds heavier than the helium gas would lift.

In my letter of February 10, to Members of Congress, I referred to an article published in the New York Times January 19, 1936, detailing "modifications" in the original Hindenburg design. These modifications appeared to be of a character disclosed by the report on the Respess design, issued December 28, 1933. An American design that may comprise features of sufficient value to perhaps modify the Zeppelin design, in the construction of the latest German airship, should be valuable in considering American airship construction.

The fact that the United States has a generous supply of helium gas, while other nations have none, and that this nonexplosive gas increases the safety of airships, both in commercial and military service, should influence the United States to build and operate airships for extending our foreign trade and for the defense of our Nation in the event of war.

In order to use this gas, an airship must be strong to resist stresses and provide safe operations, also be much lighter in weight than appears is possible to be when the Zeppelin construction is employed, as in the Hindenburg.

These factors of necessary strength for safety and of light weight to use helium gas for increased safety, must necessarily call for a new type of airship frame, especially in view of the fact that even in authoritive German quarters it is recognized that the Zeppelin adaptation of the arch frame is not the most satisfactory solution and it becomes less so with the increase in size of the airship.

The problem is one to be solved by professional structural engineers, of which America has the best in the world.

The selection of the best materials with consideration of their strength-weight factors, creating a design for using these materials in the most efficient manner, removing the possibility of reversal of stress and fatigue which may secretly affect the strength of materials and reduce the life of a structure, distributing the aerodynamic and static loads to avoid localized stresses, all require the ingenuity and experience of the best qualified professional engineers.

These factors have been studied for several years by eminent American engineers, and an improved design for large airship frames has been prepared for the construction of American airships. This design will meet the above specifications with use of the highest grade steel-wire bridge cables for tension and the best aluminum alloy for compression.

Reversal of stress is not possible in this design and aerodynamic or load stresses are received on elastic steel cables in a manner to absorb the stress by "extension" to adjacent elastic members.

The safety factor of this frame is high; it is light in weight; it will provide a long period of useful service, has relatively few parts, and the cost of its construction is low.

I have been very much impressed by the Vow of Service prepared by Dr. D. B. Steinman, president of the National Society of Professional Engineers, published in the February issue of the American Engineer, as follows:

The engineer—he is the master of the laws of Nature. On a sound foundation of mathematics, science, and economics he bends the materials and forces of Nature to his plan and rears the structure of civilization.

With vision, resourcefulness, and ingenuity, he labors to increase the comfort, wealth, and safety of his fellow men.

He attacks his problems with the vision of the pioneer, the integrity of the scientist, the accuracy of the mathematician, the practicality of the businessman, the resourcefulness of the inventor, and the courage of the conqueror.

He is the planner and builder. He builds his visions into enduring realities.

He is the pathfinder of civilization. He breaks down barriers, bridges chasms, establishes communication, and straightens the way for commerce and human progress.

He is the protagonist of efficiency. He reduces effort, eliminates waste, and increases production.

He is the creator of a nation's wealth. He drains the swamps, reclaims the deserts, develops resources, and harnesses power. He builds the machinery of industry, the wheels of commerce, and the structure of business.

He is the great coordinator. He plans and directs the construction of projects representing the investment of millions of dollars and involving the labor of thousands of men.

He investigates with open mind and gets the facts before he makes decisions. He plans with thoroughness and builds with fidelity.

To his rich heritage from the labors of past generations of engineers and scientists he adds his contributions. He continues the work of forcing outward the challenging barriers that separate man's efforts from the impossible.

Dr. Steinman is an eminent consulting engineer in the design and construction of both arch-frame and suspension bridges and is recognized throughout the world as among the leaders in his profession. He has designed many of the great bridges in North and South America, as well as other sections of the world.

He has knowledge and experience that assures his ability to analyze the Zeppelin arch-bridge type frame, the aerodynamic and load stresses imposed on an airship in flight, and to design an airship structure with the application of the suspension-bridge engineering principles for any size airships.

I am informed that Dr. Steinman was consultant on the construction of the George Washington Bridge crossing the Hudson River at New York, is consultant on the design of the Tri-Borough Bridge now under construction at New York, is consultant on the construction of the Golden Gate Bridge at San Francisco, as well as for several other large American bridges completed during the past few years.

One of our American inventors developed the idea of employing the self-anchored suspension bridge principle in the construction of airships. With the cooperation and advice of the Guggenheim School of Aeronautics of New York University, following standard procedure, a scale model was made and tested with very satisfactory results. Robinson & Steinman, consulting engineers, were then employed to design a suspension-bridge frame for an airship, to be constructed upon specifications prepared by the Bureau of Aeronautics of the Navy Department, for the Akron and Macon.

Upon the completion of this work Messrs. Robinson & Steinman submitted a report in which were the following statements:

Whatever may be said of the performance of the Zeppelin airship will apply equally to the Respess airship, but the Respess airship would have in addition the following advantages:

Greater strength and safety.
Greater inherent strength.
Increased length of life.
Decreased maintenance costs.
More efficient use of material.
Reduction in cost of construction.
Reduction in time of construction.
Ease of construction.
Simplicity, accuracy, and definiteness of calculation.

The stresses in this airship never reverse, thereby removing all fear of failure in the hull through fatigue and crystallization.

The net pay load will be unusually high, facilitating economical commercial operation.

It should be explained that the design referred to was for an airship 147 feet in diameter by 785 feet long. In view of the fact the frame was the chief consideration, Robinson & Steinman was supplied with complete plans prepared by British airship engineers with the cooperation of an eminent American consulting engineer, which plans were made for submitting a bid for the construction of the two naval airships, later named the Akron and the Macon, but owing to a technicality the bid was not considered in awarding the contract.

It should be noted Robinson & Steinman not only had knowledge of the construction of the Zeppelin-frame airships but were also fully advised on the details of British airship construction. Thus their conclusions of "greater strength and safety" with other enumerated advantages was for the American design as against the best production of other nations which had designed, constructed, and successfully operated large airships.

We do not, however, have to accept the judgment of only one organization of eminent American engineers. During the present session of Congress I have received letters from engineering societies and professional engineers from nearly all States endorsing the structural principles of the American design, endorsing the report and conclusions of Robinson & Steinman, or deploring the fact our Government has neglected the American engineers who are competent to design and construct American airships.

Connecticut Society of Professional Engineers—Respess Airship, May 30, 1936

At a joint meeting last night of the executive board of the Connecticut Society of Professional Engineers with the legislative committee of the society, a detailed report was received from the subcommittee that was appointed at the last meeting of the board of directors to study the relative values of the American designed suspension-bridge-frame airship and the conventional type airship designs. At the committee's request, designs, data, computations and structural details, with a report from Robinson and Steinman, bridge engineers, on the Respess airship was submitted to it. After 2 weeks of independent study, the committee members joined unanimously in their report which was substantially as follows:

The Respess airship design of suspension-bridge type has structural merit over the conventional type of airship because of these evident advantages:

1. Inherently greater strength with less material.
2. Lower cost of building per cubic foot.

3. Greater factor of safety in storms, at anchor, and in maneuvering.
4. Greater pay load.
5. Bow and stern of greater strength.

Representatives from practically all branches of professional engineering, aeronautical, Diesel, structural, electric, mechanical, power plant, civil, metallurgical, were involved in the study, report, and recommendations.

I stand on record as endorsing the American professional engineer as one class of our citizens who merit real consideration in periods of depression and in matters so closely akin to national defense as is the American airship. After all, it is from their initiative and development in new fields of science that employment eventually emanates.

Government appropriations or loans could well be directed into channels that would increase their employment, as in American airship design and construction or other new types of industries, for which no provision for Government aid, in financing, has been made. Failing action by the present Congress, relief funds could be directed into these channels as loans for providing immediate employment and to be repaid over a period of years to the Treasury general funds.

A notable endorsement of the American engineer, for constructing American airships, comes from Dr. Theodor Von Karman, a former leading German lighter-than-aircraft authority, now an American citizen, who is recognized as being a valuable aid in American heavier-than-aircraft development, through his outstanding ability in stress analysis. The Oakland (Calif.) Tribune published the following:

EXPERT URGES UNITED STATES TO PUSH ON WITH DIRIGIBLES—AMERICA SHOULD NOT LEAVE THIS CONSTRUCTION TO GERMANS, SAYS VON KARMAN

PASADENA, March 15.—America should not "leave dirigible construction to the Germans", in the opinion of Dr. Theodor Von Karman, member of the "scientific jury" appointed to decide this country's airship future, and himself a former leading German lighter-than-air-craft authority.

Dr. Von Karman, director of the Guggenheim Graduate School of Aeronautics of the California Institute of Technology, urged that the United States push ahead in commercial airship construction for, he said, trans-Atlantic air service will be accomplished only by dirigibles.

Reticent regarding the course the Navy should take, in the light of the Macon and Akron disasters, he said: "It appears to me that possibly the technical problems should be cleared up before dirigibles are made a part of routine military work.

Dr. Von Karman, who was director of the German Aeronautical Institute at Aachen before coming to the United States, praised American aircraft builders' skill and said American ships had been subjected to unfair comparisons with German aircraft.

"It is not quite fair", he said, "to compare the Navy's record of three military airship disasters with the successful record of the Graf Zeppelin, a commercial transport. Military aircraft present greater problems, both because of their construction and the use." He pointed out that Germany lost more than 50 zeppelins during the World War through enemy bullets and disasters such as those that overtook the Macon and Akron.

Airplanes will be used for transoceanic-mail service, but not extensively for passengers and freight, Dr. Von Karman predicted.

Opposed to the employment of the American engineer in American design and construction, we have the "Zeppelin" name, coupled with a most efficient organization, that may have been influential in discouraging the consideration of any United States dirigible construction upon American design. This influence is still endeavoring to have us buy airships built in Germany or to buld airships of German design in the United States. I may best illustrate this fact by referring to my remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, May 14, 1936, as follows:

It is not my purpose to make any statement that may reflect on the German engineers who constructed the Hindenburg or of those in charge of the airship during its successful flight, but as an American citizen and Member of Congress, I feel it my duty to comment on certain statements published in the press.

The Sunday Star, Washington, D. C., May 10, states:

Eckener reveals purpose of trips. United States financial backing is sought. Dr. Hugo Eckener, commodore of the Zeppelin fleet, said in an interview tonight the primary purpose of the Hindenburg's cruises to the United States this year was to win financial backing for a German-American trans-Atlantic transport service.

Such an arrangement between the two countries was planned in 1928, he pointed out, but was frustrated by the depression.

Loss of the Navy dirigibles Macon and Akron has since soured the American public against dirigibles, he said, and lighter-than-air enthusiasts hope to remove that feeling by week-to-week demonstrations of the Hindenburg's capabilities.

It is of interest to know where this financial backing is expected to come from. I have a letter signed by a vice president of the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., dated April 28, 1936, stating the following:

We are interested in the subject of airships but are not presently considering the erection of a ship. This has to go through the process of authorization by Congress.

The Washington Herald, Sunday, May 10, states:

United States dirigible sought to match Hindenburg. Naval experts' hopes rise as officials prepare to greet Eckener. Successful trans-Atlantic flight of the German Zeppelin Hindenburg yesterday buoyed hopes of naval and congressional lighter-than-air enthusiasts that the Federal Government would sponsor constructing a twin ship, perhaps to complement the German air liner's North Atlantic schedule.

Senator BULKLEY, Democrat, of Ohio, has introduced a bill authorizing Federal construction of such a ship.

Navy experts have already planned for construction of a giant sky cruiser exceeding the Hindenburg dimensions, to replace the U. S. S. Akron, lost at sea 2 years ago.

The Navy's scientific advisory committee, following investigation of the Akron and Macon disasters, in a preliminary report has recommended continuance of the Navy policy of developing the science of lighter-than-air flights and has urged construction of a new superdirigible. The ship would be operated experimentally apart from the fleet.

The Goodyear-Zeppelin Corporation, at Akron, Ohio, staffed with German Zeppelin engineers, has assured the Navy such a ship could be built for about $3,000,000.

The Navy high command maintains such a dirigible would be the equivalent of a $10,000,000 light cruiser in fleet scouting, her higher speed compensating for her greater vulnerability.

The Navy plans call for "belly hangers", housing up to 10 airplanes. Planes would be launched and retrieved by a patented trapeze. An observer could watch an enemy fleet operations from a "subcloud car" suspended from a thousand-foot cable while the dirigible remained hidden from detection above the clouds.

The statement that "Navy experts already have planned for construction of a giant sky cruiser, exceeding the Hindenburg dimensions, to replace the U. S. S. Akron, lost at sea 2 years ago", again recalls my remarks printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 14, 1936, in which I said I believed the United States was once more chosen to be "the goat."

In reference to the paragraph "the Goodyear-Zeppelin Corporation of Akron, Ohio, staffed with German Zeppelin engineers, has assured the Navy such a ship could be built for about $3,000,000." I am wondering if a Zeppelin-type airship or the American suspension-bridge frame airship is referred to.

On October 29, 1934, the Honorable Ewing Y. Mitchell, then Assistant Secretary of Commerce, presented to the Federal Aviation Commission an airship-construction program endorsed by the Department of Commerce, and which Mr. Mitchell stated was prepared by the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics. This program called for the construction of two Goodyear-Zeppelin airships, of 7,000,000 cubic feet capacity, which is the size of the Hindenburg, the first costing $6,500,000 and the second costing $4,250,000.

Now, according to press reports, the Goodyear-Zeppelin Corporation has assured the Navy a much larger airship "could be built for about $3,000,000." It seems that the past 20 months have reduced the cost of American airship construction very materially.

The demonstration made by the Hindenburg is worthy in that it shows the capabilities of large airships in transoceanic commercial service. If American engineers duplicated the Hindenburg, except in its frame, what could prevent such airship performing as well as the Hindenburg?

If the American airship frame was stronger, the airship would be safer; if American nonexplosive helium gas were used, instead of explosive hydrogen gas, the American airship would be much safer; if the American frame were of less weight, a more profitable pay load could be carried; and were the total engine power increased, the American airship would be faster.

I have introduced the bill, H. R. 12682, May 12, 1936, authorizing the construction and operation of two American trans-Atlantic airships, through a loan by the Secretary of the Treasury.

The effect of this bill is that Congress provides means for an organization of American engineers and business executives to solve the American airship problem, and to design, construct, equip, and operate American airships in overseas commercial service. This bill is as follows:

That for the purpose of fostering the American airship industry and to promote American overseas trade with use of commercial airships, to be available in time of war, to encourage American design, construction, and operation of airships, to demonstrate the value and profit of overseas airship service thus to promote its extension with private capital, and to provide immediate employment in American airship construction, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to lend the sum of $12,000,000 to the Respess Aeronautical Engineering Corporation for the purposes of constructing an American airship plant, an Atlantic operating terminal, and two airships employing the self-anchored suspension-bridge type frame, each airship having not less than 7,000,000 cubic feet of helium-gas capacity, and for operating such airships in commercial service between the United States and England or other European countries.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Treasury shall investigate the personnel and engineering organization of the Respess Aeronautical Engineering Corporation and he may require such changes in the present organization as he shall deem to be advisable before such loan is made, and he shall require that full insurance be carried to cover replacement in event of fire, damage, or loss of the airships or other property purchased or constructed with the proceeds of the loan until the full amount is repaid.

SEC. 3. Such loans shall carry interest charges at the rate of 3½ percent per annum, which shall cumulate for a 2-year period, and shall remain a lien on the patents, the patent rights, and all present and subsequently acquired assets of the corporation until paid. The loan, plus accumulated interest, shall be paid in 10 annual payments, the first payment to be made 3 years after the date of the enactment of this act, and any payments on account of the loan shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to be credited to miscellaneous receipts.

SEC. 4. There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $12,000,000 to carry out the provisions of this act.

This bill is for the purpose of providing a loan through which the development and operations of airships will be delegated by Congress to American engineers. It is a business proposition in which the Government extends its aid in forwarding an activity that is of extraordinary value to our Nation, an activity that has already been delayed too long.

The loan may provide the following:

1. Approximately 80 percent of the loan may be used in direct and indirect employment of labor.

2. It may give employment to great numbers of engineers and highly skilled men for whom it is now difficult to provide work in their respective lines.

3. It may construct two great airports, one being in the South and one on the Atlantic seaboard. These airports should be of great military value in event of war.

4. Within 2 weeks after the money is made available for this work several hundred men may be employed, and within a few months approximately 2,000 men may be employed in direct labor, with perhaps several thousand employed in indirect labor.

5. Many types of established industries would be benefited through orders placed for this activity. Approximately 25 percent of the loan may be expended for orders placed with major industries.

6. It may be the start of a great, new American industry and be the first step toward establishing a major form of overseas transportation through which our commerce with foreign nations may be expedited and increased.

7. With the evidence of Government support, as demonstrated by this loan, it is proposed within the year to arrange private financing for the continued construction of airships.

8. It is proposed, through the employment of three and in some cases four shifts of workers, the construction program may be completed in a period of about 12 months.

9. After a thorough test of the airships it is expected trans-Atlantic service may be established, with each airship making a round trip weekly between our Atlantic coast and England. If the loan is approved by this Congress, these airships may be in regular service before the fall of 1937.

10. Such service may expedite our mails and commerce to other nations of the world, to Europe, and to countries which are now best served by transportation from England or European countries.

11. It may in time establish the United States in a dominating commercial position, through fast and economical transportation direct to overseas commercial centers, including those within the interior of continents where rapid transportation is now unknown.

12. It may provide twice-a-week transportation across the Atlantic in less than 40 hours, which, with later improvement, may be reduced to 30 hours.

13. This may be America's answer in the race for faster ocean vessels, that in other countries are built with large Government-construction loans and are supported by annual operating subsidies of considerable size.

14. It will demonstrate to American inventive genius and skilled engineers the confidence of our Government in their ability to design and construct American airships. It will also demonstrate the superiority of American design and construction of airships.

In view of the fact the borrower must depend upon commercial operations for its profit, the construction would be at the lowest cost and of the best quality. No profit may be added nor any royalty be paid under the patents.

Considering the conditions for this loan, we should also consider estimates submitted on October 29, 1934, by the Honorable Ewing Y. Mitchell to the Federal Aviation Commission in the airship-construction program endorsed by the Department of Commerce. The two Goodyear-Zeppelin airships would cost $10,750,000 and an Atlantic operating terminal to cost $3,000,000, making a total of $13,750,000.

With the loan of only $12,000,000 the Government would have for security two better, stronger, and safer airships of approximately the same size or larger than the Goodyear-Zeppelins, and an Atlantic operating terminal; also an airship construction plant costing approximately $4,000,000, making a total of $17,500,000, with the valuation based on the cost of two airships and a commercial airship terminal, being $13,750,000 in the Department of Commerce proposal. Further, $1,000,000 of the loan is either applied for additional construction or operating capital; also the patents and patent rights and all present and subsequently acquired assets of the borrower would be pledged as security until the full amount of the loan is paid.

The borrower is required to carry full insurance to cover replacement in event of fire, damage, or loss of the airships or other property purchased or constructed with the proceeds of the loan, until full payment is made. Insurance for these airships was taken up with a Lloyd's American representative, and at first 20 percent of the airships' value was required for annual payment. However, when further consideration was given to the suspension-bridge type of frame to be employed, the insurance charge was reduced to 15 percent and it was stated might be reduced to 10 percent.

The cost of insurance aptly illustrated the difference in the proposal submitted by the Department of Commerce and the present proposal for private construction and operation. Twenty percent annual insurance on $10,750,000 for two airships of the Zeppelin type would amount to $2,150,000, while 15 percent annually on the $5,000,000 cost of two American-designed airships would be only $750,000. Quite a difference, and similar differences would be shown by the sums required for depreciation, maintenance, interest, and so forth.

Another comparison is interesting. Mr. Mitchell, in presenting the Commerce Department airship-construction plan, told the Federal Aviation Commission that "Mr. Harpman, representative of the Goodyear-Zeppelin Corporation of Akron, Ohio, stated at our conference on the subject of airships that his company would enter into a contract for operation of the two airships and maintenance for 5 years on the basis of a dollar per year, if the Government desired them to submit a bid." This would seem to establish the value placed by the builders of the two airships, for which the Government would be required to pay $10,750,000.

Going back 4 years, when bill H. R. 8681 was before the House Commerce Committee, the Goodyear-Zeppelin Corporation offered to build airships and operate them in trans-Atlantic service to Germany if the Government would pay $32 per mile—in both directions but carrying mail in only one direction—for a reservation of 10,000 pounds of mail. This charge of $32 per mile for 8,000 miles, round trip to Germany, would have cost the Government $256,000 for transporting 10,000 pounds of mail across the Atlantic to Germany, or for only 1 pound of mail if only that amount were forwarded.

The Commerce Committee, did, however, recommend a payment of $20 per mile and the bill H. R. 8681 was approved on the floor of the House on June 15, 1932, thus a mail charge of $16 per pound was approved.

With the loan of only $12,000,000 the Respess Aeronautical Engineering Corporation proposes to establish twice-a-week airship service in both directions, carrying passengers, mail, and freight at only $1.50 per pound. They do not require that the Government send any mail on its airships; but if the Post Office Department wishes to use its services the charge per pound is the same as reservation for passengers, $1.50 per pound.

Further, instead of the Government buying airships at a high figure, possibly including a large profit, and leasing them back to the builders at $1 per year rental, the Respess Aeronautical Engineering Corporation shall repay the full amount of the loan plus interest, will maintain the airships in first-class condition, set aside funds to replace the airships when it is deemed necessary to retire same and will carry full insurance to cover replacement if an airship is damaged or destroyed, as well as liability insurance for passengers, mail, and merchandise.

That airships can do this is because the Respess airships will be safer, stronger, have a much longer useful life, be capable of carrying a larger pay load, and because of their simplicity and ease of construction these airships may be built in America at lower cost than Zeppelin airships can be built, with cheaper labor, in Germany.

That Respess airships may be operated at an attractive profit is indicated by an estimate of the probable annual receipts and expenditures for such service, as contemplated for the construction and operation of two 7,000,000-cubic-feet airships, each making a round trip weekly between our Atlantic coast and England or Europe.

These estimates were submitted with realization that no service of this character has ever been operated, and consequently the figures must be taken as approximate. A sincere effort was made to estimate the operating charges high and the prospective income low. It is fair to state also the pay load is believed will be much more than 48,000 pounds.

Airships for commercial operations of this character must be strong and flexible in order to resist unusual or expected stresses during all seasons of the year and in all kinds of weather. They must have speed of at least 100 miles per hour for rapid transportation and to avoid storms so far as may be possible. They must be able to operate at relatively high altitudes if necessary in order to avoid low storms or seek a level of most favorable air currents, and they must have these qualities without reduction of the useful load beyond the point of providing a profitable pay load.

There are two types of thoroughly tested engineering principles that may be employed in designing airship frames. One is that of the arch-type bridge, that requires a structural weight 40 percent greater than that of a suspension bridge of equal strength and capacity. If the arch-frame bridge were reduced 40 percent in weight it would not be capable of carrying the same load, and no bridge engineer could endorse the safety of such bridge for such load.

The suspension-bridge frame not only has the important advantage of reduced weight but receives stress on elastic steel bridge strand wire, and in this type of structure the stresses never reverse, therefore removing all fear of failure in the hull through fatigue and crystallization. In the operation of Zeppelin-frame airships reversal of stress, fatigue, and crystallization of the metal employed cannot be avoided.

That there is a need for safe American overseas airship service and ample opportunity for conducting such service profitably is supported by the House Committee on Commerce in its report on the merchant airship bill, House Resolution 8681, June 15, 1932, from which I take the following extracts:

The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8681) to develop American air transport services overseas, to encourage the construction in the United States by American capital of American airships for use in foreign commerce, and to make certain provisions of the maritime law applicable to foreign commerce by airship, have considered the same and report thereon with amendments and, as so amended, recommend that the bill do pass.

The purpose of the bill is to promote national defense and foreign trade by having suitable American aircraft serving such trade and available for use in time of war. The creation of commercial air-transport services overseas as a supplement to the American merchant marine is a possibility that has only now become practicable by recent advances in applied science. There is ample evidence that the time has now come to use the air as the medium for rapid transport of the urgent portion of our business representatives, samples, and mails to overseas markets.

The speed of steamships has about reached it economical limit. To maintain a speed of more than 24 knots requires vessels of enormous size and cost. Freight and passengers cannot be found to fill such superships except on the North Atlantic, and even there international rivalry supported by governments has only pushed the speed up to 28 knots. Naval architects propose the ultimate ship of 30-knot speed, to cost twice as much as a 24-knot vessel, saving 1 day in the Atlantic crossing. Such ships, flying our flag, will cost approximately $30,000,000 each, of which amount three-fourths is required, under existing law, to be loaned by our Government at low rates of interest.

In the Pacific there is slight possibility of supporting from commercial revenues steamships of much greater speed than are now available. And yet in the Pacific our national and commercial interests may have the greater need for increased speed of transportation. To increase the speed of water transportation materially is usually prohibitive in cost, because the portion of passengers, mails, and goods that really require high speed is too small to fill at increased charges the great vessels needed to provide such speed.

The other side of the picture reveals the air over the sea as an available medium for the very high-speed transport by aircraft of this relatively small portion of the traffic now moving that is able to pay for time saved. Instead of a possible speed increase of 10 or 15 percent offered by steamships at a very great cost, aircraft offer the possibility of a speed increase of several hundred percent over existing means and at moderate cost. In other words, the economical speed for aircraft operations is high compared with that for vessel operations.

Today our trade and manufacture is not simply a matter of domestic industry and exchange. We have developed the principles and practices of quantity production to such an extent that we have become an exporting nation. This export field is new to our generation, but we are in competition with the old, experienced export nations of the world. If our future in this export field is to be a success we must proceed with a definite program of aggressiveness.

Once we had the leading position in the China trade until the Civil War destroyed the American merchant marine. We had the cream of that carrying trade, because we had the swiftest sailing ships in those days of sail and wooden ships. It was speed that won us the tea and silk cargoes.

In the Atlantic we have no geographical advantage, and if we are to receive our share of trade we must take the lead in securing closer contacts and better relations. Here our problem of maintaining a reasonable position in foreign trade is one demanding the greatest application of American ingenuity.

Europe is fast learning the lesson of mass production from American industry, and with its present almost unchallenged position in the field of steamship transportation, bids fair to assume a commanding lead in the Atlantic trade to the exclusion of her American competitors.

In the Pacific, geography has been more favorable to us. We are in the enviable position of being closest to the largest concentration of population on earth. We must take those steps now which facilitate intercourse and increase accessibility.

It is 6 or 7 days from San Francisco to Honolulu by steamship (one ship only making it in 4 days—the fastest on the Pacific), and approximately 14 days to Japan. It is 3 weeks from California to Manila and even longer to Hong Kong or Shanghai. Two months must pass before the average letter receives a reply. Trade must develop slowly under such conditions. Speed is essential for letters and documents, for samples and high-class express traffic, for orders, for the service of filling these orders, and for the transport of business representatives.

The application of airships of the Akron type to trans-Pacific service has been represented to the committee by responsible American business and shipping men as promising a profound alteration in the effects of geographical distance. For example, Hawaii can be brought within 36 hours of California, giving not only obvious trade benefits but also a powerful corrective to the unfortunate effects of the relative inaccessibility of our primary Pacific fortress.

Airship service to Manila can cut the travel time from 3 weeks to 6 days, and bring Shanghai, Hong Kong, and Tokyo as close to our west coast as London, Paris, and Berlin are by steamship from our east coast. Airships on the North Atlantic can deliver passengers, mails, and express in Europe in less than half the time now taken by the faster foreign steamships.

Such overseas air-transport services will be supplemental to the merchant marine, which must continue to carry the bulk of passengers and mails and all of the heavy cargo. The merchant marine is supported by the volume of our foreign trade and will be benefited to the degree that airships succeed in stimulating this trade. Captain Dollar has well said, "When business representatives can visit their foreign customers more quickly they will go more often, get more orders, and our ships will get more cargoes."

The airship as a new vehicle for the service of our foreign trade can give an increase in speed over our existing fast steamers comparable to that following the replacement of sail by steam in the last century.

The volume of traffic now moving across the Pacific and Atlantic is enormous. For example, over 1,000,000 persons crossed the North Atlantic by steamship in 1930. Of these, 100,000 persons each way went first-class, and half of them booked passage at extra fares on the 10 fastest ships. An airship service to Europe, giving a sailing twice a week, would carry the small fraction of this traffic for whom time saving was really worth while.

Across the Pacific the present passenger traffic is very much less than on the North Atlantic. Even in 1929 but 100,000 persons crossed the Pacific. It is obvious that passengers do not travel when ships are slow and distances great. While the traffic available for the trans-Atlantic airship service is more than ample, the need for a speedier service across the Pacific is even more evident.

The weight of all mail dispatched from New York to Europe reaches annually nearly 40,000,000 pounds, of which about 3,850,000 pounds is first class. The weekly shipment of first-class mail by all steamers exceeds 69,000 pounds. With two airships sailing weekly, a large portion of this first-class mail could be expedited, but with a surcharge to the public in the form of an extra stamp the volume actually designated to be sent by air can be controlled by the post office. The post office can in this way adjust the relation between the compensation paid to the carrier and the surcharge paid to the post office.

Across the Pacific, like the passenger movement, the mail movement is less than across the Atlantic, the first-class portion of such mails being about 28 percent of Atlantic first-class mail. This quantity is within the capacity of airships to handle.

There is no international express business, but it is to be expected that a rapid air-transport service will develop such a business analogous to our domestic railway and air express. Newsreel films, machinery parts, style goods, plans, specifications, drugs and cultures, manuscripts, and samples may be counted on for such shipments. Also there will always be a great variety of miscellaneous merchandise which, through special attendant circumstances, must be shipped by the fastest means available regardless of cost. Such shipments may represent the specifications for new construction, a delayed order, machinery repair parts, technical apparatus, and the like.

There appears to be in our foreign trade a large potential volume of passengers, mail, and express that can benefit by time saving. These three classes of business should share in an equitable manner the expense of operating the Air Service.

The United States has in the past established itself as leader in fast overseas transportation, but today other nations have larger and faster ships. The construction and operation of these ships are possible only through very large Government construction loans and operation subsidies.

Rear Admiral H. I. Cone, retired, when chairman of the advisory committee of the United States Shipping Board Bureau, told the Federal Aviation Commission that "the Government should build a series of airships suitable for transoceanic passenger and express service." In that way, he declared, "the United States would assume world leadership in the aircraft industry, enabling us at the same time to recapture our lost position in the field of world shipping", adding "the United States will be left hopelessly behind unless we take steps for building airships to fill out our merchant marine."

In the consideration of building and operating commercial airships, with subsequent construction of additional airships with private capital, the operations as stated must be conducted at a profit. Thus, there are two vital points to be decided: The type and size of the airships to be constructed and the conditions under which the airships shall be operated.

In the choice of airships the type and size that provides the greatest strength and safety, with assurance of rendering the most valuable and commercial and military service, should be selected. The conditions under which the airships may be operated should give assurance of a reasonable profit, after providing for replacements, liquidation of principal, and interests on funds employed in the construction and in establishing the service.

I feel this is a matter of vital importance to our Nation. The airship is destined to become a major form of air transportation, and we will realize this fact within a very few years, perhaps after other nations have become well established, and we may not then obtain the dominating place, in overseas rapid transportation, which we may now achieve by prompt action.

Germany now has a sister ship to the Hindenburg under construction, is reported to be designing a larger airship, and is said to have signed a contract with Japan for two airships to be operated by Japan to our Pacific coast.

In conclusion, I desire to present some data concerning the possible value of the airship for military defense.

The Akron and the Macon had actual flying experience of only 3,257 hours before they met disaster through reported failure of their Zeppelin-type frame. How could such limited service determine the military value of airships?

Dr. William Hovgaard, member of the committee appointed by the Science Advisory Board to review and analyze the past and present situation as to the design and construction of airships, prepared an important article on Airships for Naval Service, published in the United States Naval Institute Proceedings, March 1936, in which the value of the airship for "coastal patrol-submarine detection", "strategic scouting—the airship as an airplane carrier", and "convoy and other services" is briefly but ably set forth.

Here is one outstanding aeronautical authority who appreciates the fundamental military value of airships. Under the section Convoy and Other Services Dr. Hovgaard says:

Rear Admiral W. A. Moffett has stated (before the House Committee on Naval Affairs, "During the World War, as far as we know, no convoy was ever attacked by a submarine when guarded by an airship."

Dr. Hovgaard further states:

It seems safe to say that for a country like the United States, with extensive coast lines, outlying possessions, and a great Navy, there will be, in time of war, a need for airships of all types from the smallest nonrigids to the largest rigid airships."

From a brief on airships, prepared at my request by Mr. Roland B. Respess, Cranston, R. I., inventor of the suspension-bridge airship frame, which was published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD July 2, 1935, I extract the following:

A properly designed and constructed commercial airship may be adapted for military service. The military airship would have no passengers; therefore the interior structure, that may be built in for passenger use, could be removed and its weight, with the weight of the passengers, mail, express, and freight, would represent a very considerable lift that would be available for increasing the power for higher speed, for a larger quantity of fuel and oil for increased range of flight, or for military equipment such as airplanes, rapid-fire guns, ammunition, etc.

We are a commercial Nation. Airships for us should be constructed primarily as commercial carriers. Should we require these airships for military use we should change them, as explained, to be adapted for the particular military service to which they are intended to be employed.

For protecting our cities these great commercial airships could be quickly converted to carry many airplanes, have an airship speed exceeding 100 miles per hour, or be able to cruise slowly at a high altitude, over an area to be protected, sending out scouting airplanes to contact enemy planes, and when such planes are located the scout plane may direct the airships in a course to intercept the enemy planes. Thus, at the proper time, the airship may release a fleet of our most efficient fighting airplanes which may destroy the enemy airplane squadron.

If we had a sufficient number of these great convertible commercial airships, we could patrol and protect the areas surrounding our great centers of population and we could also establish and maintain a constant defense line a thousand miles from our coast, if desired.

The military value of an airship may be judged by its ability to withstand adverse weather conditions, by its useful load which may define its range, its speed, its military equipment, and by its likelihood of receiving serious injury when attacked by other aircraft.

The suspension-bridge structure of an airship is a type to stand adverse weather and is less vulnerable to gunfire than the Zeppelin-type frame. The gas is not under pressure and would leak very slowly, through holes made by bullets. Damage by heavier-than-air craft may occur only provided an airplane could get relatively close to the airship.

For military purposes the airship may be armed with a dozen or more rapid-fire long-range guns, so that at least two of these guns may cover approach to the airship in every direction. These guns could be fired with great accuracy and shoot farther than the guns carried by airplanes; thus in combat the airplane may seldom even puncture the fabric cover of the airship before the plane may be destroyed. In other words, the airship may be able to operate with less danger from enemy heavier-than-air craft than naval vessels.

As to the vulnerability of airships, so often referred to, our Navy ships are vulnerable to mines, submarines, surface vessels, and aircraft; our land forces are vulnerable on land and from the air, while the airship is vulnerable, over our own country, only to air attack. Nothing is safe in war.

LOOKING BACKWARD AT THE UTILITY HOLDING COMPANY BILL

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Speaker, almost 1 year has elapsed since passage by the Congress and the signing by the President of the utility holding company bill, which was presumed to be the panacea for all the ills of the consumer of electric power, and was proclaimed as being the bill that would produce cheap gas and electricity. On July 1, 1935, I stated in my remarks that "insofar as my district is concerned, whether they be privately or municipally owned, the 'death sentence' clause written into either the House or Senate bill will have no effect on the utility situation whatsoever, either from the standpoint of the consumer or the investor."

The "death sentence" would make no changes in the operation of the utilities in the Fifth District of Indiana. As it relates to my district, all the talk about the "death sentence" is a tempest in a teapot. It is much ado about nothing. At that time I voted for the bill as reported out by the committee of the House because I felt that it would regulate these utilities, and through such regulation the consumer and the investor would both profit, and I contended continuously that insofar as the "death sentence" in the Senate bill was concerned that while it might help certain districts in the United States by destroying a few companies, that it would not help the consumer one bit or destroy a single company in my district in Indiana; that the bill was so worded that it would specifically prevent any relief to the people in my district in Indiana. Despite my efforts and the efforts of those who felt as I did, the House bill was defeated and the provision of the Senate bill substituted therefor.

I again repeat that 1 year has elapsed since the bill became effective, and insofar as my district is concerned, every company that was doing business before the passage of the bill, either as a privately owned utility or a municipally owned utility, is still doing business at the same old stand, in the same old way, and with the same old rates in effect that were in effect when the bill was passed. The consumer of electricity or gas furnished by these utilities has not received one cent of reduction in their rates or their bills.

I have just received from the public service commission of my State the schedule of rates in effect in my district on the date that the bill was passed and the rates in effect today. In the city of Kokomo, Ind., electric light and power is furnished by the Northern Indiana Power Co. This same utility has given the service in Kokomo, Ind., for a number of years and is the only public utility giving electric light and power service in the city of Kokomo today. Their rates for residential service in effect on the day the bill was passed are as follows: For the first 30 kilowatt-hours per month, 6.5 cents per kilowatt-hour; for the next 30 kilowatt-hours used in the same month, 4.5 cents per kilowatt-hour; for all over 60 kilowatt-hours used in the same month, 2.5 cents per kilowatt-hour. Despite the fact that the bill was passed last session of Congress those rates are still applicable and the residential users in the city of Kokomo are being billed on that basis today. The Kokomo Gas & Fuel Co. supplies gas for lighting, heating, and cooking purposes in the city of Kokomo. Its rates as filed with the public service commission and effective February 1, 1934, to the small family consumers were as follows: First 10,000 cubic feet per month, $1.50 per M cubic feet. This utility makes a minimum charge of $1 per month whether the gas is used or not. If the bill is not paid within 15 days after the due date a collection charge of 6 percent is made on the first $3; 3 percent on the next $60. If the bill is not paid on the 16th day after being rendered the gas may be disconnected and if the consumer on the 16th day after due date pays his bill he must pay this additional percentage for the delay and a $1 charge for reconnection. These rates are still in effect in the city of Kokomo today and the consumer in the city of Kokomo has not profited one single cent through the passage of the utility holding company bill.

In the city of Peru, Ind., gas service is distributed through the Northern Indiana Public Service Co., a subsidiary of the old Insull empire. On the date that the holding-company bill was passed the rates of this public utility in effect in Peru, Ind., were as follows: First 2,000 cubic feet per month, $1.25 per thousand cubic feet ($1.35 gross); next 18,000 cubic feet per month, $1 per thousand cubic feet ($1.10 gross). Under the tariffs filed with and approved by the Indiana Public Service Commission, bills must be paid within 10 days, including the day rendered, to receive the net rate and if not paid in such 10-day period (which, in fact, in this instance, may be a 9-day period) the gross rate is applied. There is a $1 reconnection charge and a $12-per-year meter charge. These rates were made effective July 1, 1927, and despite the passage of the so-called "death sentence" utility holding company bill, are still in effect today, and the citizens of Peru, Ind., who must obtain their gas from this public utility, have not profited a single cent in the reduction of rates or in the reduction of their monthly bills by virtue of this act of Congress. In this same city the municipality owns the electric-light plant and furnishes and distributes electric light and power. The rates in effect for the municipality-furnished electric light to residents on the day that the holding-company bill was passed were: First 50 kilowatt-hours per month, 5 cents per kilowatt-hour; next 50 kilowatt-hours, 3 cents per kilowatt-hour; next 50 kilowatt-hours, 2 cents per kilowatt-hour; over 150 kilowatt-hours per month, 1½ cents per kilowatt-hour.

These rates are still in effect today, and I know of no complaint against these rates as they are far below the rates charged by the privately owned utilities in neighboring cities. The plant is operated efficiently and making money every month of the year, the profits being used to reduce local taxes and applied to projects of benefit to the residents of the city. However, the passage of the utility holding company bill by the Congress has had no effect whatsoever on the rates of this municipally owned utility, they being the same as were in effect on the date of the passage of the bill.

The Central Indiana Gas Co., a privately owned public utility, furnishes gas to the city of Marion, Ind. The rates in effect April 1, 1935, and still in effect in the city of Marion today, are as follows: First 2,000 cubic feet per month, $1.25 per M cubic feet; next 3,000 cubic feet per month, 90 cents per M cubic feet. All over 5,000 cubic feet per month, 75 cents per M cubic feet. There is a minimum charge of $1.50. If bills are not paid in 15 days from the date of the bill, 10 percent additional for all bills under $3 is charged, and 3 percent on all bills over $3. Despite all the argument of the proponents of the utility holding company bill of the vast advantages in reduced rates that the passage of the bill would mean to the consumer, these same rates for gas are effective in the city of Marion today.

In this same city of Marion, Ind., the Indiana General Service Co., a privately owned utility and a subsidiary of the American Gas & Electric Co., the company that Dr. Splawn and members of the committee held up to the House as the perfect system, supplies electric light and power. The members of the committee, as well as Dr. Splawn, the expert of the committee, stated the truth about this company—they admitted that the "death sentence" clause in the holding-company bill would not affect it in Indiana, and it has not. The rates in effect for residential use on April 1, 1935, in Marion, Ind., were as follows: First 200 kilowatt-hours per month, 7.5 cents per kilowatt-hour; next 300 kilowatt-hours per month, 6.7 cents per kilowatt-hour; the next 300 kilowatt-hours per month, 5.7 cents per kilowatt-hour. All in excess of 800 kilowatt-hours per month, 4.7 cents per kilowatt-hour. There is a $1 per month minimum charge. Five percent is added if bills are not paid in full on or before the 10th day after date of mailing of the bills. These same rates that were in effect in Marion when the bill was passed are still in effect. The passage of the bill has not reduced the price of the stock of this utility. It is worth as much today as it was on the day the bill was passed.

I could give many other examples covering every city, town, or village in my district. To do so would be merely cumulative evidence, piling proof on top of proof. It would merely be corroborative evidence of the truth of my remarks in the RECORD of last session.

Time at last sets all things even. These facts concerning the holding-company bill and its effect on consumers I brought to the attention of the House not as a dilatory matter but in the hope of really obtaining some benefit for the consumer. I was more interested at that time in giving aid to the millions of innocent consumers who suffered from excessive utility rates than I was in wreaking vengeance by punishment of a very few guilty stock promoters. I believe in the maxim that the supreme function of the law is to protect the weak and restrain the strong but with me as in the maxim the protection of the weak comes first. Under the defeated House provisions for which I voted, regulation of the utilities would have been mandatory and the weak consumer protected from excessive rates. When the bill was up for passage, Members had their fancy touched by the phrase "death sentence." The power of oratory and the manipulation of words put judgment to sleep and while reason slumbered this legislation became law. Men were worked into a frenzy of fear by the cry of "wolf" until the protection of the sheep was submerged in the cry for blood. Today we know by the actual rates charged how little the consumer gained by the law. The proof of the futility of a "death sentence" law that does not kill is contained in the utility rates in effect today in the Fifth Congressional District of Indiana.

The only effect that the passage of the holding-company bill with the Senate "death sentence" provision attached has had on the people in that district either favorable or adverse, is that it has reduced the value of the stock of utilities in some other sections of the country, leaving the citizens of the district who had innocently and on the recommendation of their bankers and the approval of the State security commission invested in those stocks and bonds lost. Most of them were people who had invested their life savings obtained through years of toil and who could ill afford to lose the investment. The value of their stock meant to them the difference between a comfortable old age and destitution.

The effect of legislation can always be judged by looking backward. I look back today to the time of the passage of the law. The finding of a court must be predicated upon the evidence presented. The evidence is conclusive that the law has been detrimental to investors in my district who held stock in public utilities doing business in other States and at the same time has not benefited the consumer in the district. The consumer is in status quo. Judgment must be entered on the finding.

FEDERAL AGENCIES HELP TO SAVE OUR EDUCATIONAL SYSTEM

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, the citizenship and Nation-building accomplishments of the P. W. A. are so numerous and varied that time and space will permit me to give a very few of the virtues of this work. Therefore, I shall devote this time to setting forth some accomplishments in the field of education.

We all realize that education in a democracy is absolutely necessary. When President Roosevelt was inaugurated in 1933 we had hundreds of local and county situations similar to this: They were unable to collect taxes, millions of citizens without work, without sufficient clothing, short on food. The States, counties, and municipalities were forced to retrench. Many schools were closed, teachers were discharged, salaries cut, sometimes paid in script or not at all.

The educational system in America was slipping. The retrenchments of all kinds were turning millions of boys and girls out on our highways and byways to join the army of unemployed.

Mr. Speaker, it is when young men and young women see no ray of hope in the future and are out of work that they become dissatisfied. It is such conditions that breed communism and other isms detrimental to a democracy. The idle brain is the devil's workship. The criminal records show that 25 percent of our criminals are under 21 years of age. Thousands of these young men became criminals because they were idle and their activities were not properly guided.

President Roosevelt and the Congressmen of the United States realized that something had to be done to give hope to the youth of our Nation. To establish the C. C. C. camps, taking care of some half million of men and boys was fine, but that was not enough. Something else had to be done, and as a result, through the different agencies set up by Congress, such as the P. W. A., the Federal Emergency Relief Corporation, the Civil Works Administration, and other agencies, funds were provided for rural schools, for adult education, for aid to college students, for assistance in building and repairing school buildings, and so forth.

In 1933 one-half of all the men, women, and children in Fayette County, my district, were either on relief or on the verge of relief. Most of the others were unable to pay taxes, and as a result the education of our youth was being neglected. This was true in a measure throughout the United States.

Mr. Speaker, here are a few of the things accomplished for the education of our youth and our people through the agencies set up by the Seventy-third and Seventy-fourth Congresses:

(a) Added 3,100 classrooms.

(b) Made accommodations for 1,217,000 additional students to public-school facilities.

(c) Four thousand educational buildings constructed. This was 75 percent of all the new construction in the United States.

(d) More than 1,200,000 additional seats were provided for the schools in the United States.

(e) One thousand six hundred and fifty educational buildings were completely overhauled.

(f) Twenty-nine thousand six hundred and thirty-six new classrooms were provided.

(g) One hundred and seventy-six million eight hundred and eighty-one thousand two hundred and ninety-seven dollars was given to build new high schools.

(h) Cost of construction of elementary schools was $139,831,127.

(i) Thirty-two million one hundred and thirty-one thousand one hundred and sixty-six dollars of Federal funds were given to districts for libraries, laboratories, auditoriums, and so forth.

(j) Loans and grants to colleges and universities amounted to $64,411,093.

(k) Thirty million dollars for Indian schools and Naval and Military Academies.

(l) Through P. W. A. aid new schools have been built in every State. For instance: North Carolina, 264; Pennsylvania, 246; New York, 212; Illinois, 165; California, 474.

(m) In 1933–34 the situation in rural schools, as well as district schools, became so acute that something had to be done. Thus, $14,878,385 was allotted by the Federal Emergency Relief Administration to rural school districts throughout the United States to keep the schools open. In 1935 an additional $6,922,000 was allotted for the same purpose.

(n) In the field of adult education, 1,650,000 men and women were enrolled. Five hundred and fifty thousand men and women have been taught to read and write.

(o) Nine-four thousand three hundred and thirty-one students in 1,466 colleges and universities were aided in getting an education.

Mr. Speaker, it would be better if school districts, whether they be townships, boroughs, cities, counties, or States, provided for their own education. However, that seems impossible in many districts. In order to keep open the schools at all, it was necessary to get help from the Federal Government.

If Fayette County, one of the counties in my district, was to pay all of the costs of running their public schools, they would have to levy 60 mills of school taxes each year. That is, they would have to levy it to run the schools as they are run this year. The schools in my district are run as well as the schools in any district in the United States, and better than most of them in the Nation, but we must adjust our educational facilities in order to equip boys and girls to go out into life's work. We must give them training in homemaking, industrial arts, agricultural arts, because most of them will have to make their living with their hands and their head when they get out.

SOCIAL SECURITY ACT

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks on the Social Security Act.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I have asked to extend my remarks that I may briefly refer to the Social Security Act, particularly insofar as it relates to old-age pensions. I was most enthusiastically in favor of this legislation when it was before the House and enacted into law during the last session of the present Congress. I was happy to give it my best support. I am still in favor of this legislation but must confess my enthusiasm is somewhat chilled since I find that the law as now interpreted really brings little added relief to the beneficiaries, except possibly that it may prompt the several States to more liberal allowances.

When the bill was debated in the House it was repeatedly stated that by its passage the Government would match dollar for dollar up to $15 per month old-age pensions paid by the several States. I understood then that this meant a beneficiary who was then receiving or who would hereafter receive a monthly pension of $15 or more per month from the State, that such pensions would be increased up to $15 per month by Federal contribution or $30 per month. In good faith I so informed by letter and by word of mouth many of my constituents the above facts. I was quite happy over the prospects that the old folks who are needy and dependent would receive at least $30 per month, which while not a very generous allowance would help materially to alleviate the plain wants and necessities of their declining days.

When I to my great regret and surprise learned that no increases of pensions had been made in my State, Ohio, although the Federal Government made its contribution to the States beginning February 1, last, I began to make inquiry. I wrote to Hon. John G. Winant, chairman of the Social Security Board, the following letter:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 12, 1936.

Hon. JOHN G. WINANT,
Chairman, Social Security Board, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. WINANT: When I voted for the Social Security Act it was with the understanding that the Government was to match dollar for dollar up to $15 per month the amount paid by the States for old-age pensions.

I have had several letters from my State, Ohio, that there has been and would be no increase in the old-age pensions and that the Federal contribution simply pays one-half of the pension which has heretofore been paid to old-age pensioners by the State. This surely must be an incorrect interpretation of the law. I have written many of my constituents that their pensions would be increased up to $15 per month by Federal contribution, which was my understanding of this legislation.

I will thank you very much for illumination on the above.

Very respectfully,

WILLIAM A. ASHBROOK.

I received the following reply from Mr. Winant:

SOCIAL SECURITY BOARD,
Washington, D. C., May 16, 1936.

Hon. WILLIAM A. ASHBROOK,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. ASHBROOK: This will acknowledge your letter of May 12.

The basis on which Federal grants-in-aid to States for old-age assistance is made is as follows:

The Federal Government will pay to the State having an approved old-age assistance plan one-half of the total amount of money expended by the State for old-age assistance up to an amount which does not exceed $30 per month per individual receiving such assistance.

In other words, if the State plan provides for the payment to needy aged individuals $20 a month, $10 of this amount will come from Federal funds. If the State provides for $30 per month per individual, $15 of this amount will come from Federal funds. Fifteen dollars per month is the maximum Federal contribution authorized by title I of the Social Security Act.

I am attaching copy of information circular no. 1, A Brief Explanation of the Social Security Act.

Sincerely,

Enclosure. JOHN G. WINANT, Chairman.

I quote from the information circular no. 1, mentioned in Mr. Winant's letter, the following:

(1) Old-age assistance (immediate payment plan).—A State may submit to the Social Security Board for approval its plan for old-age assistance. The Board is directed to approve such plans as conform to certain requirements as to eligibility, such as age, residence, and citizenship; and to requirements as to State operation and standards of administration, intended to assure proper and efficient State action by the enactment and administration of laws which may reasonably be expected to provide assistance to needy aged individuals without discrimination. After the plan is approved, the State receives from the Federal Government an amount equal to one-half the sum expended for old-age assistance by the State with respect to individuals 65 years or older who are not inmates of public institutions. The Federal Government matches on a 50–50 basis every dollar spent by the State for old-age assistance, but does not contribute more than $15 per month for any individual. In addition the Federal Government pays for administrative expenses an amount equal to 5 percent of the sum granted to the State.

I have capitalized certain lines that they may be more forcibly brought to your attention and account for what now seems to be my misunderstanding of the rather vague law. You will note the specific words which brought about my misunderstanding and I think quite likely many other Members made the same construction of the law. This sentence reads:

The Federal Government matches on a 50-50 basis every dollar spent by the State for old-age assistance, but does not contribute more than $15 per month for any individual.

It was my understanding that the Federal contribution of $15 per month would increase pensions $15 per month up to $30 per month. In other words, a pensioner who received $15 per month from the State would receive $15 per month additional from the Federal Government, or $30 per month. It now appears that unless the States increase pensions up to $30 per month there will be no increase of pensions, which, to express myself as mildly as possible, is a very great disappointment to me.

I also wrote Hon. H. J. Berrodin, who is the chief of the division of aid for the aged of Ohio, the following letter:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 18, 1936.

Hon. H. J. BERRODIN,
Division of Aid for the Aged, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR MR. BERRODIN: I am considerably disturbed about the old-age pensions. My understanding was when I voted for the Social Security Act that the Federal Government would match up to $15 per month pensions paid by the several States. I am advised from several sources in my district that there is to be no increase in the old-age pensions and that the State will simply continue to pay the same pensions and use the Federal aid to reimburse itself 50 percent.

If the above is true, I did not know what I was voting for when I voted for this legislation, and it is needless to say that I am hopeful that I have been misinformed. I would thank you to advise me what your interpretation of the law is and what the State will do with the money allocated to it by the Federal Government.

Very respectfully, WILLIAM A. ASHBROOK.

Here follows reply from Mr. Berrodin to my letter:

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WELFARE,
DIVISION OF AID FOR THE AGED,
Columbus, Ohio, May 27, 1936.

Congressman WILLIAM A. ASHBROOK,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN ASHBROOK: I have your letter expressing yourself as considerably disturbed about old-age pensions in Ohio. I believe this is because of your misunderstanding of the intent and purpose of the law. The title of the Ohio law is "Aid for the Aged" and this conforms with the Social Security Act which likewise is entitled "Aid for the Aged."

From the standpoint of the State and Federal Government, there is no such thing as an old-age pension. It is aid for the aged. It is not a dole, but an economic adjustment of unpaid compensation to lawful citizens, known as "Aid for the Aged."

The budget plan, based on actual needs, is followed in arriving at awards. Expenditures for food, shelter, clothing, and miscellaneous items are estimated for the year. Any contributions from responsible relatives is taken into consideration, also if there is income from any source, and after deductions are made, the amount of aid is arrived at. The present maximum award in Ohio is $25 per month. However, when the amended law goes into effect July 16, the maximum award will be $30 per month. The maximum award, of course, will be granted in cases where the recipient's budget indicates that the maximum is needed.

The Federal Government reimburses the State to the extent of one-half the amount of the award. Of the 21 States approved for Federal aid by the Social Security Board, Ohio has the largest number of recipients and is paying out the most money. Ohio and Michigan are the only two States that are paying a funeral award in addition to aid. We now have approximately 90,000 recipients of aid. The total amount of aid paid to recipients for the month of April was $1,350,000. Burial claims paid for the month of March totaled 468 in the amount of $26,308.98. The Federal Government does not reimburse the State for funeral awards.

In order to conform with the Social Security Act, the residence requirements in Ohio have been reduced from 15 years to 5 years in the last 9; and it is estimated that this reduction in the residence requirements alone will increase our rolls by at least 10,000 recipients.

The citizenship requirement of 15 years is also changed to mere citizenship; and this amendment will add a considerable number.

The change in the property requirements will add perhaps another 8,000 or 10,000 recipients to our rolls.

With these additions, Ohio will continue to be confronted with the tremendous problem of raising sufficient funds for payment of awards to the aged. In 1935 the cost of aid was approximately $14,000,000 while the estimated cost for 1936 is $20,000,000. Were we to make a general increase to anywhere near the maximum award under the amended law, it would be necessary to levy new taxes to meet the increased cost, and these would be added to the heavy burden under which the State is already laboring. No doubt the individual average can be raised, but not to the extent of the aid received from the Federal Government.

We believe that the broad general purpose underlying the plan of Federal aid is to assist the States in carrying the heavy load that they have in providing aid for the aged; and this object would be defeated were the States to increase their awards automatically to the extent of the Federal grants. Were this done, the States would be as hard pressed as before, to raise sufficient revenue to meet their share of the aid.

There is another point which must not be overlooked, and that is that the Federal Government has taken off the relief rolls all persons 65 years or more of age who can qualify for old-age assistance; and the average award under the assistance law is higher than that which these same persons were receiving from relief.

Assuring you of our desire to cooperate in every way possible in administering this law so as to confer the greatest benefit upon the greatest number, I remain,

Very truly yours,

H. J. BERRODIN,
Chief, Division of Aid for the Aged.

It will be observed by the letters from both Mr. Winant and Mr. Berrodin that the passage of the Social Security Act by this Congress will mean little or nothing to the old folks back home who have been existing somehow on a small monthly pension, a pittance far from adequate for their most frugal living expenses.

Mr. Speaker, I think everyone who knows much about my record and sympathies, both here and in my district, knows that I have long been an advocate and believer that the fortunate have responsibility to the unfortunate. I am proud to confess that due to my activity for liberal pensions of war veterans and their dependents during my years of service here that I am dubbed "Pension Bill" back home.

I have been for 30 years a member of the Fraternal Order of Eagles, and it is well known that this great fraternal organization is the sponsor of old-age pensions. I believe sincerely and conscientiously in reasonable old-age pensions. I am sure the people quite generally believe today as never before that we are "our brother's keeper", and that the strong must protect the weak. We must look this great question squarely in the face and not shirk from our responsibilities.

I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that I was under the delusion when I voted for the Social Security Act that it meant an increase in old-age pensions, and since I find it means no increase, there are just two things that must and should be done. First, the several States should immediately increase all old-age pensions to at least $30 per month, $15 contributed by the State and $15 by the Federal Government; or, second, in the event that this is not done, Congress, at the next session, should enact legislation making sure and certain further and more liberal relief to all worthy old-age beneficiaries, and to that end I pledge my unswerving support.

I am hopeful that the other provisions of the Social Security Act will not prove to be as disappointing as that which relates to the aid for the aged.

FARM ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks and include therein two short letters and two brief extracts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, I am extending my remarks and including letters received by me from the American Farm Bureau Federation, the National Grange, the National Cooperative Milk Producers' Federation, the Maryland Farm Bureau Federation, a resolution passed by the Maryland Farm Bureau Federation, and an extract from an article appearing in the National Grange of October 1935:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 1, 1936.

Hon. T. ALAN GOLDSBOROUGH, M. C.,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN GOLDSBOROUGH: At the approach of the end of the present session of Congress, I know you will permit me to write you to express my personal appreciation and that of the entire American Farm Bureau Federation for your activities in behalf of agriculture during the session and throughout prior years.

I cannot forget also the wonderful speech, mostly devoted to monetary matters, which you delivered at the last annual meeting of the federation in Chicago, Ill., in December 1935, which address made a tremendous impression on our people.

Your activities as a Member of the House of Representatives are always useful from farm points of view, and I constantly find you trying to help us on the legislative projects which relate to the welfare of agriculture.

There are many efforts, however, which lie ahead of us, great as have been some of the triumphs which already we have enjoyed. I feel sure it will be possible in future years, as in the past, for those of us who represent the federation to continue to work with you in bettering the economic conditions which surround agriculture.

Very truly yours,

AMERICAN FARM BUREAU FEDERATION,
CHESTER H. GRAY,
Washington Representative.

Hon. THOMAS A. GOLDSBOROUGH,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. GOLDSBOROUGH: Referring to our conversation of yesterday, I want to thank you for the active part you have taken in seeing that the interests of farm cooperative organizations will be adequately safeguarded under the bill to regulate chain stores.

We are, of course, in favor of proper steps to put an end to false brokerage and advertising allowances, unreasonable quantity discounts, and other abuses that this proposed legislation seeks to correct. We are concerned, however, that the rights of legitimate farm cooperative associations shall not be unwittingly impaired. I know that you feel the same way about it.

Assuring you that we appreciate the loyal service to agriculture that has characterized your career as a Congressman, I am,

Very sincerely yours,

FRED BRENCKMAN,
Washington Representative.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN GOLDSBOROUGH: As the present session of Congress draws near to adjournment, we want to take this opportunity to thank you for your support in connection with legislation affecting the dairy farmers of this country.

Not only do we appreciate the work that you have done in Congress for dairy farmers, but we also desire to express our appreciation for your leadership in the battle which agriculture is waging for an honest dollar.

Sincerely yours,

Hon. T. ALAN GOLDSBOROUGH,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN GOLDSBOROUGH: I wish to thank you in the name of the Maryland Farm Bureau for the support you gave the soil conservation bill.

In addition I want to thank you for inserting our resolution in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

We greatly appreciate the fine support you have always rendered the farmers of this State.

Very truly yours,

C. E. WISE, Jr.
Secretary-Treasurer, Maryland Farm Bureau Federation.

The past 6 years have seen the general price level go from the high level of 1929 to the low of 1932.

The experiences of the past have proved that in an abrupt price-level change salaries always lag from 5 to 10 years behind prices. Farm prices today are still out of fair relation to taxes, freight rates, farm machinery, professional services, etc.

During a time that price disparity exists, interchange of goods between farm groups and other groups is greatly decreased. Farmers with low purchasing power meet only necessary obligations, their farm buildings and equipment suffer, education and health are neglected, and millions of idle men walk the street.

Prosperity cannot return when agriculture furnishes one-sixth the Nation's capital, represents one-fourth the gainfully employed labor, and receives only one-tenth the national income.

On May 8 last, Representative ALAN GOLDSBOROUGH, of our State, introduced an amendment to the banking bill which was lost by a vote of 122 to 128. Had this amendment passed, it would have made it mandatory that the price level be raised to the 1926 level. It would have created legislation to prevent violent price-level fluctuations: Be it therefore Resolved, That we reaffirm our position on backing the A. F. B. F. in their program for monetary reform.

We believe that the right time to enact legislation, to restore price levels, and create a managed currency is now, while the entire Nation knows that the need exists: Be it further

Resolved, That we send a copy of this resolution to President O'Neal, of the American Farm Bureau Federation, and to the committee for the Nation.

[Extract from an article appearing in the National Grange of October 1935 in reference to the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System]

Besides securing a direct representative of agriculture on the Board, various agricultural leaders also favor the appointment of Congressman T. ALAN GOLDSBOROUGH, of Maryland. Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH, who is serving his eighth consecutive term as a Member of the House, is one of the most prominent members of the Banking and Currency Committee.

During the recent session of Congress he made an active fight to secure some amendments to the banking and currency bill intended to promote monetary stabilization, in harmony with the declared policies of the major farm organizations of the country.

WAR AND PEACE

Mr. WITHROW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague [Mr. O'MALLEY] may be permitted to extend his own remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. O'MALLEY. Mr. Speaker, no question that can come before a legislative body carries with it such dire possibilities of destruction, sorrow, and disillusionment to a people than the question of war. We as a people are a peace-loving people, and the citizens of our Nation have every right to be informed as to the position of their representatives on war, neutrality, and peace.

During my service in Congress I have consistently tried to carry out my platform and the personal pledges in the interests of peace made to the citizens of my district in the campaigns preceding the honor they have bestowed upon me by electing me to represent them in this legislative body. On all legislation carrying with it decisions of policy of our country in connection with war and peace, I have endeavored to make clear my position and what I believe to be the position of the district I represent.

The demoralizing, disheartening, and destructive effect of America's last participation in armed conflict has been brought home to us so graphically that we cannot or must not soon forget the terrible lessons of war. With these lessons in mind I have sponsored legislation in the House in an endeavor to make the danger of war for our country more remote. Chief of my antiwar bills has been House Joint Resolution 13, providing for a constitutional amendment which, if adopted, would make it impossible for Congress to ever again conscript men for armed service without first conscripting wealth and industry for service without profit.

Another measure introduced by me in the Seventy-fourth Congress and which I believe to be another step in eliminating the possibilities of our country being involved in war is my bill—H. R. 12216—prohibiting the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy from using American armed forces for the protection of private interests located in foreign countries. This measure is designed to prevent a repetition of such use of our Military Establishment as occurred under Republican administrations in the interference of American marines in internal disputes in friendly countries such as Nicaragua and other Latin American countries.

Whenever the opportunity has offered I have endeavored to express to the House my position on the various peace, war, and neutrality measures coming before the House for both debate and vote. It is not only the duty of a representative to cast his vote on all measures of importance which might affect his people, but it also is the duty of that representative to keep his constituents informed not only as to his actions but as to his expressions and opinions upon vital issues. With this in mind I have noted from the pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD those portions of the debates on war and peace in which I have participated during my service in Congress.

Limitation on the number of copies of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD available to each Congressman makes it impossible to provide the interested citizens of my district with the record of the daily debates. Because of this limitation and because I believe citizens are entitled to full and complete knowledge of the recorded expressions of their representatives, I call particular attention to those portions of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in which that important issue, war or peace, has been discussed and decided upon in the House.

FEDERAL AID HIGHWAY ACT

Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTWRIGHT] will yield us such time as is necessary to discuss this matter.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. How much time does the gentleman desire?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I think perhaps if the gentleman will explain it and give us some time, perhaps 25 or 30 minutes. There is a question as to whether the House should recede and concur in amendment no. 5, and I think, as far as I know, that is the only amendment in controversy.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Would 15 minutes be sufficient?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Oh, no. That is not enough. There are quite a number on this side who would like to be heard. Will the gentleman yield me 30 minutes?

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Cannot the gentleman get along with 20 minutes?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I think perhaps that will be satisfactory.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman explain what the conference report does first?

Mr. WOLCOTT. It is agreed that we are yielded 20 minutes?

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, this is the ordinary and regular bill which the Congress has been passing for the past several years. Section 1 provides for $125,000,000, ordinarily called the matching fund.

Section 2 authorizes funds for forest highways, roads, and trails.

Section 3, roads through public lands.

Section 4, roads through national parks.

Section 5 is a new provision, which provides for farm-to-market roads.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman state for the benefit of the House how much money is provided in section 5 for farm-to-market roads? It would also be helpful to advise the amount provided for highway grade crossings.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Twenty-five million dollars for farm-to-market roads, but they get more from other sources.

Section 6 provides for grade-crossing eliminations, $50,000,000 a year, which is all they get. However, the provisions about which you ask are not in conference, therefore, are not under discussion here, but I am glad to answer your question.

Section 7 provides for surveys and plans; for the engineering, making blue prints, and so forth.

We had extensive hearings before the Committee on Roads. The Senate also conducted hearings. There were some slight changes made which sent the matter to conference. After several hours in session we have agreed on this report with the one exception which the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] wishes to discuss.

I now yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. TARVER. Will the gentleman permit a question in regard to one portion of the report? Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. TARVER. I desire to direct the gentleman's attention to Senate amendment no. 8, having to do with the allocation of the money for the improvement of farm-to-market roads during the fiscal years 1936 and 1937. Some Members of the House, including myself, feel that, as a matter of policy, it would be better to have all of the money allocated to farm-to-market roads spent under the jurisdiction of the county authorities. The Senate amendment proposes to permit the Bureau of Public Roads in the discretion of its Director, or Chief, to deal with the county authorities on these farm-to-market roads for the present fiscal year and for the fiscal year 1937. It seems that the conferees have agreed to eliminate the Senate amendment. I should like to know just why that was done and why the conferees were not of the opinion that the county authorities might be trusted to deal with these roads that are under their jurisdiction; why it was thought necessary to have State highway boards, which have control only over State highway systems, exclusively handle this money intended for farm-to-market roads?

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. I may say to the gentleman from Georgia that the conferees gave this matter very careful consideration; and while they would like to help the situation in Georgia, they thought it was too much of a departure from the usual custom of handling Federal funds and would establish a precedent. If the whole United States should do this it would mean that the road funds would be handled by over 3,000 county commissions instead of the 48 State highway commissions.

Mr. TARVER. I made no reference in my question to the situation in Georgia. I addressed myself to the question of general policy, as to whether or not county commissioners rather than State highway boards ought to have control of funds intended for farm-to-market roads which are under the jurisdiction of county commissioners and not of State highway boards.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. It was the general opinion or the conviction of our committee that it was more appropriate for the State highway commissions who are especially equipped and organized for the building of roads with their engineering departments, and so forth, than county organizations, which could not be compared to them in organization, equipment, and set-up.

Mr. TARVER. County organizations, of course, have the proper facilities with which they do construct and have been constructing farm-to-market roads throughout the years.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. To a certain extent that may be true.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. If I may be permitted, I may say in further response to the inquiry of the gentleman from Georgia that amendment no. 8 was inserted in the Senate. It required the Bureau of Public Roads to deal directly with the county road commissions in the various counties in the States.

Mr. TARVER. It did not require it; it permitted it.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Its purpose was for the Bureau of Public Roads to have contact directly with the county authorities. There was an amendment in the House bill for the establishing of a section of rural roads. That is amendment no. 9. Personally, I favor retaining amendment no. 9 as it passed the House. The conferees struck out both these amendments on the theory that it would be most expensive and unnecessary for the Bureau of Public Roads to establish provision for contacting about 3,000 agencies in the United States when, as a matter of fact, some of the roads would be under the supervision of the highway commission. It was thought to be a better policy to provide that the spokesman for the State—that is, the State highway commission, in all Federal-aid funds, should be the spokesman for the various county commissions in the States. There has been established in the Bureau of Public Roads, moreover, a division for the preparation of plans for secondary roads, and it was thought that the matter could be handled a great deal more efficiently by eliminating the provision that was inserted by the House inasmuch as a division of secondary roads, or county roads, had been set up in the Bureau and had permitted the contacts to be made by the State highway commissions representing the various county commissions.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. I thank the gentleman for his further explanation.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON] such time as he may need.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I should like to ask the gentleman from Mississippi a question. I think this perhaps is a good bill; it is at least so far as I am concerned; but the gentleman will remember that 3 years ago several of us made a very heroic and successful effort for a line of demarcation between the country roads, the rural roads, and the mail roads.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I recall that, and I am in favor of it.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the language of this bill states that the sums herein authorized shall be applied to secondary or feeder roads. What does this mean? Does this mean that all amounts provided in this bill shall be applied to these roads, or to what does it refer?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Answering the gentleman's inquiry, I may say that his inquiry relates only to the $25,000,000 authorized by section 7 for secondary roads. The amount is not in conference. The only thing in section 7 that is in conference that is embraced in the colloquy here is the amendments 8 and 9. The amendment no. 8, in the language of the amendment, temporarily, during the 2 fiscal years 1936 and 1937, gives the Secretary of Agriculture in his discretion authority to deal directly with county road authorities. It was intended primarily to apply to one or perhaps two States; and, inasmuch as there was nothing compulsory about requirement, and inasmuch as we were advised that a division of roads had been set up in the Bureau of Roads, both the amendments 8 and 9, we were advised, were unnecessary.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Is it not true amendment no. 8 was inserted there to take care of amendment no. 9?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. No. Amendment no. 8 is the Senate amendment and amendment no. 9 is the House amendment.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. May I ask the gentleman this question, which perhaps has nothing to do with the conference report, but did the conferees apportion the amount appropriated as between country roads and other roads? In other words, what percentage is involved? It seems as if it makes about 25 percent of the appropriation.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. It is the same relative amount that has been carried in emergency appropriations for secondary roads, and we have brought forward the same ratio. The ratio for secondary roads has been from about one-fourth to one-fifth, and it is one-fifth in the pending bill.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. It is provided by amendment no. 8 that the Federal Highway Department may have something to do with reference to where improvements shall be made on country roads.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Amendment no. 8 was stricken out in conference. The Federal Highway Department, as the gentleman terms it, or the Bureau of Roads, has to approve all of these roads, both primary and secondary. We feel that with the Division of Rural Roads the then Bureau of Roads, the rural roads will be amply provided for.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The gentleman does not mean that amendment no. 8 has been stricken out. Amendment no. 8 has been added, page 7.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. That was added in the Senate and stricken out in conference.

Under leave granted to revise and extend my remarks on the conference report I call attention to the fact that the bill as agreed to by the conferees is fully set forth in the conference report and statement of managers, carried in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of Monday, June 1. A brief analysis of the bill will serve to show the differences in the act as it passed the House, as it passed the Senate, and as it was agreed to by the conferees.

The conferees agreed to an amendment to section 1 and inserted paragraph (d). It provides that the Secretary of Agriculture may eliminate the requirement for matching Federal aid in the case of any State where he finds that all special taxes on motor-vehicle transportation are applied to highway purposes. The amendment is limited to the fiscal years 1936 and 1937. It does not require any additional appropriation. It does require that all gas and other taxes be applied to road purposes.

Personally, as I stated at the time the bill passed the House, I thought the amendment unwise. I agreed to the conference report because a majority of the conferees supported the amendment.

The conferees agreed to increase the authorization for forest highways, roads, and trails from $10,000,000 to $14,000,000. The authorization for forest highways has been carried in preceding highway acts. Under the act of June 18, 1934, the authorization was $10,000,000. It is not new legislation. Similar authorizations have previously obtained. Personally I favored the amount of $10,000,000. The Senate increased the amount to $20,000,000. They met the House more than halfway and the amount was agreed to in conference as $14,000,000.

The other amendments to section 3 are to provide for more efficient expenditures and to provide that contracts for forest highways shall be on a parity so far as obligations are concerned on the part of the Federal Government with contracts for Federal-aid highways.

Sections 3 and 4 were not in dispute and the authorization for roads through public lands, Indian lands, and the authorization for roads through national parks remain, the aggregate of these two amounts being $10,000,000.

Section 6 provides for an authorization of $4,000,000 for roads through Indian lands. I opposed this authorization in the House and in the conference on the ground that there was an authorization already in existence under the act of May 26, 1928. It is fair to say, however, that a similar authorization obtained in the act of June 18, 1934, known as the Hayden-Cartwright Act, and in previous appropriations.

Section 5 provides for an authorization of $10,000,000 for each of the 2 fiscal years mentioned for the construction and maintenance of parkways to give access to national parks or to become connecting sections of a national parkway plan. I favored the provision and announced when the bill was under consideration in the House that I reserved the right to support this provision. It is an authorization primarily for the construction of the Natchez Trace Parkway in the States of Mississippi, Alabama, and Tennessee, with a total length of 460 miles, and for the Blue Ridge Parkway in the States of North Carolina, Virginia, and Tennessee, with a total length of 490 miles. Provision has previously been made for both the Natchez Trace and Blue Ridge Parkways by the President out of an allocation for the Relief and Emergency Act of 1935 and out of the National Industrial Recovery Act of 1933. The work is already in progress on both of the parkways. The Blue Ridge Park connects the Shenandoah and Great Smoky National Parks. Provision will be made in the Blue Ridge and Natchez Trace Parkways for about 900 miles of highways.

As I have stated, practically all of the national parks are west of the Mississippi River. Substantially 900 or 1,000 miles of park highways have been constructed west of the Mississippi River. The pending bill carries $7,500,000 for roads in parks; it carries $2,500,000 for roads through public lands; it carries $4,000,000 for roads through Indian lands. These amounts aggregate $14,000,000. In addition, the pending bill carries $14,000,000 for forest highways, roads, and trails. National forests have been largely increased in the last 3 or 4 years, but the fact is most of the forests are west of the Mississippi River. While provision is thus made for the expenditure of $28,000,000, largely west of the Mississippi River, the provision for an expenditure of $10,000,000 on parkways east of the Mississippi River is not unreasonable. The fact is the authorizations are substantially on all fours. The aggregate of $28,000,000 for parks, forests, public lands, and Indian lands has obtained in previous highway legislation. An especially generous provision has been made for these improvements under the emergency acts.

The conferees eliminated the amendment to section 7 of the act giving the Secretary of Agriculture, in his discretion, authority to deal directly with counties or other subdivisions of the several States respecting the construction of secondary roads. The conferees also eliminated the provision requiring a section of rural roads to be established in the Bureau of Public Roads. The Director of the Bureau of Public Roads assured the conferees that there was a division of rural roads and there was no occasion for the expense incident to the establishment of a separate section of rural roads.

The State highway commissioners are the spokesmen for States with respect to Federal aid for highways. The authorities in the counties and other subdivisions can better contact the State highway commission than they can the Secretary of Agriculture. Either the States or the counties or road districts must provide for matching Federal aid for secondary roads.

The only argument in behalf of the provision requiring the enormous expenditure of setting up additional agencies to deal with more than 3,000 counties was by one or two States where some were not satisfied with the work of the State highway commissions. The answer is that the State highway commissioners are selected by the State; the State has some rights. If a mistake has been made, the State should correct the mistake. The remedy is not to multiply Federal agencies and increase Federal bureaucracy. Surely the highway commission will give as much consideration to the counties and legal subdivisions as to a bureau in Washington. Moreover, even if the amendment had been retained, the probability is the Secretary of Agriculture would not have exercised the discretion.

All Federal-aid projects, including Federal-aid highways and secondary roads, will have to be approved by the Director of Public Roads. If the Secretary of Agriculture were given authority to deal direct with local boards, this might indirectly deprive the State highway commission of its privilege of representing the State in the location and selection of the highways.

The amendment proposed by the Senate and agreed to in conference with respect to proper protective safety devices in section 7 embraces no new matter. The conferees were advised that the expenditure of funds allocated under the Relief and Emergency Act had been made upon the conditions proposed. The amendment merely carries forward the policy that now obtains with respect to authority for the elimination of grade crossings.

Amendment 14 is a very important one. In post-exchange stores and on Government reservations gasoline and motor-vehicle fuel is being sold free from local taxes. The conferees believe that all local taxes should be collected except when the gasoline or motor-vehicle fuels are for the exclusive use of the United States. The privilege should not be extended to officials or employees when not in the actual discharge of their official duties. The conferees agreed, therefore, to provide for the collection of all taxes levied by any State, Territory, or District upon the sale of gasoline or other motor-vehicle fuel, except when for the exclusive use of the United States.

The needs for highway constructions are multiplying. The conference report should be approved.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTWRIGHT] yield to me for a question?

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. A few minutes ago, I asked the chairman of the Committee on Roads about section 5. I asked the chairman particularly to advise the House the amount carried in this bill for farm-to-market roads as compared with the amount for grade crossings. His response was that $25,000,000 is provided in section 5 for farm-to-market roads. In another section there is provided $50,000,000 for the elimination of highway grade crossings. Was it the consensus of opinion of the members of the Committee on Roads that the elimination of highway grade crossings was twice as important as the building of farm-to-market roads? Permit me to add that I am especially interested in a farm-to-market road program, as my colleague well knows. I am also interested in eliminating dangerous highway grade crossings, but it occurs to me that the items in this bill should be reversed, giving $50,000,000 for a farm-to-market road program, and $25,000,000 for the elimination of highway grade crossings.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. I deeply appreciate my colleague's interest in farm-to-market roads which he has always shown. But, as I stated before, the farm-to-market roads get much more from other sources. Anyway, this was settled in the passage of the bill, therefore is not involved in the conference.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT].

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, there were two or three things in this conference which were really controversial. The first was that the House committee, when considering this bill, reduced the sum in section 2 to be appropriated for forest highway road trails from $15,000,000 to $10,000,000. We felt that was all that was required. The Senate amended the House bill and provided that $20,000,000 should be appropriated for this purpose. The conferees agreed upon $14,000,000, which is $1,000,000 less than the Bureau asked for.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. Is it not a fact that this year the bill which has just been approved for the Agricultural Department carries $8,000,000?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I am not sure, but I am willing to take the gentleman's word for it.

Mr. TABER. That is the fact.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, it would seem to me that $14,000,000 is not required for this purpose and that the amount which we originally appropriated of $10,000,000 is adequate. Inasmuch as the ranking minority member of the Appropriations Committee has stated we have appropriated $8,000,000, which was undoubtedly done as the result of hearings and at the request of the Bureau, we feel that is sufficient.

I hope it will be borne in mind during the consideration of this conference report that with the exception of amendment no. 9 the House receded on every amendment the Senate wrote into this bill. I want to particularly address myself at this time to amendment no. 5.

Mr. Speaker, if this amendment is agreed to, the Members of the House will go on record as approving the most visionary project that has ever been conceived in the mind of any man. This section, as written into the bill by the Senate, provides there shall be appropriated or authorized as an appropriation $10,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1938, and a like amount for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1939, for the construction and maintenance of parkways to give access to national parks and national monuments, or to become connecting sections of a national-parkway plan.

The reason for this section, and the only thing behind it, is a bill which is now pending before this House to authorize the construction of a parkway 800 feet wide, except where it goes through Government forest lands, and then it is to be 200 feet wide, and 477 miles long between the Smoky Mountains National Park and the Shenandoah National Park. If you can contemplate driving over a parkway 800 feet wide seven-eighths of the distance between the Capital City of Washington and the city of Detroit, you have some idea as to what we are doing in accepting Senate amendment no. 5 to this bill.

Mr. Speaker, this $10,000,000 is merely a starter. In fact, it started before the Senate wrote this amendment into the bill. The President authorized an allotment of over a million dollars to this project, and over a million dollars to a comparable project, the Natchez Trace, running across the State of Mississippi, without any authority from this Congress, and without any authority from this House. The President on his own initiative allocated over a million dollars to each of these projects. Now they come in here and want us to put our stamp of approval on a proposition of that kind.

Mr. Speaker, what does this mean? It means that this great superhighway, 800 feet wide and 477 miles long, connecting the great Smoky Mountains National Park and the Shenandoah National Park, will ultimately cost the taxpayers of this Nation $23,500,000.

Also, it would authorize the construction of the Natchez Trace across the State of Mississippi, a survey for which was authorized by the Congress last year, with the idea that the findings would be reported back here and we would have further opportunity to be heard on the feasibility of spending the money for this purpose, which is to cost $25,000,000, and the only justification for it is that it is the route which Jackson took when he marched his army down to take New Orleans. It is a very interesting country and is a very interesting story historically, but it is going to cost us $25,000,000 to give the State of Mississippi a free highway across the State without having to match the appropriation with one dollar of State money.

This other parkway gives the States of Virginia and North Carolina a parkway 477 miles long, including a highway, without the States of Virginia and North Carolina having to match one cent of it.

The Members should know what they are doing when they are voting for amendment 5. You have called Passamaquoddy visionary, you have called the Florida ship canal visionary, you have not known what visionary projects are until you have made a study of the potentialities of amendment no. 5, and I am asking the House to use the logic which it ordinarily uses in these cases and vote down the conference report in order that we may have a separate vote upon whether we shall recede and concur in Senate amendment no. 5 or not.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LORD].

Mr. LORD. Mr. Speaker, the House Committee on Roads spent considerable time on this road bill and when we sent the bill to the Senate it was a good measure. We eliminated from the bill the various provisions that have been put back in it by the Senate. The provision that the gentleman from Michigan has just spoken about to construct nearly 1,000 miles of superhighway in four or five Southern States that is to be from 200- to 800-foot right-of-way was eliminated from the bill while it was before the House committee.

Another provision which we eliminated, but which has been now added to the bill at page 6, provides that one particular State of the Union may receive Federal aid without matching such amounts. It has always been, and is now the law, that each State that receives Federal aid shall contribute a similar amount. If we pass the bill with this provision in it, any State in the future may put itself in a position where they will not have to match Federal aid in order to get Federal money. This is amendment no. 1 in the bill and applies particularly to the State of Arkansas.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] has stated the objections to the other principal amendments, in all of which I concur.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON].

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT], in opposing amendment no. 5 of this bill, takes particular pains to inveigh against the building of the Blue Ridge Parkway, connecting the Great Smoky Mountain National Park and the Shenandoah National Park, comprising 427,000 acres in North Carolina and Tennessee and 180,000 acres in the State of Virginia. The gentleman referred to another bill, to which he objected yesterday, which he states authorizes the construction of this parkway, showing how little the gentleman knows about the subject. That bill authorizes nothing of the kind. It only authorizes the administration and maintenance of this parkway over the public lands of the United States and does not have a word or syllable in it so far as authorizing the parkway is concerned. The parkway is being constructed under title II of the National Industrial Recovery Act, which the gentleman would know if he would look into the matter.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. This amendment provides $10,000 for each of the next 2 years, and the Senate committee hearing bears out the fact that the Government is to spend $23,500,000 on the gentleman's project and $25,000,000 upon the project at Natchez Trace. I would advise the gentleman to read the hearings. When he states I do not know anything about the bill, I may say that I have read them, and I have been very careful in stating the facts correctly. Although the States furnish this land, the maintenance of the parkway after it is donated to the Federal Government will be maintained under the appropriation provided in this amendment.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The States of North Carolina and Tennessee have deeded or ceded to the Federal Government for park purposes the 427,000 acres of land in North Carolina and Tennessee and 180,000 acres in Virginia as a gift. This park land cost the States of North Carolina and Virginia $12,000,000, and I do not know how much it cost Tennessee, and this parkway is being built to connect these two great national parks and will be the property of the United States and will be maintained the same as the other national parks.

Mr. WOLCOTT. We have not authorized them to accept the land for that purpose.

Mr. DOUGHTON. This was authorized under the National Industrial Recovery Act.

Mr. WOLCOTT. That was the purpose of the bill we killed on the floor yesterday.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The parkway is already under construction. About 100 miles has already been let to contract and quite a part of it has already been constructed. The bill objected to yesterday relates only to the maintenance of the parkway and not to any authorization for the building of the roads.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Is it my understanding, then, that when this fantastic project is finished you will have 200,000 or 300,000 acres in Virginia and 400,000 acres in North Carolina and a parkway 477 miles long connecting these two parks, which will be 800 feet wide?

Mr. DOUGHTON. No; that is just another sample of the imagination of the gentleman from Ohio. It will be about 40 feet wide in some places and 26 feet wide in others. No 800-foot parkway is proposed.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The gentleman knows better than that.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman does not know better than that. I do not yield further to the gentleman from Michigan. The gentleman has made a misstatement, but, of course, not intentionally.

Mr. WOLCOTT. In what respect?

Mr. DOUGHTON. About the parkway being 800 feet wide.

Mr. WOLCOTT. All right; we will refer to the bill.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The bill provides for an easement of 800 feet——

Mr. WOLCOTT. I think the gentleman had better read his bill.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman not only does not confine himself to the facts, but he does not obey the rules of the House. The gentleman is so confused and so bewildered that he violates the rules of the House. [Laughter and applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Michigan use the rest of his time now?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 2 minutes. Now, does the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON] dispute the fact that in the bill we had under consideration yesterday he provides that this parkway is to be 800 feet wide, except where it goes through Federal forest lands, and then to a maximum of 200 feet wide?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I deny I provide for anything. It is not my bill. The gentleman does not know what he is talking about.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Has not the gentleman got his name on the bill that we had under consideration yesterday?

Mr. DOUGHTON. That provides for the maintenance, not the construction.

Mr. WOLCOTT. It provides for this parkway, and the money for that is to be appropriated under section 5 of this bill; the gentleman must know that if he knows what he is talking about. If the gentleman will look at the bill that he presented to us for consideration yesterday he will see that on the deeding of this land for that right-of-way 800 feet wide, except where it goes through Federal forest lands, and then 200 feet wide, that then the Government is to maintain it out of this $48,000,000. The gentleman ought to read his own bill if he does not know anything about it.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman has no business talking about bills that he does not know anything about.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The gentleman says he did not say that yesterday, but if he will be patient for a minute I will read the bill to him and prove that he does not know what is in his own bill.

Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that in considering bills of this kind we must realize that sometime the United States of America has got to come to the point where it ceases to increase the amount it appropriates instead of continually increasing it. In this bill Senate amendment no. 1 is so drawn that it can permit the Secretary of Agriculture, regardless of whether they have any legitimate gasoline taxes or not, to allocate a lot of money to supplement what they refused to raise by gasoline tax, just like the District of Columbia refuses to do. On page 4 there is a provision which increases the amount that the House allowed for the purpose of forest highways from $10,000,000 to $14,000,000 and yet this year we are appropriating only $8,000,000. It seems to me ridiculous.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. Yes.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Is it not true—and the gentleman knows that I have opposed the increase—and is it not fair to say that the act of 1934 provides appropriations of comparable amounts for the same purpose?

Mr. TABER. I do not know about that.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I know it is true.

Mr. TABER. I know it is $8,000,000 for 1937, and this increases the authorized amount to $14,000,000, and I do not like it. Then there is this parkway that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] has told us about. I do not know how much it will cost, but I guarantee it will cost, if you go on on this colossal scale, from $35,000,000 to $40,000,000.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. With respect to the parkway——

Mr. TABER. How much will it cost?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. All the money heretofore expended for parks has been largely expended west of the Mississippi, and this will provide for spending money on parks and parkways east of the Mississippi, and includes only the Shenandoah and the Natchez Trace Parkways.

Mr. TABER. This will cost $200,000,000.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. It will not. The total costs of the two parkways will be about $45,000,000, as shown by the Senate hearings.

Mr. TABER. That is my information.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I cannot yield any more. Section 6, on page 6, now takes the place of an appropriation of three and a half million dollars, and this is an authorization here for $4,000,000.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. That is exactly the amount in the present law.

Mr. TABER. Three and a half million dollars is the amount carried the other day. Go over your other amendments, and the whole thing just means that we are increasing the amount authorized by a tremendous amount of money. I hope that the House will vote down the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. FORD].

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I rise to urge my colleagues to support the conference report on H. R. 11687 and to correct the impression that some of the membership of the House may have gotten from the erroneous statement of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT]. He advised the House a moment ago that this parkway would be 800 feet wide. There is nothing whatever in this law or any other law enacted by Congress that authorizes the construction of a parkway 800 feet wide. The bill referred to by the gentleman from Michigan, introduced by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON], known as H. R. 12455, provides that it shall be 200 feet wide.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Not more than that?

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. That is correct. Not more than 200 feet is the exact language of the bill.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will the gentleman look at the report on the bill, on the bottom line of the first page? There he will find the following:

> The parkway will be 477 miles long and will be located on a right-of-way averaging 800 feet in width, which is being acquired by the States involved and donated to the United States, except where the location is through national-forest areas.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. That is the right of way; that does not mean that the road will be 800 feet in width, as the gentleman has indicated.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I do not say the cement road is 800 feet wide, but the parkway is to be 800 feet wide.

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. That may be true, but the gentleman must bear in mind that the States, counties, and local communities through which the parkways run are to furnish the entire right-of-way without any cost to the Federal Government.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] has stated that the construction of the two parkways will cost the Federal Government $200,000,000. The gentleman is in error when he makes such a statement. The construction of the Natchez Trace Parkway and the Blue Ridge Parkway will not cost anything near that amount. The Natchez Trace Parkway runs from Natchez, Miss., in a northeasterly direction across the State of Mississippi, then across the northwest corner of Alabama, and then to Nashville, Tenn., and covers a distance of approximately 460 miles. It is estimated by the National Park Service that it will cost $50,000 a mile to construct this parkway, thus taking approximately $23,000,000 for its entire construction. The Blue Ridge Parkway runs a distance of approximately 490 miles in the States of North Carolina and Virginia and connects the Shenandoah and Great Smoky Mountain National Parks. It is estimated by the National Park Service that the Blue Ridge Parkway will cost approximately $70,000 a mile, thus making the total cost of this parkway approximately $34,300,000.

Mr. Speaker, both of these parkways are historic from many standpoints. They run through great States, and the construction of these parkways at this time would afford employment to a large number who are now unemployed. I hope that my friends will join me in voting for the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON].

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, my colleague from Michigan has referred to this as a fantastic proposition. I call his attention to the fact that the development of the Shenandoah and Great Smoky parks will put within a half day's motor ride of 30,000,000 people the greatest recreational area in the United States. When this scenic drive is completed, those two parks will in 1 year be visited by more people than all of the other 22 national parks in the United States combined.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBERTSON. In just a minute.

Already, when the drive is not built, when our Shenandoah Park has not been completed, we have had more visitors to the Shenandoah National Park than any five parks in the United States combined.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I yield.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Then the gentleman admits that the purpose of this bill is to build a parkway and maintain a road through that parkway 477 miles long, connecting these two parks?

Mr. ROBERTSON. Absolutely, and it is a sound proposition, to make available to the Atlantic seaboard, where you have concentration of population, this great recreational area. There those people can find surcease from the strain of our present economic life. Wildlife can be taken care of. There are free camping grounds. There is an opportunity to find healthy recreation and happiness that cannot be found in our smoke-filled cities. It is one of the soundest propositions that has ever been presented to the House.

The gasoline tax that the Government will collect from motorists using this Skyline Drive will not only provide a fund for maintenance of the highway but likewise enough to repay the capital investment. The project will bring indirect returns of a financial character by putting money in circulation. Any economist will tell you that prosperity in the country is more dependent upon the velocity of circulation than upon the amount of the circulating medium.

A few Sundays ago, accompanied by my distinguished colleague from Ohio [Mr. HOLLISTER], I drove over the section of the Skyline Drive in the Shenandoah National Park from Swift Run Gap to Panorama. We were struck not only with the large number of motorists on the drive but likewise with the fact that at least 90 percent of the cars were from States other than Virginia. As I recall, the largest number was from New York. When a motorist starts from New York to visit an area of this character he puts money in circulation in all of the States through which he passes.

My distinguished colleague [Mr. WOLCOTT] has likewise referred to the requirement of the National Park Service of an 800-foot right-of-way for the drive in question, with a 200-foot right-of-way through property owned by the Federal Government. The metal surface of the road itself is only 30 feet wide. The Government will then acquire—and mind you every foot of it will be donated to the Government—a fee simple title to a 200-foot right-of-way. In addition to that there will be donated to the Government on each side of the right-of-way a scenic easement in an additional 400 feet for the purpose of protecting the scenic drive from unsightly roadside signs.

I, therefore, wish, Mr. Speaker, to impress upon my colleagues the fact that the Government will not spend one red cent for acquiring title to a single acre of land in either the Shenandoah National Park or the Great Smoky National Park nor for one acre of land in any of the right-of-way involved in the construction of the Skyline Drive to contact these two great parks. Everyone knows that a great natural resource is useless unless accessible. Admiral Byrd discovered some great natural resources at the South Pole, but until they are more accessible they will have no commercial value. We have great natural resources in Alaska, and the Government has been subsidizing railroads, steamship lines, and air lines to make them more accessible. When we bought Alaska it was frequently referred to as "Uncle Sam's icebox." Each year we are becoming more and more dependent upon the fisheries of Alaska, and some day we may be dependent upon the mineral resources of that vast domain.

During three seasons of the year, the spring, summer, and fall, there is a charm and beauty in the Shenandoah and Great Smoky National Parks that is not surpassed in the East. By the construction of the drive in question, we can bring within easy reach of some 30,000,000 people the scenic beauty of an Alpine drive, the best of the flora and fauna of the Middle Atlantic States, and, as I have previously indicated, an opportunity for the city dwellers to enjoy cheap and wholesome recreation. For in addition to the recreational opportunities to be offered by the two parks the drive will pass through more than 1,000,000 acres of national forests in Virginia and a large acreage in North Carolina. These national forests do not belong to Virginia and North Carolina—they belong to the Nation to be held in trust for the use and benefit of all the people. They are open to public hunting and fishing, and camping; they are open for a longer period of the year on account of climatic conditions than some of our other national parks and national forests; and lying south of north and north of south they offer not only to the sportsman but to the nature lover whose name is legion an opportunity to make contact with a wide variety of birds and animals. I hope, therefore, Mr. Speaker, that this conference report will be adopted. In addition to providing for the enjoyment of the natural resources I have mentioned, the report likewise provides for a very necessary highway program and for the first time in the history of the Nation carries a direct appropriation for the construction of farm-to-market roads.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARREN].

Mr. WARREN. Mr. Speaker, there is no difference and no disagreement existing between the two Houses on this report. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] signed the report, except as to amendment no. 5.

I call the attention of the House to the fact that this bill carries $125,000,000 for Federal aid to roads. It carries $25,000,000 for farm-to-market roads. It carries other authorizations for grade crossings, parkways, and Indian trails. If we wish to defeat this whole measure, then we should vote down the conference report, but if we are in favor of this bill, which is an infinitely better measure than when it left the House, we should vote for the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WOLCOTT) there were ayes 74 and noes 34.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present, and I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 238, nays 87, answered "present" 1, not voting 99, as follows:

FEDERAL AID TO HIGHWAYS

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD at this point to include some correspondence I have had about the matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Mr. FORD of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, for many reasons the bill which has just passed for Federal aid to highways is one of vital importance, and it has been a real pleasure for me to actively support its enactment into law.

Authorization is made in this bill for the appropriation of $125,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1938 and 1939 for Federal aid to States for highway construction, and $25,000,000 per year for 1938 and 1939 is likewise provided for use exclusively in construction of farm-to-market roads.

The importance of farm-to-market roads is everywhere recognized. That our main highways must be constructed is beyond question, but we must not lose sight of the widespread, imperative necessity for improved rural roads. The farmer is entitled to a good road over which to carry his products to market, over which to send his children to school, and over which to travel at any time for any other purposes. Improved farm-to-market roads will mean much in the future of farm progress, and this bill certainly marks a decisive step in the right direction.

I am truly interested in making these benefits available to our people, but I also wish to direct your attention to section 5 of the bill as amended. This section carries an authorization for the appropriation of $10,000,000 for each of the years 1938 and 1939 for the construction of national parkways, including the Natchez Trace Parkway from Natchez, Miss., to Nashville, Tenn.

Mr. A. E. Demaray, Acting Director of the National Park Service, has kindly written me the following letter, which shows that $9,153,685 is to be made available by section 5 of this bill for the construction of the Natchez Trace Parkway in the States of Mississippi, Alabama, and Tennessee, and the sum of $10,846,315 is made available for construction of the Blue Ridge Parkway in the States of North Carolina and Virginia:

WASHINGTON, May 12, 1936.

Hon. A. L. FORD,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. FORD: In compliance with your request of May 9, a table was included in the National Park Service testimony before the Senate Post Offices and Post Roads Committee indicating a division of funds between the two national parkway projects now under construction. On the basis of the Senate amendment to the Federal road bill, the division of the $10,000,000 annual authorization contained in section 5 of H. R. 11687 for parkway construction for each of the fiscal years ending June 30, 1938, and June 30, 1939, would be as follows:

Name and location of parkway	Total length (miles)	Estimated cost per mile	Estimated mileage and cost of proposed work
			1938: $10,000,000 authorization		1939: $10,000,000 authorization
			Miles	Cost	Miles	Cost
Natchez Trace	460	$50,000
Mississippi			60.5	$3,026,316	67.4	$3,368,421
Alabama			4.7	236,842	6.3	315,790
Tennessee			20.2	1,048,421	22.2	1,157,895
Total			85.4	4,311,579	96.9	4,842,106
Blue Ridge	490	70,000
Virginia			32.9	2,305,790	34.6	2,421,052
North Carolina			48.3	3,382,631	39.1	2,736,842
Total			81.2	5,688,421	73.7	5,157,894
Grand total	950		166.6	10,000,000	170.6	10,000,000

Sincerely yours,

A. E. DEMARAY,
Acting Director, National Park Service.

The construction of a paved roadway along the historic old Indian trail running 460 miles from Natchez to Nashville is a matter of real importance to the people of my district as well as of similar interest to all those who live anywhere along the route.

On February 20, 1934, Senator Hubert D. Stephens, who was then a United States Senator from Mississippi, introduced a bill (S. 2825) authorizing the appropriation of $50,000 for a survey of the Natchez Trace, and this bill, after passing both the Senate and the House, became a law on May 21, 1934. I found, however, when I came to Congress, over 7 months later, that the survey work for which the Senator's bill had provided had not been begun. In keeping with my official obligation to the people interested in the construction of the parkway, and because of my own personal interest in behalf of this great undertaking, I was happy to take steps immediately to secure early action. After numerous conferences with officials of the Bureau of Public Roads and of the National Park Service, the survey was actually begun in February 1935, with Engineer F. L. Brownell, of the Bureau of Public Roads, in charge.

After the survey work was assured I received the following comments in letters from the persons whose names are signed:

NATCHEZ, MISS., March 17, 1935.

We are very deeply grateful to you for introducing the bill for the paving of the Natchez Trace, and we are equally grateful for your efforts to get the survey started.

MRS. FERRIDAY BYRNES,
President, the Natchez Trace Association.

The Natchez Trace Association greatly appreciates the splendid work which you have done in our behalf in getting the Natchez Trace advanced to its present status.

RALPH L. LANDRUM,
Secretary-Treasurer, the Natchez Trace Association.

Mr. Speaker, I have a large number of similar letters on file in my office from people in various counties through which the Natchez Trace runs.

In the meantime, on February 6, 1936, I introduced a bill in the House of Representatives, H. R. 5436, authorizing the appropriation of $25,000,000 for the construction and maintenance of the Natchez Trace Parkway, the construction to be effected along the route to be determined by the survey just being started at the time of the introduction of the bill. Congressman DAN R. MCGEHEE, of Mississippi, introduced a similar bill in the House of Representatives, and Senator HARRISON introduced a bill for the same purpose in the Senate.

In the House my bill went to the Committee on Roads, the same committee that approved and reported the bill which we passed a few minutes ago, containing the authorization of $20,000,000 for national parkway construction. I am happy to see this permanent legislation bearing the same effect as proposed in my bill.

The work of the preliminary survey begun in February was completed early in June, and I began a movement for the allocation of some funds from the $4,880,000,000 works relief appropriation for construction of the Natchez Trace.

When Congress reached adjournment of the session on August 26, the desired allotment had not been secured, although wonderful progress in that direction had been achieved. I was anxious to get home, but I delayed my return to the district because of plans I had made in regard to additional attempts to secure the funds so much desired. At the time I left for home the outlook for securing the funds for the construction of the Natchez Trace Parkway appeared very bright, indeed. I went all over the district, seeing the people and giving them the opportunity to personally discuss with me any matter of importance to them with which I could be of any assistance. After I had visited in every county, I returned to Washington to continue my efforts in behalf of the Natchez Trace and other projects to be paid for with money taken from the $4,880,000,000 works-relief funds.

Success came, Mr. Speaker, on November 20. Just before leaving on a vacation trip to Warm Springs, Ga., the President of the United States directed that $150,000 be set aside for further survey work preparatory to the construction of the Natchez Trace Parkway, and he also directed that $1,350,000 be allotted for actual construction between Natchez and Tupelo, Miss. This money is still available, and will remain available until entirely expended on the Natchez Trace.

At this point I express my thanks, and the thanks of my people, to every member of the Mississippi delegation in this House and to our United States Senators for their generous assistance in behalf of the construction of this parkway. I would not forget to thank our distinguished Speaker and the other Members of the House who have so willingly contributed to the success of this cause.

At this time I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD letters I have received from the Speaker of the House and a member of the Committee on Roads.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 23, 1936.

Hon. A. L. FORD,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR COLLEAGUE: Acknowledging your letter of recent date, I am very happy to bear testimony to your valuable work and assistance in securing an appropriation for the Natchez Trace, in which I am also interested, because it originates in my home city.

You have been active in this matter from the beginning of your service, and I am sure it is very pleasing to you that the work is bearing fruit.

With kindest regards, I am,
Sincerely your friend,

JOSEPH W. BYRNS,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 2, 1936.

Hon. A. L. FORD,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR FORD: The conference report has been submitted on H. R. 11687, to amend the Federal Aid Highway Act, etc. It shows an agreement on amendment no. 5, placed in the bill in the Senate, which authorizes $10,000,000 annually for 2 years for the construction and maintenance of parkways to give access to national parks and national monuments over lands to which title has been transferred to the United States. I am confident that the House will adopt the conference report by a large majority.

This parkway amendment will provide funds for the construction of the parkway on the Natchez Trace, and several million dollars will be allocated to this work. As one of the conferees, I wish you to know how deeply I appreciate the invaluable aid and interest that you have shown in this item. You have been most active in presenting this matter from the time that it was inserted in the bill in the Senate, and this satisfactory conclusion I am sure is most pleasing to you.

With all good wishes, I am,
Sincerely,

LINDSAY C. WARREN,
First District of North Carolina.

Including the amount provided in this bill and the amount set aside by order of the President, the sum of $10,653,685 has been definitely authorized for the Natchez Trace since I came to Congress on January 1, 1935.

I am delighted that the efforts in behalf of this important roadway have been so successful. Success now makes all the hard work which was done seem very light, for it will be a happy privilege to go back to my people and tell them that they are certain to have a beautiful paved road along the Natchez Trace.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to renew the request I made yesterday.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot recognize the gentleman for that purpose until after the special orders are disposed of.

Under the special order heretofore made by the House, the Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] for 15 minutes.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, I shall present, without personal prejudice and without malice and without personal grudges against any group in these United States but as a Member of this body, a matter which I think it my duty to present in a calm and dispassionate way and without personal animosity.

I am addressing myself in behalf of a resolution to investigate the Black Legion and other domestic subversive movements in the United States. I am presenting this matter so that the House may pass upon it. The responsibility is not mine but that of this House of the Congress of the United States as to whether that resolution will be adopted before adjournment or not.

In 1933 the House created a committee to investigate foreign and domestic subversive agitation and movements in the United States originating abroad. That committee had for its chairman the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK]. I am sure, Mr. Speaker, the Members will agree with me when I say that committee was responsible for destroying much foreign propaganda within the United States. As a result of that committee's activities, not only were we able to deport many aliens who were advocating foreign movements in this country, but we exposed a lot of foreign subsidized propaganda within our borders.

However, we are faced now with a greater responsibility—that is what to do about the recent exposure of what is known as the "Black Legion."

Mr. Speaker, it is a real menace. It has spread through 11 States, and statements have even been made to the effect that it had extended operations into 15 States. It started as a racketeering group and then developed into a political machine making attacks upon certain Members of Congress and certain people in Washington. It spread so fast that it is almost impossible to keep up with them.

Members of Congress have asked why cannot the Department of Justice take care of the situation? The Department of Justice cannot take care of it because, in the first place, Mr. Speaker, today the investigator in Michigan is investigating the investigator and even a part of the police department are members of the organization; and in the second place, a certain number of fine people in Michigan, including a certain judge or two, are involved in the outfit. It has spread, as I said, into 11 States of the Union and they claim a national membership of 6,000,000, although I do not credit them with such a large membership.

What can the Department of Justice do? Make an investigation, and then what? There is not a Federal law upon which they can prosecute so as to destroy this menace, whether it is black, white, green, brown, or blue.

Oh, I know. Some Members of Congress perhaps resent my getting on this floor because I happen to be of Jewish faith, but I still claim to be an American, just as good as they are, and I want to see that everything that is done shall be done for the welfare of all the people of my country. [Applause.]

This resolution is not directed against one particular group. I warn this Congress now that it is about time we put the searchlight upon every organization in this country that is taking the law into their own hands and seeking to destroy the foundations of this Republic.

Is it serious? It is very serious when you find men in the Reserve Corps of the United States Army, who are officers in the State Militia of Michigan, directing this group. When you find they take cavalry horses from the State troops and Army to use in their night riding, I say it is serious.

The origin of the Black Legion can be definitely traced to correspondence between "John Doe", an officer in the Reserve forces of the United States Army, a Medical Corps officer attached to the National Guard of the State of Michigan. I do not wish to give his name now but I am going to present original documents to the Committee on Rules at the proper time. This correspondence was carried on with the Silver Legion, another so-called patriotic organization with headquarters in Asheville, N. C., and in Oklahoma City, Okla. The intention at that time was to enlarge the scope of the activities of the Ku Klux Klan in Detroit and begin a sort of superklan which eventually became the Black Legion which is now operating in 11 States.

Capt. "John Doe" is now in the Reserve Corps of the United States Army, a high-ranking medical officer in the State militia of Michigan, attached to a cavalry unit of that organization, and the trainer of the night-riding Black Legion. His correspondence with officials at the headquarters of the Silver Legion—William Dudley Pelley; Harry F. Sieber; Maj. L. L. Powell, chief of staff; and Capt. Robert Summerville—reveals a direct hook-up between the Ku Klux Klan, Colonel Hadley's Paul Reveres, Silver Shirts, and the Black Legion. I am going to present this correspondence to the Committee on Rules.

Now, listen to this, my friends. Capt. "John Doe", in writing to Robert Summerville, of the Silver Legion, on October 20, 1933—that is just the time this organization was created—has this to say:

> The Klan is growing with unbelievable rapidity. Inside of a month I predict a membership of 50,000. I am working very closely with them. I wish it was so that you could send an organizer here to work full time. My time is so taken that I do not have time to get more than 4 hours' sleep a night. Hope to have 50 klansmen mounted in 2 weeks' time.

The same Capt. "John Doe" wrote several other letters in which—and there is no question of doubt about it and no Member of this House can contradict it—this same Capt. "John Doe", who is a responsible officer, said he had contacted a number of other officers in the Army and had approached them upon the question of joining this movement. He has gone so far as to state that he is conducting classes and that he has about 20,000 or 50,000 ready to do the night riding any time the call is necessary.

In another letter that I have, without mentioning this officer's name, he told his colleagues in this black, white, blue—whatever you want to call it—organization that when the call for service came, and that it might come very soon, they expected bloodshed in Michigan. In another letter he said it had been decided that the family, especially wives and children, of every member of these particular groups should leave the State of Michigan when the bloodshed was to begin.

In another letter, this Capt. "John Doe" writes—I quote:

> Training of the volunteer Klan cavalry troop continues without interruption.

Now, all that and more appears over the signature and in the handwriting of this particular Capt. "John Doe", and I am prepared to present these original documents to the Rules Committee for consideration.

Mr. Speaker, I am not seeking a chairmanship, or membership, on any committee. I present the facts to the House so that the Committee on Rules may thoroughly examine them and prove to the House that this is a national menace, which is spreading throughout the country. It is stirring up a hatred, intolerance, and resorting to murder, if you please, in order to accomplish its result. Irrespective of the fact that I happen to be of the Jewish faith, I stand upon this floor today and beg of you to throw the searchlight of the Congress of the United States upon all of the "shirt" organizations—the blacks, the blue, the green, and the brown—and let us clean house of them all.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONNERY. It seems to me it does not make any difference to the Members of the House whether a Member is a Jew, Catholic, or Protestant. He is a Member of the House of Representatives, and I do not think any Member of the House should stand for murder or for the outrages mentioned by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I thank the gentleman.

A letter dated October 24, 1933, within a month after this organization was organized, addressed to the Silver Rangers Organization in Oklahoma, reads in part as follows:

Thursday night I start the Klan cavalry instruction. Have 20 in the first class. That is all the mounts that will be available. They hope to purchase mounts. We anticipate riot duty here before long, at least early in the spring or late winter. The local papers are mentioning the formation of tribunals in connection with the N. R. A. That word chills my bone marrow. Reminds me of the Spanish Inquisition, Russian and French revolts, and now we have them proposed for this country; wonder what next? I am mailing a letter to field headquarters this morning concerning Silver Rangers unit here. Would like to join forces there. Animal instinct, to hunt with the pack, but feel that my first duty is here, although it is very discouraging at times. Succeeded in waking up the battalion commander, and now I'm going after the colonel of the regiment.

He is talking about colonels and commanders within the State Guard as the Reserves of the United States Army.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have 10 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MURDOCK). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, but do so only because I do not want to take the gentleman's time, may I ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. DICKSTEIN] why he does not place everything he has in his possession in reference to this matter before the War Department and the Attorney General of the United States? If he will do that they will handle this thing in a proper and legal way to stop it. The War Department has control over all of the officers the gentleman has mentioned.

Mr. SADOWSKI. I will answer the question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. SADOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, to answer the question asked by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

The Department of Justice has already been approached on this matter. The Attorney General has already been contacted, and has expressed the view that he does not see how the Department can enter into this case. He states that nothing has been presented which would show a Federal offense of an interstate nature, but if such evidence was presented he would be willing to enter into the case. Nevertheless let us remember that we do know these things which have been stated by the gentleman are facts and exist; that the State police of Michigan were aware of this condition last August when they arrested some of these men with guns or found guns in certain cars. But nothing was done. The Governor of the State of Michigan has known about it. It does not look as if the State police and the Governor of our State are going to do much of anything about the matter.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, still reserving the right to object, only to use my own time and not the gentleman's, I may say if this is wholly within the State of Michigan it is a State matter, and the State authorities of Michigan ought to handle it, and Congress has nothing to do with the matter. If it ever crosses the line from Michigan into another State it becomes a national matter, which the Congress should then look into, and the Attorney General of the United States would then handle it. The War Department has control over the officers whether it is wholly in Michigan, or in some other States also.

Mr. SADOWSKI. I may say to the gentleman from Texas that the reason the State of Michigan, I believe, has not taken any part in this prosecution, or at least the way they ought to, is because of the fact these men have been affiliated with the Wolverine Republican Club and other Republican organizations. They have worked closely with the Republican Party in about four large counties in Michigan, and have been the backbone of the Republican Party in those four counties. For this reason they have not seen fit to interfere.

Mr. BLANTON. The State of Texas was able to handle night riders there and to break it up, and Michigan could do likewise.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman referred to the use of force and violence by this organization. I want to call the attention of the Members of the House to the fact that the special committee reported a bill making it a crime for anyone to knowingly and willingly—and please note those words—advocate the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force and violence. This bill has been reported by the Committee on the Judiciary and is now in the Committee on Rules. I cannot even get a hearing on the matter.

Mr. SHORT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. For a brief question.

Mr. SHORT. Does not the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] feel that every Republican believes in that bill as much as any Democrat?

Mr. McCORMACK. Absolutely.

Mr. SHORT. I am glad he does not agree with his colleague from Michigan that the Republican Party is the sole repository of all the rascality in this country.

Mr. McCORMACK. I do not think the gentleman meant that.

Mr. SHORT. What did he say?

Mr. McCORMACK. Oh, we are not going to impugn anything to a political party. The gentleman said this happened in four counties, where they were associated with a certain organization.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, the matter before the House at this time is a matter of vital interest to both parties in this House, and I hold the Republicans just as much responsible as the Democrats for not throwing the searchlight upon this particular menace in our country.

Now I am talking again of the same Capt. "John Doe", with respect to another letter which he received from the Silver Shirt headquarters. I quote:

I sent a letter by air mail to Captain So-and-So from headquarters. I heartily approve of what you say with respect to the effectiveness of the Klan organization and the Paul Revere organization, paralleling Silver Shirts' work. It is the ultimate principle for which we are working, and it is testimony from all concerned that they can hold the front-line trench in Detroit until we are ready to come in with our organization (the Black Legion). However, I would make it mighty hot for the leader of the Klan in Detroit.

In another letter this Capt. "John Doe" says:

Succeeded in waking up the battalion commander, and now I'm going after the colonel of the regiment. Tonight out to talk with major of third squadron, One Hundred and Sixth Cavalry Regiment, and tip him off to a few practice mobilizations to see how quickly they can get ready for field duty in Michigan. Am springing a trial mobilization in my company. These Army officers are dumb—dumb—dumb.

Now, I want you to listen to this question. I think I read up to the point where they said they would make it hot for the Klan in Detroit for not giving credit where credit belongs:

Emphatically, Capt. "John Doe", there is no organization that is much on the firing line as we are, or working as intensely with espionage officers.

Of where? Espionage officers in the Reserves of the United States Army and men in the State armories of Michigan.

Just thing of it, American Army officers. High-ranking members of that great body of Reserve Officers in the United States Army are a part and parcel of this subversive, domestic, 104-percent superpatriot group to save this country. They say they are going to save this country and, if necessary, use bullets just as they have already demonstrated they will.

In a letter dated September 30, 1933, this same captain says:

> I am in close contact with a large number of Army officers here, and am cultivating their friendship all I can. I also am planning on spending one night a week downtown learning all I can, and, as interesting material appears, I'll send it on to you. I am getting a lot of recruits.

Where is he getting the recruits? From his colleagues in the Reserves of the United States Army—from his colleagues in the State Militia of Michigan.

> I may say I have this under control. I wish to be kept at the present time incognito, because I cannot, at the present time, show my hand.

Yet you want to tell me that the Department of Justice can investigate this activity. After they make an investigation what is going to happen? There is not a law now and we do not know what laws to pass to eradicate this un-American menace.

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. For a brief question, yes.

Mr. LESINSKI. The aliens are not involved in this?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Not one alien. It is all domestic, 110-percent stock of Americans.

Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity you have given me here today and I am only presenting the facts.

Mr. SADOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. SADOWSKI. It has been developed, has it not, that members of the local police departments belong to this organization and for that reason it is difficult to see how you can have the full confidence of the local police in grappling with this problem and therefore it is necessary to get outside help.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. As I started off by saying, they are organized, in my opinion, in 11 States that I have proof of—not 15 States.

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. KRAMER. Does the gentleman know that they are now organizing in southern California?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. They are there now. They did not have to organize in southern California, because they have been there for years.

Mr. KRAMER. I have information that they are organizing in southern California now.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. For a brief question; yes.

Mr. MAPES. I have not had the privilege of hearing all that the gentleman has said or all of the interruptions, but if my memory serves me correctly, I read a long telegram from the prosecuting attorney of the county of Wayne, of which the city of Detroit is the county seat, asking the Attorney General for assistance and as I understand, the request was denied.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. The request was denied by the Attorney General. That is my understanding.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. I think it is only fair to clear up this situation. The Department of Justice has consistently taken the position that until there is a violation of a Federal law they are not justified in sending Federal authorities into a State. When I was chairman of a special committee we took up the question with the Department of Justice and went into it very thoroughly. The position they take is that until there is a violation of a Federal law, they cannot act, and I think their position is that up to the present time there has been no violation of a Federal law shown.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to refer to just a few more very important quotations from the correspondence of this Capt. "John Doe" which impresses me very strongly.

Under date of October 17, 1933, this Capt. "John Doe", of the Michigan State Militia, a part of the United States Army Reserves, wrote to the headquarters of the Silver Shirt organization as follows, in part:

> Sunday afternoon the Klan are to hold a closed meeting and start a drive for 10,000 membership. There is no doubt but that they will succeed. Out of that number there are to be picked a number and they are to be turned over to me for military drill and training * * *.

Again, under date of October 20, 1933, this Capt. "John Doe" writes to the same Silver Shirts headquarters, "I pledge myself to your cause."

In another letter he wrote:

> I feel that the next Congress will be the last one. What will be our next step as Army officers? Will the Army stay with the dictator or with the people?

Mr. Speaker, I am sure you will agree that the situation is serious, when correspondence of this character passes between a Reserve officer of the United States Army on active duty with a National Guard organization and the officials of a subversive group of native Americans. I say it reveals a very serious state of affairs which Congress should investigate at once.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is another phase of the present situation as developed in the current agitation in Michigan.

The public press, under dating of May 23, 1936, carried the statement that Officer Edward Johnson, of the State police, stationed at Jackson, Mich., had said the oath subscribed to by new members of the Black Legion reads, in part, as follows:

> I further pledge my heart, my brain, my body, and my limbs never to detray a comrade; that I will submit to all the tortures that mankind can inflict and suffer the most horrible death, rather than reveal a single word of this my oath.
> Before violating a single clause or implied pledge of this my obligation, I will pray to an avenging God and an unmerciful Devil to tear my heart out and roast it over flames of sulphur; that my head be split open and my brains be scattered over the earth; that my body be ripped open and my bowels be torn open and fed to the carrion birds; that each of my limbs be broken with stones and then cut off by inches that they may be food for the foulest of birds of the air; and, lastly, that my soul be given into torment; that my body may be submerged in molten metal and stifled in the flames of Hell; and that this punishment may be meted out to me through all eternity.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that is not all in this subversive movement. These people have a military organization under the direction of a leader who is referred to as the commander in chief. They require members of this subversive military organization to take upon themselves a separate oath. According to the public press of May 29, 1936, this military oath of allegiance reads in part as follows:

> I solemnly swear I will obey the orders of Harold Dugas, my commander in chief, and the orders of officers appointed by him.

Mr. Speaker, during the investigation conducted during the Seventy-third Congress by the special committee on un-American activities, a very great deal of evidence was submitted in such form that the committee could not possibly study all of the interlocking of these various movements under different names. But we did secure enough information to satisfy most of the committee members that almost all of these organizations were operating on the same general principle and were attempting to carry out much the same program.

Therefore, in the resolution I have introduced you will find a few of these organizations specifically named as the objects of the proposed investigation.

For the purpose of information to the Members of the House, I will, under the leave granted to revise and extend my remarks, insert at this point of my remarks the text of House Resolution No. 527, which reads as follows:

Resolution

Resolved, That the Speaker of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint a special committee, to be composed of seven members, for the purpose of conducting an investigation of (1) the extent, character, objects, and sources of revenue of the Black Legion, the Black Shirts, the Christian Party, the A. B. C. Legion, of New York City, the Robert Edward Edmondson Organization, of New York City, and similar organizations which spread un-American propaganda and are engaged in un-American activities in the United States; (2) the extent and methods of diffusion within the United States and the sources of any un-American subversive propaganda that is instigated either from foreign countries or from domestic sources and which attacks the principle of the form of government guaranteed in our Constitution; (3) the source of revenue and method of distribution thereof used within the United States for the propagation of religious, racial, or subversive political prejudices contrary to the American principles; (4) and all other questions in relation thereto that would assist Congress in any necessary remedial legislation, including any necessity for amendments to the postal laws that may be required to bar the publications of these subversive organizations from the United States mails.

Such special committee, when organized, is hereby authorized to have custody for its use all the records, documents, files, and other papers which were in the possession of the special committee of the House of Representatives, which was appointed and operated pursuant to H. Res. 198, H. Res. 199, and H. Res. 424, of the Seventy-third Congress, second session.

Such special committee is authorized to request the fullest cooperation in the conduct of this investigation from the Department of Justice, the Post Office Department, and such other departments of the Government that the committee may deem necessary, including access to all files from such departments pertinent to the investigation, and use of such employees and facilities of such departments as may be advantageous to the conduct of such investigation.

That said special committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is hereby authorized to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places within the United States, whether or not the House is sitting, has recessed, or has adjourned, to hold such hearings, to require the attendance of such witnesses, and the production of such books, papers, and documents, by subpena or otherwise, and to take such testimony as it may deem necessary.

Subpenas shall be issued under the signature of the Speaker of the House of Representatives at the request of the chairman and shall be served by the Sergeant at Arms of the House or any person designated by him. The chairman of the committee or any member thereof may administer oaths or affirmations to witnesses.

Every person who, having been summoned as a witness by authority of said committee, or any subcommittee thereof, willfully makes default, or who, having appeared, refuses to answer any question pertinent to the investigation heretofore authorized, or who, having been required to produce books, papers, and documents pertinent to the investigation heretofore authorized, fails or refuses to produce such required books, papers, and documents, shall be held to the penalties provided by section 102 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have concluded my remarks. I trust I have been able to convince the Members of the House that this is a very serious situation concerning the activities of the Black Legion, and I also trust my remarks will contribute to the adoption of this resolution by an overwhelming vote on the floor of this House when the Rules Committee reports the resolution to the House. I thank you.

Mr. MAPES. Perhaps the gentleman from Massachusetts saw the telegram to which I refer.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York may proceed for 5 additional minutes.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York may proceed for 2 additional minutes.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MURDOCK). Under the special order of the House, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, my object in taking the floor at this time is to discuss briefly the power policies of this administration, to answer some of the criticisms that have been advanced, and to refute some of the false and misleading statements that have been made with reference to the Tennessee Valley Authority.

Let me repeat what I have said in this House before, that, measured in real benefits to the American people, the Tennessee Valley Authority is one of the greatest organizations ever connected with this or any other Government. In bringing cheap electricity to the people in that area and supplying a yardstick as a measurement for reasonable light and power rates, thereby forcing a reduction of rates to the ultimate consumers in every State in the Union, the T. V. A. is rendering a service to humanity that simply cannot be overestimated.

ELECTRICITY LIFEBLOOD

Electricity is the lifeblood of an advancing civilization. The lower the rates the more freely it flows, and the more freely it flows the greater are its benefits to mankind.

It is no longer to be regarded as a luxury, reserved for the fortunate few, but it has become a necessity and should be placed within the reach of all, and supplied to them at rates the people can afford to pay.

The great wealth of hydroelectric power in our navigable streams that throughout untold centuries has been running wasted to the sea is more valuable than all the gold fields, oil wells, and diamond mines the world has ever known.

It lights the home, it cooks the meals, it heats the house, pumps the water, runs the radio, washes the clothes, scrubs the floor, heats the iron, grinds the feed, and does a thousand other things to render the home cheerful and attractive and to lift from the shoulders of the housewife the endless burdens of drudgery she has borne since the beginning of time, to say nothing of its value in turning the wheels of industry, operating our transportation system, aiding commerce, and contributing to the advancement and application of science.

It is the greatest home builder of all time. It adds brilliance and luxury to the palaces of the rich and brings cheer and comfort to the cabins of the poor. It is the rightful heritage of all mankind and should be made available to and used for the benefit of all.

The hydroelectric power in our navigable streams and their tributaries is public property, national wealth, and should be used for the benefit of all the American people now living as well as the ones that are yet to come.

The Tennessee Valley Authority, in addition to promoting navigation and controlling floods, is generating electricity to be supplied to the people at rates they can afford to pay—rates based upon the cost of production and distribution.

For more than 2 years now, the T. V. A. has been selling power at wholesale to certain municipalities and cooperative associations in the district which I have the honor to represent in northeastern Mississippi, as well as in northern Alabama and southern Tennessee, while they in turn have been selling at retail to the ultimate consumers at what is called the standard T. V. A. rates. Those rates have been so reasonable and the results so gratifying that they have created a Nation-wide demand for similar developments.

The people throughout the entire country have become aroused and the demand for cheap light and power rates is now sweeping the country with such irresistible force that to argue against it is as futile and as foolish as it would be to stand upon the seashore and argue against the incoming tide.

ANSWER TO PROPAGANDIST

Yet a few paid power propagandists and high-salaried officials of useless holding companies continue their campaign of criticism, vilification, misrepresentation, and abuse, with just about as much effect as if they were attempting to control the change of the seasons or stay the march of time.

Here is a fair sample of their futile efforts. In what he calls his annual report to the stockholders, Mr. Wendell L. Wilkie, president of the Commonwealth & Southern, one of the large utility-holding companies, owning and controlling certain operating power companies throughout the country, makes this ridiculous assertion:

Whenever a citizen of Tupelo, Miss., turns on the electric switch, everybody in the United States helps to pay his electric bill.

Of course, that statement is not true. But it is a fair sample of the false and misleading propaganda with which the Power Trust has been flooding the country for the last few years in their efforts to hamper the power program of this administration and to discredit the Tennessee Valley Authority.

Mr. Wilkie singles out Tupelo because that city was the first to secure power from the T. V. A., and has been a leader in the movement to provide reasonable light and power rates to the ultimate consumers. His criticism of Tupelo, if it contained any truth in fact, would also apply to Corinth, Iuka, Booneville, Amory, Fulton, Baldwyn, Pontotoc, New Albany, Nettleton, Belmont, Tishomingo, Guntown, Saltillo, Shannon, Verona, Athens, Ala., Pulaski, Tenn., and all the other cities, towns, and rural communities in Mississippi, Alabama, and Tennessee that are now enjoying the use of cheap electric lights and power from Muscle Shoals. I say cheap, because these rates are cheap compared to what these same people were paying the Commonwealth & Southern for lights and power before the T. V. A. Act was passed, and compared to the exorbitant rates now being charged by private power companies throughout the country.

If I wished to retort in kind, I could truthfully say that whenever a citizen of the United States who is compelled to purchase his electricity from a private power company that is owned or controlled by one of these so-called holding companies, such as the Commonwealth & Southern, turns on the electric switch, he pays an extra amount, averaging two or three times that of his legitimate power bill, as tribute to the Power Trust—that gigantic octopus that sprawls over the United States, reaches its loathsome tentacles into every home, every store, every garage, every filling station, every business house, every church, every schoolhouse, and every factory that uses electric energy, and takes from them an overcharge that averages more than $1,000,000,000 a year. [Applause.]

I will prove this statement before I close. I will cite the record and make it so clear that any schoolboy with reasonable intelligence can figure it out for himself. I will make it so plain that the Republican "brain trust" cannot misunderstand it—even with the aid of a Power Trust propagandist, such as Mr. "Windy" Wilkie, of the Commonwealth & Southern.

This program is saving for the people of this country the hydroelectric power of the Nation. It has given us a yardstick for the measurement of light and power rates to show what electricity is really worth, brought about a reduction to the present consumers of hundreds of millions of dollars a year, and for the first time in history made it possible for the people in the rural districts, the farmers of the Nation, to enjoy the use of electric energy at rates they can afford to pay.

But Mr. Wilkie, in the same report, says that—

> Our operating companies in that area could lower their rates at least 25 percent below the Tennessee Valley Authority rates if they were given the same gifts from the Federal Treasury as are given to the Tennessee Valley Authority.

Let us turn to the record and see what the facts are.

Let me again remind the House that in 1929, at the peak of high prices, the heyday of Hoover prosperity, the then president of the Commonwealth & Southern was drawing a salary of $43,790 a year. The panic came on, prices went down, hungry men, women, and children crowded the streets of our towns and cities, while farmers' homes were swept away for debts, or sold to pay their taxes—yet by 1932, the very pit of the depression, in probably the darkest hours this Nation has ever seen, when the values of the stocks of the Commonwealth & Southern, as well as the stocks in all the operating companies they own or control, had sunk to the vanishing point, the salary of the president of the Commonwealth & Southern had been raised from $43,790 a year in 1929 to $130,140 a year in 1932.

The people I represent were helping to pay this graft, which a candidate for President of the United States at that time branded as "theft within the law."

This same Commonwealth & Southern, through its operating companies, was buying power from the Government at Muscle Shoals at that time for 2 mills a kilowatt-hour and selling it to domestic consumers within a few hundred yards of the dam at 10 cents a kilowatt-hour—a profit of 4,800 percent.

Why did not the Commonwealth & Southern sell it to the ultimate consumers then 25 percent below what those consumers are paying for it now, when the Commonwealth & Southern itself was buying it 65 percent below what these municipalities and cooperatives are paying for it now? Instead of selling it 25 percent lower, they were actually selling it to the consumers at an average of from 300 to 800 percent higher, as I shall show in a moment.

As I said a moment ago, the T. V. A. does not sell power at retail, but sells it wholesale to these municipalities and cooperative associations; they in turn retail it to the ultimate consumers.

The T. V. A. does not sell power at retail, but sells it wholesale to these municipalities and cooperative associations; they in turn retail it to the ultimate consumers.

The city of Tupelo, and all the other municipalities and cooperatives that use T. V. A. power, buy it wholesale for about 6 mills a kilowatt-hour and retail it at what they call the standard T. V. A. rates, which I shall give you in just a moment.

If this Commonwealth & Southern was paying the Government a profit, as the Army Engineers' report shows it was, when buying this power at 2 mills a kilowatt-hour, then surely these municipalities and rural cooperatives are paying a profit for it when they buy it at 6 mills a kilowatt-hour.

ACTUAL COST OF ELECTRIC POWER

As I said, the Army Engineers, in charge of Muscle Shoals at the time this power was being sold to these power companies at 2 mills a kilowatt-hour, showed that it was being sold at a profit, and in their report to Congress on March 24, 1930, said:

> The sales prices for Wilson Dam power necessary to obtain in order to pay 4 percent on the investment in plant and transmission lines, and to cover the cost of operation and maintenance (indefinitely) of these are based upon the known cost of the hydro plant to date, a careful estimate of additional installation at costs of the present installation, and upon estimates of the cost of transmission lines, and of operation, depreciation, etc. It is seen, therefore, that these prices are based largely upon known costs, and that an error in the items estimated would affect the sales prices but little. The hydro prices reduced to mills per kilowatt-hour would be as follows:

	Mills per kilowatt-hour
At the switchboard	1.352
Transmitted 100 miles	1.993
Transmitted 200 miles	2.310
Transmitted 250 miles	2.467
Transmitted 300 miles	2.625
Transmitted 350 miles	2.775

In other words, this power can be generated and transmitted 100 miles, which is about the distance of Tupelo from Muscle Shoals, for 1.993 mills, or approximately 2 mills, a kilowatt-hour.

But the city of Tupelo is paying three times that price for it, or about 6 mills a kilowatt-hour, selling it to the ultimate consumers at the standard T. V. A. rates, which I will quote in just a moment, paying all expenses, including taxes, and making a profit of $30,000 a year.

The New York Power Authority made a thorough investigation of the cost of generation and transmission of hydroelectric power on the St. Lawrence River, and in their report of November 10, 1934, they make the following statement:

> The cost of transmitting this power can be estimated with confidence. If used as a base load in a State-wide system at least 80 percent of its full-time output can be absorbed. On this basis it could be generated and transmitted to Utica, a distance of 135 miles from the plant, at a cost of about 2¼ mills. It could be delivered at the end of a 300-mile transmission line for less than 3¼ mills per kilowatt-hour.

If the Army Engineers, after careful investigation, reach the conclusion that this power can be generated and transmitted 350 miles and sold at 2.775 mills a kilowatt-hour and the engineers of the New York Power Authority find that power can be generated on the St. Lawrence River and transmitted 300 miles and sold for 3.25 mills a kilowatt-hour, then surely the T. V. A. is not losing money on power generated at Muscle Shoals, transmitted 100 miles, and sold for 6 mills per kilowatt-hour.

Besides, let me remind you that the public power plant at Tacoma, Wash., generates and sells power at retail to the ultimate consumers at a cost of less than 5½ mills a kilowatt-hour, and that the Ontario power system generates, transmits, distributes, and sells power retail to the ultimate consumers throughout the Province of Ontario at an average of a little less than 5 mills a kilowatt-hour.

I could cite other examples, but these are sufficient. They completely refute the charge of Mr. "Windy" Wilkie, the spokesman of the Power Trust in this instance, to the effect that the T. V. A. is selling this power below the cost of production.

But here is another example that is a complete answer to these charges. The city of West Point, Miss., 50 miles south of Tupelo, purchases its power wholesale from the Commonwealth & Southern, of which Mr. Wilkie is president. It buys it at about the same rate that Tupelo is paying the T. V. A. For instance, in December 1935, West Point purchased 130,300 kilowatt-hours of electric energy from the Commonwealth & Southern through the Mississippi Power Co., for which it paid $908.77. Under the T. V. A. wholesale rates, it would have cost $915.55—or $6.78 more than West Point actually paid the Commonwealth & Southern for it. In March 1936, the city of West Point purchased from the Commonwealth & Southern, through the Mississippi Power Co., 130,200 kilowatt-hours of electricity, for which it paid $915.07. Under the T. V. A. wholesale rates, it would have cost $915.70, or 63 cents more than the city of West Point actually paid for it.

West Point could reduce her retail light and power rates now to the Tupelo rates and make money through the sale of power. She would double the consumption of electric energy in a short time, increase the use of electrical appliances, and enable the people of West Point to enjoy the same liberal use of electric energy and electrical appliances now enjoyed by the people of Tupelo, Amory, Corinth, Okolona, and other municipalities and rural communities throughout the T. V. A. area.

It is true that their present contract with the power company will soon expire, but the T. V. A. is ready to offer West Point the same contract that she has with Tupelo at any time.

COMPARISON OF RATES

Here are the residential rates in effect in the Muscle Shoals area at the time of the creation of the T. V. A., showing what the Commonwealth & Southern was charging for power which it was buying at 2 mills a kilowatt-hour. It was selling it to the ultimate consumers at the following rates:

Ten cents per kilowatt-hour for the first 30 kilowatt-hours per month.
Eight cents per kilowatt-hour for the next 170 kilowatt-hours per month.
Seven cents per kilowatt-hour for the next 300 kilowatt-hours per month.
Six cents per kilowatt-hour for the next 350 kilowatt-hours per month.
Five cents per kilowatt-hour for the excess over 350 kilowatt-hours per month.

Here are the T. V. A. residential rates for this same power—the retail rates. This is what it now costs the ultimate consumers at the present time:

Three cents per kilowatt-hour for the first 30 kilowatt-hours per month.
Two cents per kilowatt-hour for the next 150 kilowatt-hours per month.
One cent per kilowatt-hour for the next 200 kilowatt-hours per month.
Four mills per kilowatt-hour for the excess over 400 kilowatt-hours per month.

I hope every consumer of electricity who reads this record will get his canceled light and power bill and compare these rates with the rates he now pays.

The following table will show the comparative cost to the domestic consumers under the old Commonwealth & Southern rates and the T. V. A. rates up to 1,000 kilowatt-hours per month:

	Former power company rates	Tennessee Valley Authority rates
First 30 kilowatt-hours	$3.00	$0.90
Next 170 kilowatt-hours	13.60	3.60
Next 300 kilowatt-hours	21.00	2.40
Next 350 kilowatt-hours	21.00	1.40
Next 150 kilowatt-hours	7.50	.60
1,000 kilowatt-hours	66.10	8.90

In other words, a householder under the T. V. A. rates pays $8.90 for 1,000 kilowatt-hours a month, which formerly cost him $66.10 under the power company rates in effect in the Muscle Shoals area at the time the T. V. A. was created.

The Commonwealth & Southern wants to destroy the T. V. A. so that it can impose those outrageous rates again.

In Tacoma, Wash., this 1,000 kilowatt-hours a month would cost $8.62. In Ottawa, Ontario, Canada, it would cost $6.17. So it will be seen that the T. V. A. rates are not too low. They are really too high, and will be reduced as time goes on.

In order that the commercial consumers—the merchants, hotel operators, garage and filling-station proprietors, and so forth—may see what overcharges they are paying, I insert at this point a table showing the T. V. A. commercial retail rates now in effect throughout the T. V. A. area.

Available to commercial customers taking service from the municipality's secondary system:

First 250 kilowatt-hours per month at 8 cents per kilowatt-hour.
Next 750 kilowatt-hours per month at 2 cents per kilowatt-hour.
Next 1,000 kilowatt-hours per month at 1 cent per kilowatt-hour.
Excess over 2,000 kilowatt-hours per month at 0.8 cent per kilowatt-hour per month.

Compare the rates your merchants are now paying with these rates and see what the overcharges amount to.

Since I am going to discuss the rates at Tacoma, Wash., and also the Ontario rates, I will give their residential rates now, up to 1,000 kilowatt-hours a month, and compare them with the T. V. A. rates and with the old Commonwealth & Southern rates in effect in that area at the time the T. V. A. was created.

Table of comparative monthly rates

	Monthly consumption
	25 kilowatt-hours	40 kilowatt-hours	60 kilowatt-hours	100 kilowatt-hours	300 kilowatt-hours	500 kilowatt-hours	1,000 kilowatt-hours
Ontario rates	$0.75	$1.03	$1.54	$1.74	$3.02	$3.92	$6.17
Tacoma rates	1.13	1.52	1.72	2.12	4.12	6.12	8.62
Tennessee Valley Authority rates	.75	1.20	1.70	2.50	5.50	6.90	8.90
Old Commonwealth & Southern rates	2.50	3.80	5.40	8.60	23.00	37.60	66.10

I should like to repeat those figures, if time permitted, especially the last line, showing the old Commonwealth & Southern rates. You will see that, on the whole, the Tacoma rates are lower than the T. V. A. rates, and that the Ontario rates are far below the T. V. A. rates, in every single bracket. These Commonwealth & Southern rates show what the people were paying prior to the creation of the T. V. A., what they would still be paying if it were not for the T. V. A., and what they would be forced to pay again if the Power Trust should succeed in destroying the T. V. A. But that will never happen; the T. V. A. is here to stay. In the words of the French troops at Verdun, "They shall not pass."

RESULT OF LOW RATES

As a result of these cheap rates the people of Ontario are using electricity for all purposes, even to heating their homes. Many of their homes have no chimneys or fireplaces, but depend entirely upon electric heat, which they find much cheaper than either wood or coal. The people of Ontario now refer to electricity as "white coal."

During the year 1935, the city of Tupelo purchased its power from the T. V. A. at approximately the same rates the Commonwealth & Southern is selling it at wholesale to the city of West Point, and sold it at the T. V. A. standard rates above set out. It set aside for taxes $8,240.13, paid all its depreciation on tangible plant equipment, all interest and sinking funds on outstanding indebtedness against its plant and distribution system, and made a net profit of $30,132.38; and at the same time the people of Tupelo saved $150,000 compared with what they would have paid under the old Commonwealth & Southern rates.

At the time the T. V. A. contract went into effect, on February 7, 1934, the average domestic consumption of electricity in the city of Tupelo was 42 kilowatt-hours a month; today it is 157 kilowatt-hours—almost four times what it was under the old rates and more than four times the present average in New York City, where they use only 39 kilowatt-hours a month. At that time domestic consumers of Tupelo were using 195 electric refrigerators and 15 ranges; today they are using 953 refrigerators and 256 ranges. Seventy-two percent of the electric consumers in Tupelo have electric refrigerators, 61 percent of the consumers in Alcorn County, Miss., 59 percent of the consumers in Amory; 52 percent of all the domestic consumers in the T. V. A. area, including the rural areas, have electric refrigerators and 22 percent have electric ranges, to say nothing of the increase in the electrical appliances in the rural districts, such as washing machines, water pumps, and so forth.

The people in the counties of Alcorn, Prentiss, Tishomingo, Lee, Itawamba, and in the northern part of Monroe are saving more than $500,000 a year as compared with what they would have paid under the old Commonwealth & Southern retail rates. Rural power lines are now being built throughout the area, electrifying thousands of farm homes that heretofore never had received any electricity and probably never would have received any at all if it had not been for the T. V. A.

As I said, the people of the city of Tupelo alone are saving $150,000 a year on their light and power bills compared with what they would have paid under the old Commonwealth & Southern rates in effect at the time the T. V. A. was created; and the people in Lee and Itawamba Counties, outside of the city of Tupelo, are saving an additional $100,000 or $125,000 a year—making more than a quarter of a million dollars saved by the people of the two counties every year that rolls round.

The people in Tupelo are already beginning to heat their homes with electricity. It is proving to be the most desirable heat to be had—no dust, no soot, no grease, no moisture, and no janitor.

I have before me the light and power bill of a man who uses electric lights, radio, refrigerator, iron, range, grill, fans, vacuum cleaner, water heater, and who also heats his entire house electrically. During the month of January 1936 he used 2,706 kilowatt-hours of electric energy and his entire bill for the month amounted to $15.72.

Let me call your attention to the fact that Tupelo is not in a tropical climate, as some people seem to think. The temperature at that place went as low as 8° below zero last winter.

RURAL ELECTRIFICATION

But in my opinion, the greatest part of this program is its rural-electrification feature, taking cheap lights and power to the farmers of the country. The following is a schedule of rates those farmers pay, even in the remotest rural sections:

First 50 kilowatt-hours per month 4 cents per kilowatt-hour.
Next 50 kilowatt-hours per month 3 cents per kilowatt-hour.
Next 100 kilowatt-hours per month 2 cents per kilowatt-hour.
Next 200 kilowatt-hours per month 1 cent per kilowatt-hour.
Next 1,000 kilowatt-hours per month 4 mills per kilowatt-hour.

It will be noted that for the first 50 kilowatt-hours per month, these farmers pay 4 cents a kilowatt-hour instead of 3 cents, and for the next 50 kilowatt-hours they pay 3 cents instead of 2 cents a kilowatt-hour. The extra 1 cent per kilowatt-hour goes to amortize their lines and distribution systems. This is all these people will ever have to pay. In the course of a few years their lines will be paid out and then this extra 1 cent will be taken off.

Nothing that has ever come to the farmers of this country has brought so much light and hope or relieved so much drudgery as cheap electric energy. I have before me large numbers of answers to questionnaires which I sent to these farmers, showing the amount of electricity they used per month, the amount paid for it, and the appliances employed.

I find here one who uses lights, radio, electric iron, fans, washing machine, water pump, electric range. One month he used 83 kilowatt-hours of electricity energy, which cost him $2.99.

Here is another who uses lights, radio, iron, fans, and washing machine. He used 50 kilowatt-hours of electricity one month, which cost him exactly $2.

Here is one who uses lights in his home and in his barn, radio, refrigerator, iron, fans, water pump, and electric range. He used 116 kilowatt-hours of electricity one month, which cost him $3.72.

Here is one who uses lights, radio, refrigerator, iron, heater, range, chicken brooder, and washing machine. He used 124 kilowatt-hours a month, which cost him $3.19.

This cheap electricity is literally bringing to these farmers, to their wives and children, a new civilization. Something of which they had scarcely dreamed a few years ago.

We have electric power associations organized in every county in the district, and it is my purpose to keep up the drive until we electrify every farm home in the district at T. V. A. rates. Nor do I propose to stop there, but I expect to continue this drive as long as I live, whether in public or in private life, or until we electrify every farm home in America at rates the farmers can afford to pay.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield.

Mr. HOUSTON. Is it not a fact that the Power Trust is charging rates that are prohibitive in the rural sections over and above the city rates?

Mr. RANKIN. Oh, yes; their rural rates are so high as to be prohibitive.

A BILLION-DOLLAR OVERCHARGE

Some time ago I stated on this floor that the people of this country were being overcharged $1,000,000,000 a year for electric lights and power. That statement has never been seriously challenged. I now find that my figures were too conservative, and that they are overcharged approximately $1,500,000,000 a year—or enough to pay the national debt in 20 years.

I am going to break this overcharge down by States and show the amount the people of each State have to pay. I want each of you to observe the overcharges for your own State, and then tell me how any honest representative of the American people can vote against the power policies of this administration that would cure this evil and bring justice to these helpless consumers of electric energy.

Now, let us make some comparisons and see just how much the American people are being overcharged annually for electric energy. Let us first compare the amount the people in the United States are paying for electricity with what the people in the Province of Ontario, Canada, pay.

In 1934 the Ontario Power Commission generated and sold 6,420,000,000 kilowatt-hours of electric energy for $31,970,000 delivered to the ultimate consumers, which averaged a little less than 5 mills per kilowatt-hour. In other words, the Ontario Power Commission delivered power to the ultimate consumers, retail, for less than the city of Tupelo is paying the T. V. A. wholesale. Remember, too, that this Ontario power was invariably transmitted hundreds of miles, and sometimes into the remotest rural precincts.

The power propagandists in this country have attempted in every conceivable way to discredit the Ontario Power Commission and to mislead the American people as to what it is doing for the people of Ontario. It is a nonprofit cooperative organization, representing the municipalities, rural power districts, and so forth, of the Province of Ontario. Its object is to generate and supply power to the people of Ontario at cost.

It was fostered by Sir Adam Beck, one of the great men of Canada, and started operations about 1910. Mr. Beck remained at the head of the commission until his death in 1926.

The annual report of the Ontario Power Commission for 1934 shows the capital invested in the entire system, including the municipal and rural distribution system, amounted to $398,224,762.11, while the total reserves of the commission and the municipal electric utilities, for sinking funds, renewals, contingencies, insurance, and so forth, amounted to $138,392,201.38.

The capital investment of the Ontario Hydro-Electric Power Commission proper at the present time is $295,784,660.81, against which they have a reserve for sinking funds alone amounting to $35,482,281.67, leaving a balance of $260,312,379.14.

The municipal electric utilities, which are also a part of this system, have total liabilities at the present time amounting to $43,210,000, against which there are liquid assets, such as bank and cash balances, securities and investments, accounts payable, inventories, sinking funds on local debentures, and other assets, amounting to $20,550,000, leaving the actual liabilities for these municipal electric utilities amounting to $22,660,000. This, added to the actual liabilities of the Ontario Hydro-Electric Power Commission, make the liabilities of the entire system, including the municipal utilities, amount to $282,972,379.14.

In the course of 25 years this organization has built one of the greatest power systems on earth, which it is gradually paying out, and at the same time affording to the people of Ontario the cheapest light and power rates on the Western Hemisphere. At the time this commission was organized the domestic consumers of Canada were paying from 9 cents to 20 cents per kilowatt-hour for electric energy. The number of domestic consumers at that time was very small, and the average consumption ranged from 10 to 30 kilowatt-hours per month. Today they enjoy the lowest rates and the highest per-capita consumption of electricity to be found on this continent.

In 1935, the record shows that the people of the United States consumed 77,555,000,000 kilowatt-hours of electric energy, for all purposes, for which they paid $1,921,000,000. In 1934, the people of Ontario consumed 6,420,000,000 kilowatt-hours of electricty, for all purposes, for which they paid $31,790,000. In other words, the people of the United States used 12 times as much electric energy in 1 year as was used in the Province of Ontario in 1 year, and paid 60 times as much for it—or an average of 5 times the rates paid by the people of Ontario.

If the people of Ontario had consumed the same amount of electricity as did the people of the United States, it would have cost them 12 times $31,790,000, or $381,480,000. Take $381,480,000, the amount they would have paid under the Ontario rates, from $1,921,000,000, the amount they actually did pay, and you will see that the people of the United States were overcharged $1,539,520,000 for electric lights and power a year, compared with the Ontario rates—more than enough to pay off the national debt in 20 years, including all the obligations incurred for relief and rehabilitation since March 4, 1933.

How on earth can the American people continue to stagger under such burdens?

But the power companies tell you that the Ontario Power Commission pays no taxes. A thorough investigation made in the State of Washington, where the power companies have boasted most about the taxes they pay, showed that the taxes paid by the power interests in that State, for all purposes—Federal, State, county, and municipal—amounted in the aggregate to not more than 1 mill per kilowatt-hour of the power actually sold. This would make all the taxes paid by the power interests in the United States amount to not more than $77,555,000 a year. Take that amount from this overcharge of $1,539,000,000 a year and it will still leave an overcharge of $1,461,000,000 a year, on the basis of the present consumption.

But owing to their low rates, the people of Ontario consume more than three times as much electricity per capita as do the people in the United States. If we consumed as much electricity per capita, for all purposes, in this country as do the people of Ontario, and paid the rates now charged in the United States, this overcharge would amount to $4,383,000,000 in 1 year, even after allowing for taxes. That would pay the national debt in less than 10 years.

But the power companies have made the claim that their taxes, for all purposes, amounted to 10 percent of the gross sales. Of course, that is an exaggeration. But suppose they did; that would make their taxes in the whole United States amount to $192,100,000 for the year, which, taken from this $1,539,520,000, would still leave the American people paying an overcharge of $1,347,420,000 a year when compared with the Ontario rates. If the people in this country consumed as much electricity per capita as do the people in Ontario, and paid the rates they are now paying in the United States, this overcharge, after deducting 10 percent for taxes, would amount to $4,042,000,000 a year, which would be sufficient to pay off the national debt in less than 10 years, including all obligations for relief and rehabilitation since 1933.

These figures cannot be denied; they are based upon the record.

Now, let us compare these rates with the rates in Tacoma, Wash. Tacoma has a public plant, a cooperative system that is entirely separate and distinct from the city government. Their entire plant and distribution system is valued at $23,038,147, and the indebtedness against it has been paid down to $7,343,000. At the rate they are going the plant will soon be paid out, and then further reductions in rates will be possible.

Although Tacoma is a city of only 106,000 people, they have the lowest electric light and power rates in the United States. In 1934 they generated and sold 244,650,127 kilowatt-hours of electric energy, for all purposes, which they sold for $2,055,195. After paying all operating expenses, including interest and sinking fund, and after paying taxes to the amount of $145,575, they had a net profit of $744,531. Since these consumers own the system, this net profit went back to them in payment of their indebtedness on the plant. Take this net profit from the $2,055,195, the amount of the gross sales, and it will leave $1,310,664 as the amount this electricity actually cost the ultimate consumers, retail, after paying all expenses, interest on the investment, sinking funds, and taxes.

Therefore, this electricity cost the ultimate consumers in Tacoma on an average of a little less than 5½ mills a kilowatt-hour for all purposes, or less than we are paying the T. V. A. for power, wholesale, in the Tennessee Valley area.

The 77,555,000,000 kilowatt-hours of electricity for which the American people paid $1,921,000,000 in 1935 would have cost $414,000,000 under the Tacoma rates, or $1,507,000,000 less than the people of this country actually paid for it.

But suppose the American people used as much electricity per capita as do the people in Tacoma; then the annual consumption in the United States would be 293,707,000,000 kilowatt-hours. The cost to the ultimate consumers of that amount of electricity, under the Tacoma rates, would be $1,573,200,000. If they used that amount and paid the rates now paid throughout the United States the cost to the ultimate consumers would be $7,299,800,000, or $5,726,600,000 more than if they paid the Tacoma rates. In other words, if the people of this country used as much electricity per capita as do the people of Tacoma and paid the rates they are now paying, the overcharge, compared with the Tacoma rates, would amount to $5,726,600,000 a year.

Yet the public plant at Tacoma pays taxes, just the same as if it were a private power company, or a private individual, is rapidly paying off its indebtedness and will soon be making additional reductions.

While we are trying to make it possible for the American people to enjoy a more liberal use of electricity, in order that they may be able to use more of those electrical appliances necessary for the comforts and conveniences of the home, the private power companies are discouraging a liberal use of electricity by imposing upon the consumers the very highest rates the traffic will bear.

COMPARISON OF INVESTMENTS

Now, let us compare the investments. According to the 1934 statistical bulletin of the Edison Electric Institute, the investment of private power companies in the United States amounted to $12,124,817,425; while the municipal companies have invested $539,569,527, making a total of $12,664,376,952. As pointed out before, they produce and sell only 77,555,000,000 kilowatt-hours of electric energy a year, or 12 times the amount produced and sold in Ontario, where they have investments amounting to $398,224,000. It would take 12 such power systems as they have in Ontario, operating as they do, to produce the same amount of power sold in the United States. That would mean an investment of 12 times $398,224,000, or $4,778,688,000. That is what the investment would amount to if the Ontario system were expanded on the present basis to where it would produce the same amount of power now produced and sold in the United States, where the investment is alleged to be $12,664,376,000, or $7,885,688,000 more than would be necessary under the Canadian system.

The Power Trust has poured something like $7,000,000,000 or more of water into its capital structure, floated watered stocks and sold them out to unsuspecting, innocent purchasers in every State in the Union, and your constituents in every State are now being compelled to pay light and power rates based upon these fictitious and dishonest valuations. Was there ever a more consummate example of "thievery within the law"?

What does this $7,000,000,000 represent?

It represents mostly paper, printers' ink, and Power Trust rascality.

But the power companies say they have many elements of expense the Tennessee Valley Authority does not have to meet. That is true; here are some of the items of cost to the Power Trust that the T. V. A. does not have to meet:

First. Dividends on watered stocks—such as the $7,000,000,000 to which I have just referred.

Second. Tributes to useless holding companies such as the Commonwealth & Southern.

Third. Enormous salaries which grasping officials and directors pay themselves, ranging all the way from $25,000 to $250,000 a year.

Fourth. Bonuses and other rake-offs, sometimes running into the millions.

Fifth. Money spent to employ high-priced lawyers for their political influence—invariably relatives or business partners of public officials, such as members of the legislature, governors, Congressmen, and Senators.

Sixth. Expenses of propaganda such as the power interests have been spending by the millions, on telegrams, letters, and so forth, trying to browbeat Congress into defeating the administration's bill to put an end to racketeering through useless holding companies.

Seventh. Then there is money spent to buy up newspapers and magazines. They used to buy advertisements in newspapers. Then they began to buy headlines, news columns, and editorials. Now they just buy the papers or a controlling interest in them and hire their own editors and reporters. Sometimes they just buy the editor.

Eighth. Then there are their expensive lobbyists around Congress and the various State legislatures, to say nothing of the campaign expenses they have to put up for their favorite candidates for office.

Ninth. Campaign contributions which they are now pouring out, in an indirect and insidious effort to defeat this administration or destroy its power policies, so that they may continue to wring the economic lifeblood from the American people with these enormous overcharges, or to plunder the unsuspecting investors through the sale of worthless watered stocks.

The T. V. A. does not have to meet all these expenses, therefore it can sell power wholesale to these municipalities and cooperative associations at something like what it is worth.

These municipalities and cooperative associations do not have these expenses to meet, and therefore they can sell power retail to the ultimate consumers at something like what it is worth.

Neither the Tacoma Power Commission nor the Ontario Power Commission have any of these enormous burdens to meet, therefore they can afford to sell power to the ultimate consumers at something like what it is worth.

A little more than a year ago I had compiled and published the amount of overcharges for electricity in this country for 1934, and broke it down by States. I am going to reproduce those figures here. While they show that the American people, in every State in the Union, are carrying a staggering burden in these overcharges, yet if you will compare them with the overcharges for 1935, which I have just quoted, you will find that these 1934 figures are extremely conservative. Any 10-year-old school boy or girl can figure this proposition out for themselves. Applying the rates and overcharges for 1935 to the amount of electricity consumed in each State in 1934, and assuming that they use the same amount of electricity in each State in 1935 as they used in 1934, the overcharges for the year 1935 were far greater than these figures show they were in 1934.

If you will divide the overcharges in your State by the number of congressional districts, then you will see what portion of this burden is borne by the people you are sent here to represent.

You cannot escape responsibility. The people of your State have a right to expect you to help protect them. The responsibility for this condition, if it is permitted to continue, will rest upon the Congress of the United States.

OVERCHARGES BY STATES

Here are the overcharges by States. Look over them carefully and you will see what part of this billion-dollar overcharge the people of your State have to pay.

MAINE

In 1934 the people of the State of Maine consumed 575,506,000 kilowatt-hours of electricity, for which they paid $10,761,000.

Under the T. V. A. rates, the cost would have been $5,675,000, a saving of $5,086,000.

Under the Tacoma rates, the cost would have been $5,432,000, a saving of $5,329,000.

Under the Ontario rates, the cost would have been $4,431,000, a saving of $6,330,000.

NEW HAMPSHIRE

In 1934 the people of the State of New Hampshire consumed 183,274,000 kilowatt-hours of electric energy, for which they paid $6,791,000.

Under the T. V. A. rates the cost would have been $3,349,000, a saving of $3,442,000.

Under the Tacoma rates the cost would have been $3,332,000, a saving of $3,459,000.

Under the Ontario rates the cost would have been $2,778,000, a saving of $4,013,000.

VERMONT AND RHODE ISLAND

In 1934 the people in the two small States of Vermont and Rhode Island together used 481,171,873 kilowatt-hours of electric energy, for which they paid $17,300,221.

Under the T. V. A. rates the cost would have been $9,078,221, a saving of $8,222,000 a year.

Under the Tacoma rates the cost would have been $8,933,221, a saving of $8,367,000.

Under the Ontario rates the cost would have been $7,096,867, a saving of $10,203,354.

MASSACHUSETTS

In 1934 the people in the State of Massachusetts consumed 1,993,560,000 kilowatt-hours of electric energy, for which they paid the sum of $75,499,187.

Under the T. V. A. rates the cost would have been $38,315,000, a saving of $37,184,000.

Under the Tacoma rates the cost would have been $37,942,187, a saving of $37,557,000.

Under the Ontario rates, the cost would have been $30,112,730, a saving of $45,386,457.

Under the Tacoma rates, the cost would have been $15,726,086, a saving of $14,397,000.

Under the Ontario rates, the cost would have been $12,352,492, a saving of $17,770,594.

NEW YORK

The people of the State of New York, in 1934, used 8,295,012,000 kilowatt-hours of electric energy, for which they paid the sum of $255,454,676.

Under the T. V. A. rates, the cost would have been $129,755,676, a saving of $125,699,000.

Under the Ontario rates the cost would have been $101,306,539, a saving of $154,148,137.

No wonder the Power Trust is opposing the development of the St. Lawrence project, which would give to the people of the State of New York and adjoining States lights and power at reasonable rates and save them from having to pay this enormous overcharge.

NEW JERSEY

In 1934 the people of the State of New Jersey used 1,839,677,000 kilowatt-hours of electric energy, for which they paid $76,487,173.

Under the T. V. A. rates the cost would have been $37,364,173, a saving of $39,123,000.

Under the Tacoma rates the cost would have been $36,924,173, a saving of $39,563,000.

PENNSYLVANIA

In 1934 the people of the State of Pennsylvania used 5,591,808,000 kilowatt-hours of electric energy, for which they paid the sum of $152,567,854.

Under the Ontario rates the cost would have been $63,313,688, a saving of $89,254,166.

In the State of Pennsylvania, in addition to this enormous overcharge imposed upon the consumers of electric energy, the utilities have been powerful enough in years past to exempt their real-estate holdings from taxation by statute through their control of the State legislature.

Today they own $100,000,000 worth of real estate in Pennsylvania that is escaping all taxes—State, county, and municipal. That burden is passed on to the unprotected people of Pennsylvania, although these utilities own large office buildings, space in which is rented to the public, thus bringing them additional revenues, while they escape the burden of taxation which the small-business man and the home owners pay.

OHIO

In 1934 the people of the State of Ohio used 3,418,060,000 kilowatt-hours of electric energy, for which they paid $98,215,219.

Under the Ontario rates the cost would have been $40,198,328, a saving of $58,016,891.

Ohio is a great wheat-growing State, producing around 35,000,000 bushels a year. Yet if every grain of wheat grown in Ohio in 1934 were sold at the highest price on today's market, it would lack from $15,000,000 to $20,000,000 of bringing enough money to pay this overcharge in the State of Ohio alone.

CONCLUSION

How long will our people continue to stagger under such burdens?

That is a matter for them to decide. They can get relief at any time if they will only demand that every public official represent them and their cause in this great battle for human justice, this battle of the century.

As for my part, I have enlisted for the duration of the conflict. I expect to continue in this fight as long as I live, or until we get electric lights and power supplied to the people in every State in the Union at rates based upon the actual cost of production and distribution, and until we electrify every farm home in America at rates the farmers can afford to pay. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. MASSINGALE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may be allowed to proceed for 10 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the request, and I thank the House for its attention. [Applause.]

CORRECTION OF THE RECORD

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PETTENGILL. Mr. Speaker, as a part of my remarks on the long- and short-haul bill on March 20, 1936, I included a list of two or three hundred organizations which favor the bill. Among them I listed the American Newspaper Publishers' Association.

My authority for including the American Newspaper Publishers' Association among those favoring the bill was the first report of Hon. Joseph B. Eastman, as Federal Coordinator, to the Interstate Commerce Commission, under date of March 10, 1934. I quote from page 134 of the original mimeographed copy of that report as follows:

> The fourth section has from the beginning been a subject of bitter controversy. * * * On the whole, sentiment favors modification or repeal. Of the important responses on the question, filed with the Coordinator, 82 favored some modification, 46 favored repeal, and 47 were against any change.
> Among those favoring repeal are the National Industrial Traffic League, the American Newspaper Publishers Association.

And so forth. I am now advised by the American Newspaper Publishers Association that they were incorrectly reported in the above statement by the Federal Coordinator.

I acted in good faith, relying upon an official Government report, but in view of representations now made to me by the American Newspaper Publishers Association, I am glad to correct the statement in my speech of March 20, 1936.

This correction is not to be construed as placing the American Newspaper Publishers Association in opposition to the bill. As I understand their position, they have taken no action either for or against change or repeal of the fourth section.

OHIO FARMERS MAKE MONEY

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. Speaker, cash receipts from the sale of principal farm products in Ohio rose from $155,468,000 in 1932 to $262,213,000 in 1935, including $15,210,000 in rental and benefit payments.

This is an increase of 69 percent.

For Ohio, cash receipts represent approximately 93 percent of the total farm cash income from production.

Price changes on certain selected commodities, which brought about a considerable share of the increased cash receipts indicated above, are shown in table 1.

TABLE 1.—Average prices received by Ohio farmers for commodities listed on dates specified

Commodity	Aug. 15, 1932	Mar. 15, 1933	Dec. 15, 1935
Wheat (per bushel)	$0.46	$0.45	$0.88

For the United States as a whole, the yearly average price of all groups of farm products increased from 65 percent to 108 percent of the pre-war level during the period 1932–35, an increase of 66 percent.

The low point occurred in March 1933, when prices were only 55 percent of the pre-war level, whereas in December 1935 they averaged 110 percent of that level.

These figures do not include rental and benefit payments.

The gain in exchange value of farm products per unit was somewhat less than the gain in farm prices, since prices farmers pay for commodities used in living and production also advanced about 17 percent during the period.

The exchange value per unit of farm products increased from 61 percent of the pre-war level in 1932 to 86 percent in 1935, a gain of about 41 percent.

FARMERS GET MORE MONEY FOR THEIR FARMS

A new appreciation of farm real estate in Ohio has been one result of increased farm income.

The number of forced farm sales per thousand declined from 34.1 for the year ending March 1933, to 19.5 for the year ending in March 1935.

Voluntary sales and trades of farms, during the same period, increased from 16 per thousand to 19.1 per thousand.

For the first time since 1920 the decline in value of farm real estate per acre halted in the year ending March 1933, when it stood at a low of 59, the State average value from 1912 to 1914 being 100.

From this low of 59 in 1933, the estimated value per acre rose to 66 for the year ending March 1935.

WORKERS GET 18 PERCENT MORE PAY

On January 1, 1933, estimates by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics indicate the demand for farm labor in Ohio was 47 percent below the standard accepted as normal and the supply 31 percent above.

At the same time the average farm wage rate per person, with board, was $16.75.

Three years later, on January 1, 1936, the farm-labor demand was only 20 percent below normal and supply was 9 percent below normal.

The average farm-wage rate per person, with board, stood at $19.75, having advanced 18 percent above their 1933 level.

ROOSEVELT SOIL-CONSERVATION PLAN AIDS FARMERS

The programs of agricultural adjustment, from their launching in the spring of 1933, were concerned with good use of the land of cooperating farmers as well as with adjustment of crop acreage in line with effective demand.

Farm leaders and administration officials recognized from the start that relieving a proportion of farm land from the soil-exhausting burden of major-crop production created an unprecedented opportunity for putting this land to the soil-conserving uses which farm specialists for many years had been advocating.

IMPROVING FARM LIVING CONDITIONS

Adjustment contracts included provisions encouraging beneficial uses for acreage taken out of surplus crops.

The first corn-hog contract, offered farmers in 1934, authorized use of the rented acreage only "for planting additional permanent pasture; for soil-improving and erosion-preventing crops not to be harvested; for resting or fallowing the land; for weed eradication; or for planting farm wood lots."

The cotton contracts for 1934–35 specified use of the rented acres only for "soil-improving crops; erosion-preventing crops; food crops for consumption by the producer on his farm; feed crops for the production of livestock or livestock products for consumption or use by the producer on his farm; or fallowing; or such other uses as may be permitted by the Secretary of Agriculture or his authorized agent."

Food and feed crops for home use were authorized on rented acres in the South, because it was recognized that the standard of farm living in this region, which contains half of the farm population of the country, might thereby be improved.

The tobacco contracts carried similar provisions.

A GAIN OF 800,000 ACRES FOR PASTURE

In the 1934 crop year, the first in which the adjustment programs were in full swing, farmers agreed to shift their production on nearly 36,000,000 acres.

These acres represented 1 out of every 9 of cultivated land in the country.

Farmers in Ohio shifted 590,000 acres from corn, wheat, and tobacco production. Of the 36,000,000 shifted acres in the United States, it has been estimated that about one-third was put in pasture or meadow crops, one-third in acres of emergency forage crops and in crops that supplied food and feed for home use, and the remaining one-third was fallowed to conserve moisture and control weeds, planted to farm wood lots, or left idle. The acreage left idle was very small.

DAIRY CATTLE DISEASE ERADICATION

Milk has been an important source of farm income in Ohio.

For the past few years more than $42,000,000 in cash has been returned to milk producers annually.

In 1934 alone they received a cash income of over $52,000,000. They are therefore interested in steps taken by the Government to safeguard the health of their herds.

Approximately $50,000,000 of Agricultural Adjustment Administration funds have been made available for cattle disease eradication in the United States, primarily bovine tuberculosis, Bang's disease, and mastitis.

This work is being done in cooperation with the Bureau of Animal Industry.

As of December 31, 1935, some 943,916 cattle in Ohio had been given the tuberculin test, and about 297,837 cattle in Ohio had been given the agglutination test for Bang's disease.

Of the $178,000 allocated for the eradication of bovine tuberculosis in this State, $177,575.61 had been expended in operating expenses and indemnities at the close of 1935.

Of the $1,700,000 allocated the State for the eradication of Bang's disease, $937,211 had been spent in indemnities and operating expenses through December 1935.

EXTENT OF FARMER PARTICIPATION IN ADJUSTMENT PROGRAMS

From the inauguration of the adjustment programs in 1933 through January 6, 1936, approximately 209,648 adjustment contracts signed by Ohio farmers were accepted by the Agricultural Adjustment Administration.

Of this number of contracts, 110,479 were corn-hog, 69,928 wheat, 23,741 tobacco, and about 5,500 sugar.

Ohio farmers have evidenced their cooperation in A. A. A. programs by their votes in four referenda on these and related measures.

During the first 2 weeks of October 1934 corn-hog producers were asked whether they favored an adjustment program for 1935.

In this referendum Ohio producers numbering 16,753 voted for a program, while 12,704 voted against.

A Nation-wide wheat referendum was conducted on May 25, 1935, in which producers were asked, "Are you in favor of a wheat-production program to follow the present one, which expires with the 1935 crop year?"

In Ohio 20,407 votes were cast, all but 5,719 of which favored such a program.

Last summer producers of flue-cured, burley, fire-cured, dark air-cured, and cigar-leaf tobacco were asked whether they favored a production-adjustment program to follow the one which expired with the crop year 1935.

Burley producers in Ohio favored a program for 1936 by a vote of 3,332 to 510.

Ohio cigar-leaf growers favored a 1936 program by a vote of 2,360 to 218.

The last referendum in this State was that conducted on October 26, 1935, in which corn-hog producers were asked whether they favored a corn-hog program for 1936.

Official returns indicated that 35,116 favored such a program, while 6,237 opposed.

RENTAL AND BENEFIT PAYMENTS IN OHIO

As of December 31, 1935, rental and benefit payments in Ohio aggregated $27,885,711.07.

Of this amount cooperating corn-hog farmers received $20,913,765.10; wheat growers, $4,534,493.41; tobacco producers, $1,790,519.98; and sugar raisers, $646,932.58.

Until January 6, 1936, funds to provide these rental-benefit payments were raised through processing taxes.

As of December 31, 1935, processing-tax collections made in Ohio totaled $30,616,213.03.

Processing taxes were collected through the medium of first processors, or converters of the raw agricultural products—millers, packers, cotton and tobacco manufacturers—wherever these processing establishments were located.

They were paid by consumers throughout the country wherever the processed articles were sold.

FARMERS' MONEY GOES TO TOWN

The increased income of cotton, wheat, and corn-hog farmers did not remain out in the country, where those products were raised.

The farmers' money found its way to town and to the industrial centers of the country, where it put people to work.

The extent to which increased farm income during the past 3 years enabled farmers to increase their purchases of city-made goods and services reflected in several ways.

New automobile registrations in Ohio were approximately as follows: 73,714 in 1932; 112,363 in 1933; 148,932 in 1934; 203,160 in 1935. The increase from 1932 to 1935 was 176 percent.

According to Automobile Facts and Figures, a publication of the Automobile Manufacturers' Association, the 1934 retail automobile-sales gain in Ohio was greatest in small towns and on farms. From 1933 to 1934 new passenger-car registrations on farms and in towns under 10,000 in population increased 40 percent, whereas in cities over 10,000 the increase was 23 percent.

New automobile purchases, among other things, have meant an increased gasoline consumption.

Consumption in Ohio rose from 886,640,000 gallons in 1933 to 955,470,000 gallons in 1934 and to 1,014,926,000 gallons in 1935.

From 1933 to 1935 the increase amounted to 14 percent.

Increased sales of new, ordinary life insurance in Ohio have been another indication of bettered conditions.

The value of sales for 1935 aggregated $370,114,000, an increase of 13 percent over the 1933 figure of $328,910,000.

Improved banking conditions are further indications of increased business activity.

Monthly statements issued by the Federal Reserve System indicate that debits to individual accounts increased greatly from 1932 to 1935.

For 1932 debits in the Cleveland district amounted to $15,427,413,000, and for 1934 they rose to $16,474,873,000.

Preliminary figures indicate that for 1935 they increased to $19,028,067,000, or 23 percent over the 1932 figure.

Savings, including time deposits and postal savings deposited in banks in Ohio, aggregated $895,105,000, an advance of $113,890,000, or 15 percent for the year closing June 29, 1935, in comparison with the year ending June 30, 1933, according to reports received by the savings division, American Bankers Association.

A recent study of freight waybills on carlot shipments of industrial products over 4 railroads, from 16 industrial States of the Northeast to 10 agricultural States of the Southeast, shows that shipments in the year ending June 30, 1934, were greater by 816,302,238 pounds, or 38.8 percent than in the preceding 12 months.

Shipments from the State of Ohio, excluding coal, totaled 316,716,439 pounds in the year ending June 30, 1933, whereas during the following year ending June 30, 1934, after the farm program and other recovery measures went into effect, the total was 417,633,148 pounds, an increase of 48.9 percent.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, yesterday I asked unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] may be permitted to address the House tomorrow, but the request was objected to. I notice that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER] has received permission to address the House for 15 minutes tomorrow. I therefore renew my request that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] may have 10 minutes to address the House after the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER], and that following the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] I may have 10 minutes in which to address the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would ask the gentleman to present that request a little later.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the previous order, the gentleman from Montana is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. AYERS. Mr. Speaker, at the outset I admonish you and the Members of the House that nothing I shall say is to be interpreted to mean that I am not in favor of the three branches of Government as provided in the Constitution. I believe in the Constitution and in the operation of the three branches of Government as provided by it. However, Mr. Speaker, the invalidating of New York's minimum-wage law by the Supreme Court of the United States yesterday was so far reaching that it presents a new issue for the people of these United States.

Some 2 weeks ago the Supreme Court decided in the Guffey coal case that the Congress had no authority to regulate wages in undertakings pertaining to States only, and in yesterday's case denied the States such rights.

Now, without discussing the merits or demerits of either case, but just the principles of law laid down, where is labor under this condition of affairs so far as those two decisions are concerned?

In the first instance the Court invoked the rule of States' rights, and in the second instance it invokes the "due process of law" clause.

Now, with these two decisions confronting us, labor's left leg is knocked out if it does and its right leg is knocked out if it does not. So, with both of these decisions and without a constitutional amendment, labor is flat on its back and at the mercy of its exploiters.

This condition forces upon the people of this Nation the constitutional-amendment issue at this time.

With this decision yesterday holding that the States cannot regulate, right on the heels of the Guffey coal case holding that the Congress cannot regulate, organized labor generally throughout the Nation, and especially in the States having regulatory, minimum hours, maximum hours, age limits, and minimum-wage laws, took a blow that can only be corrected by a constitutional amendment.

Mr. Speaker, I am not one of those who believe that the Constitution can be amended by congressional act. I am a supporter of the Constitution in its every word, and I believe that the only way it can be amended is in accordance with its own terms; that is, by submitting an amendment or amendments to the legislatures of the various States for ratification. That is the issue we are confronted with now. That is the way the drafters of the Constitution made the will of the people supreme.

In my opinion, it is not the Constitution that is at fault, but those who interpret it, and when it is misinterpreted or interpreted contrary to the will of the people and that interpretation becomes the law by judicial decision, then the Constitution provides how the will of the people rather than the whim of a divided court may predominate.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AYERS. I yield to the chairman of the Labor Committee.

Mr. CONNERY. I heartily agree with the gentleman, but I should like to call his attention to one fact. The question of licensing corporations in interstate commerce and making them do certain things as a precedent to getting that license has not been acted upon by the Supreme Court. That is the entire basis of the Connery 30-hour-week law.

Mr. AYERS. I agree with the gentleman and thank him for his statement, and as he has always known, I am for his bill. [Applause.]

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AYERS. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. MOTT. I agree with a great deal that the gentleman has said, but I do not quite understand his statement that this has now become an issue. I take it the gentleman means a political issue or does he mean an issue between the parties?

Mr. AYERS. No; I mean an issue between the masses of the people of this country, the toilers and those who produce, if you please, all the wealth of this Nation, on the one side, and the predatory interests and the exploiters that are grinding them underfoot on the other side.

Mr. MOTT. Then the gentleman did not mean to infer that the question of amending the Constitution has now become an issue between the Republican and Democratic Parties?

Mr. AYERS. I do not know whether it will become an issue between the Republican and Democratic Parties, but if the Democratic Party which has always fought for the common masses and for the laborers and the toilers and the "under-dogs" of this Nation, does not put a plank of this kind in its platform at Philadelphia, then I say it is up to you Republicans to do it; however, I have faith that the Democrats will do it, because they have always been for the toiling, laboring, and producing masses of this Nation. [Applause.]

Mr. MOTT. The gentleman does not suggest that the President or the Democratic Party as yet has suggested such an amendment to the Constitution as an issue.

Mr. AYERS. I will say to my friend from Oregon that I am suggesting it now as an issue, and I am pitting the Democratic Party as the friend of the masses.

The phrase in the Constitution upon which the Court's five-member opinion is based reads as follows: "Nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law." This five-member decision held that the right of the employees to bargain with their employer is a violation of the liberty guaranteed to the employer under this "due process" clause.

Did you ever hear of a judicial interpretation going that far? This is the issue that we are confronted with. The Court has made the issue. Blowing hot and cold on the same subject at the same time made the issue. The reasoning of the two decisions is not consistent.

I just cannot see it. Four of the members of that Court could not see it either, and surely the great masses of this country will be unable to see it. They may look until doomsday and yet they never will see how so much was read into the four words, "due process of law."

So far as the requirements of "due process" are concerned, and in the absence of other constitutional restrictions, a State surely is free to adopt whatever economic policy may reasonably be deemed to promote public welfare, and to enforce that policy by legislation adopted for that purpose. If State laws passed have a reasonable relation to a proper legislative purpose, and are neither arbitrary nor discriminatory, the requirements of the "due process" provision are satisfied.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. AYERS. I am glad to again yield to my friend from Massachusetts, the chairman of the Labor Committee.

Mr. CONNERY. Was it not a rather sharp indictment of the Court when Justice Stone at least implied that the economic opinions of the majority members of the Court were swaying their decision rather than their legal opinion in the matter?

Mr. AYERS. It surely was, and Justice Stone's dissenting opinion was concurred in by Chief Justice Hughes in a special dissenting opinion, and also by two other Justices of the Supreme Court. You know this was a 5-to-4 decision.

In my State—Montana—we have regulatory laws and maximum-hour statutes which, by this 5-to-4 decision, are in jeopardy. If the Supreme Court can nullify minimums it can nullify maximums and other regulatory laws. The same condition exists in all other States having such laws.

In addition to these State laws this Congress and the last Congress wrote into many acts regulatory provisions, prevailing-wage scales, and the collective-bargaining clause, all of which, by these two decisions, have and will come to naught. In each instance I am proud to have supported and voted for each regulatory provision, each prevailing-wage scale provision, and each collective-bargaining clause. I know the good that they have done and I know the good that they can and will do, and I am not willing to assume that labor in general, and organized labor in particular, in the Nation and in the States is whipped. I believe that the friends of the toilers of this Nation will organize at once and demand a constitutional amendment making all such laws possible and effective. [Applause.]

The President has at all times stood firmly for the rights of the toilers, the laborers, and the producers of this Nation.

The Democratic Party has always been for them, and I feel that in its national convention at Philadelphia, that great party of the people will adopt a resolution demanding a constitutional amendment whereby these great humanitarian laws may be reenacted.

The time is ripe. The great rank and file of the people demand it, and since the Democratic Party has always been the party of the people and not a party of the interests, let us progress as usual, for the interest of the people. [Applause.]

Labor should have the right to collectively bargain; the right to these wage scales; the right to hour limitations; the right to protect women and children from the sweatshop, and the right generally to protect all laborers from exploiters. So now that the death knell has been rung, let us, the Democratic Party, go forward in an orderly manner and correct the wrong with a constitutional amendment. [Applause.]

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman realizes that yesterday we had a program for today which included the Private Calendar and some rules. We have lost an hour today, and yesterday we objected to the request of other Members who wanted to speak today. I hope the gentleman will defer his request.

Mr. HOUSTON. I made the request for yesterday and then put it off until today.

Mr. O'CONNOR. If the gentleman's request is granted, there will be other similar requests, and I am sure the gentleman from Kansas, as well as other Members, are interested in the rules that are to be called up.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

THE NATIONAL YEOMEN F

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 1687) to incorporate The National Yeomen F.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman from Massachusetts explain what the bill does?

Mr. CONNERY. Yes. The report of the Committee on the District of Columbia is very short, and states:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1687) to incorporate The National Yeomen F, having considered the same, report favorably thereon and recommend that the bill do pass.

Members of the organization which is seeking this national charter were the first women in history to enter the armed forces of our country in time of war, and it seems fitting that Congress should give them the recognition conferred by the provisions of the bill here reported.

The Yeomen F are entitled to all the benefits of the American Legion and the Veterans of Foreign Wars with respect to the bonus and things of that sort, that goes with being sworn into the military service of the United States, and they simply want to be incorporated just as the American Legion and the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, may we have the bill read?

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

SPECIAL GOLD MEDAL TO LINCOLN ELLSWORTH

Mr. PARSONS. Mr. Speaker I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of S. 3770, to award a special gold medal to Lincoln Ellsworth.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MAPES. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman state what this bill is?

Mr. PARSONS. It is a bill authorizing a special gold medal to Lincoln Ellsworth for his discovery of new land in the Antarctic region. It has been reported unanimously by the committee, with an amendment to the Senate bill correcting the language.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the committee amendment, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the President of the United States is authorized to present a gold medal of appropriate design, with accompanying distinctive ribbon, to Lincoln Ellsworth, noted American explorer and outstanding pioneer in exploratory aviation in the Arctic and in Antarctica, for claiming on behalf of the United States approximately 350,000 square miles of land in Antarctica between the eightieth and one hundred and twentieth meridians west of Greenwich, representing the last unclaimed territory in the world, and for his exceptionally meritorious services to science and aeronautics in making a 2,500-mile aerial survey of the heart of Antarctica, thus paving the way for more detailed studies of geological, meteorological, and geographical questions of world-wide importance and benefit. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated such sum as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

REFORESTATION

Mr. LUCKEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8271) to amend the act entitled "An act to insure adequate supplies of timber and other forest products for the people of the United States, to promote the full use, for timber growing and other purposes, of forest lands in the United States, including farm wood lots and those abandoned areas not suitable for agricultural production, and to secure the correlation and the most economical conduct of forest research in the Department of Agriculture, through research in reforestation, timber growing, protection, utilization, forest economics, and related subjects, and for other purposes", approved May 22, 1928.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MAPES. Reserving the right to object, I dislike to make a point of order, but the rule provides that the Private Calendar shall be taken up today immediately after the disposition of matters on the Speaker's table and the conclusion of the special orders. It seems to me out of order to take this bill up at this time. Many Members are away from the Chamber and have the right to assume that nothing but private bills will be taken up.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Was this bill on the Consent Calendar yesterday?

Mr. LUCKEY. Yes; but it was not reached. It is at the end of the calendar and cannot be reached at this session.

This bill simply provides for a reclassification of the forestry stations. At present there are 12, and this reorganization will make 13. It is a bill that is sponsored by the Agricultural Department, the Forest Department and has the endorsement of the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. How much will it cost?

Mr. LUCKEY. There is no appropriation called for at all. It reclassifies the Forestry Divisions or experiment stations.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. It makes a new station.

Mr. LUCKEY. It is a reclassification; it calls for no money at this time.

Mr. MAPES. Has the gentleman consulted the ranking member of the committee as to calling it up?

Mr. LUCKEY. Yes.

Mr. MAPES. And he knows that the gentleman intends to call it up?

Mr. LUCKEY. He is in favor of it; yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the act of May 22, 1928 (45 Stat. 699; U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 16, sec. 581a), be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto the following paragraph:

"The Secretary of Agriculture is further authorized to establish and maintain a forest experiment station in the Great Plains and prairie States, to be known as the "Great Plains Forest Experiment Station", and to acquire by purchase, condemnation, donation, or otherwise such real property or interest therein as in his judgment is required for the use of said station, including the making of necessary expenditures in examining, appraising, and surveying any such property and in doing all things incident to perfecting title thereto in the United States. There is authorized to be appropriated annually such additional sums as may be required for the purposes of this paragraph."

CONVEYING CERTAIN LANDS TO SOLANO COUNTY, CALIF.

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 10356, authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to convey a right-of-way over certain lands situated in Solano County, Calif., to the State of California for State highway purposes. This bill was on the Consent Calendar yesterday, it is approved by the gentlemen in charge of calendar on either side of the aisle.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will report the committee amendment.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That there is hereby granted to the State of California, under such terms and conditions as the Secretary of the Navy may prescribe, an easement of right-of-way for highway purposes only and for no other purposes, over a strip of land 150 feet in width and lying and being 75 feet on either side of the center line of a certain privately operated toll road known as the Sears Point Toll Road, as said road is now laid out, used, and operated, and running from the Napa River in the county of Solano, State of California, to Sonoma Creek in said county and State.

"Said grant is for the purpose of permitting the State of California to locate and maintain at its expense along the route hereinbefore mentioned a free public highway, which shall be a portion of the State highway system of the State of California. Provided, however, That upon abandonment of said highway by the State of California for the purposes aforesaid the easement granted to the said State of California under this act shall cease and terminate.

"SEC. 2. Whenever in the judgment of the Secretary of the Navy or his duly authorized representative it is necessary or desirable, he may, in behalf of the United States, assume for a temporary period exclusive control, management, and regulation of the use for any purpose of said highway; or the Secretary of the Navy may, in behalf of the United States, at any time he deems the interests of the United States so require, permanently terminate such easement on the whole or any part of the said lands, and thereupon all rights hereby granted to the State of California shall terminate forever. Upon a permanent termination of the said easement by the act of the Secretary of the Navy, the United States shall thereafter pay to the State of California the reasonable value of the highway improvements constructed by the State of California on the land described herein and upon said right-of-way at the time of such termination, such value to be determined by the Secretary of the Navy.

"SEC. 3. The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to execute and deliver to the State of California such conveyance as is necessary to effectuate the terms of this act."

The committee amendment was agreed to; and the bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COSTELLO. Mr. Speaker, it is now 3 o'clock, and we have been waiting 3 hours for the call of the Private Calendar. I feel I shall have to object to any further addresses or to the bringing up of any more bills at this time.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 12624, the first deficiency appropriation bill, together with the Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference requested by the Senate; also that the managers on the part of the House, notwithstanding the provisions of clause 2, rule XX, be authorized to agree to any and all Senate amendments, with or without amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 12624, the first deficiency appropriation bill, together with the amendments of the Senate thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference requested by the Senate; also that the managers on the part of the House, notwithstanding the provisions of clause 2, rule XX, be authorized to agree to any Senate amendments, with or without amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I would be willing myself to agree to a complete report on everything except certain projects. There are certain projects in that bill which I think should come back for a separate vote in the House. For instance, there is the Florida ship canal proposition, then the public-works revolving fund proposition, and the reclamation projects item. I would not want to agree to a complete report without that reservation.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, as to the first two, amendments 41 and 49, I should be willing to bring them back to the House. These others involving a whole raft of amendments, under the reclamation law, can easily be rejected by the managers on the part of the House, and not over one or two, perhaps not one, included in the report if it is authorized by law. If it is not authorized by law, we will be compelled to bring it back to the House, anyway, under the rules of the House. I shall agree to bring the other two back for a vote.

Mr. TABER. I think the reclamation project items for the time being should be reserved.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, for the time being I object to the last part of the request, which waives the rules of the House.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

Mr. TABER. The gentleman would not object to the bill going to conference?

Mr. MAPES. No; I would not object to the bill going to conference.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman has objected to the last part of the request. Does that mean that the bill goes to conference?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas has abandoned his request, as the Chair understands.

FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I again ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 12624, the first deficiency appropriation bill, together with the amendments of the Senate thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference requested by the Senate; also that the managers on the part of the House, notwithstanding the provisions of clause 2, rule XX, be authorized to agree to any statement with or without amendment. I will except from this request the Florida ship canal and the public-works amendments.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will not the gentleman also include the reclamation projects?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I would rather not; there are too many of those.

Mr. TABER. I think we ought to do that.

Mr. BUCHANAN. There are too many of those amendments.

Mr. TABER. I think we ought to put the reclamation items in the list, too. That will only make three, nos. 41, 49, and 88.

Mr. BUCHANAN. But my colleague understands there are a great many different projects in that amendment. I do not have any intention of agreeing to those projects, and my colleague knows I have no intention of doing so. There may be one project in the whole list I might agree to, and it may be authorized by law. Why not, then, leave it to the conferees?

Mr. TABER. It would not require a consent to include it in the conference report if it were authorized. I think we ought to except this amendment also, and I shall have to insist on excepting it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. TABER. I shall have to object unless the gentleman from Texas will include the reclamation projects in his exceptions.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate insists upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 9484) entitled "An Act to amend section 36 of the Emergency Farm Mortgage Act of 1933, as amended," disagreed to by the House, agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two houses thereon, and appoints Mr. GLASS, Mr. ADAMS, Mr. MCADOO, Mr. STEIWER and Mr. CAREY to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

APPOINTMENT OF ADDITIONAL UNITED STATES JUDGES

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 528.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order for the Committee on the Judiciary to call up for consideration, without the intervention of any point of order, the following bills:

S. 3389. An act to provide for the appointment of two additional judges for the southern district of New York.

S. 2075. An act to provide for the appointment of additional district judges for the eastern and western districts of Missouri.

S. 2137. An act to provide for the appointment of one additional district judge for the eastern, northern, and western districts of Oklahoma.

S. 2456. An act to provide for the appointment of an additional district judge for the northern and southern districts of West Virginia.

H. R. 11072. A bill authorizing the appointment of an additional district judge for the eastern district of Pennsylvania.

H. R. 3043. A bill to provide for the appointment of an additional district judge for the northern district of Georgia.

Each such bill when called up shall be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole. After general debate on each such bill, which shall continue not to exceed 20 minutes, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANSLEY].

Mr. Speaker, this is a bill for the consideration of a number of judgeship bills.

Mr. Speaker, there have been reported out a number of bills providing for additional Federal judgeships. Application was made to the Rules Committee to bring out a rule for the consideration of these bills because objection had been made to them when they appeared on the Consent Calendar. After thorough consideration for nearly 3 days the Rules Committee granted a rule for the consideration of only those judgeship bills which were approved by the Judicial Council, composed of the senior circuit judges of the Federal courts and the Chief Justice of the United States. All of these bills were reported unanimously by the Committee on the Judiciary and a number of bills presented to the Rules Committee were not reported. After thorough analysis these bills were considered important enough to be brought up before the House.

The situation is that should Congress adjourn and Federal judges be appointed there is no provision to pay their salaries until they are confirmed in the next Congress. The matter is an emergency one, therefore.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. RANSLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH].

NEW YORK MINIMUM-WAGE LAW

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this is a proper and appropriate time, when we are considering an omnibus bill to increase the number of Federal judges, to discuss the 5-to-4 decision which was handed down by the Supreme Court yesterday holding unconstitutional the minimum-wage law for women and children in the State of New York.

I doubt if there is any Member of the House who feels more strongly and who has spoken more often in defense of the Constitution, the powers of the Supreme Court, and against the delegation of legislative powers by the Congress and the invasion of State rights by congressional action. I doubt if there is any Member of Congres who has made more speeches throughout the country in defense of our capitalistic and our American system, based upon private initiative and reasonable profit. In the years I have been in public life I have always stood for social and industrial justice under the Constitution. I agree with Abraham Lincoln that labor is prior to capital and that human rights are superior to property rights. I believe that the best way to combat socialism and communism is to provide a square deal for labor and social and industrial justice for all American wage earners. I am frankly shocked by this unfortunate 5-to-4 decision that compels millions of loyal Americans to work for wages that will not secure for them the common necessities of life.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. If the gentleman is going to make an attack upon the Supreme Court, he ought not to do it out of order.

Mr. FISH. I have not the slightest intention of doing that.

Mr. BLANTON. Especially when the gentleman is a candidate for the Presidency of the United States.

Mr. FISH. I assure the gentleman from Texas I do not propose under any circumstances, no matter what decision the Supreme Court may hand down, to make an attack at any time upon the Supreme Court.

I must confess, however, that I am proud of the vote cast by Chief Justice Hughes and Justices Stone and Cardozo, all three from New York State, to sustain the New York State minimum-wage law and the reasons presented for their vote.

I propose to offer a constitutional amendment to permit the States to set up a minimum wage scale for women and minors. When the Congress has no such power conferred upon it by the Constitution and when the Supreme Court holds that the States have no power, then that power is reserved to the people, and the people have the right to amend the Constitution. I know of no Member of Congress who has ever claimed that the people have not the right to amend the Constitution in an orderly and proper way; that is, by a two-thirds vote of the Congress and ratification by three-fourths of the State legislatures.

When the Dred Scott case was passed upon by the Supreme Court, Abraham Lincoln publicly opposed the decision, yet Lincoln believed the Constitution was all the law and the prophets. He criticized the decision, but he did not resist it, and no one should resist this 5-to-4 verdict. The decision of the Supreme Court is the supreme law of the land, and it stands as such until amended in an orderly way. However, the Supreme Court has presented the American people with a new Dred Scott decision condemning millions of Americans to economic slavery, and the issue will not down until it has been righted in the public interest.

Mr. Speaker, there is no recourse now for these 3,000,000 wage earners, women and children, who come under the minimum-wage laws of the various States, until a constitutional amendment has been ratified giving the States the power to protect women and minors from exploitation by chiselers and human rats who squeeze the economic lifeblood out of women, young girls, and children in my State and other States, and I speak for the greatest industrial State in the Union. Women and children in the city of New York and upstate receive $8, $9, and $10 a week, far below a living wage scale, and are the prey of human vultures who exploit them. They do not receive enough to buy adequate food and milk, to say nothing of the other common necessities of life.

Mr. Speaker, I am not here to criticize the Supreme Court, and I do not propose to do it. However, I am going to try to remedy the situation so that the women and children, and if necessary underpaid men, may be protected so that they will receive a minimum and fair wage scale. Every civilized country in Europe for years has had minimum-wage standards. Now, the Supreme Court has ruled that the States have no right to protect women and children from economic exploitation and pauperized labor.

I am thoroughly consistent when I stand here making this plea, because I have upheld the Supreme Court on every occasion it has held legislation unconstitutional as being a delegation of power or an invasion of State rights. The Republican Party back in 1860 emancipated 3,000,000 colored slaves. The time has come now for both parties, irrespective of partisanship, to emancipate 3,000,000 white American slaves, women and children who are destitute and in need, because they are being exploited by our industrial system. Now, without any protection whatsoever in 18 industrial States there will be further exploitation, and naturally an appeal should be made in the Congress of the United States because we alone can initiate a constitutional amendment. We do not propose to condemn a large part of our people to perpetual poverty, squalor, undernourishment, and destitution through inaction or neglect.

I have an amendment here which I introduced today:

House Joint Resolution 618

To amend the Constitution empowering each State to fix minimum rates of wages of women and minors employed in industry

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That the following article is proposed in addition to, and amendment of, the Constitution of the United States of America, which, when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States, shall be valid to all intents and purposes as a part of the Constitution:

"ARTICLE —

"Each State shall have power to fix fair minimum rates of wages for women and minors employed in industry for service of equivalent value."

Also, I have introduced another resolution (H. J. Res. 620) providing for an amendment to the Constitution empowering each State to fix minimum rates of wages for all persons, including men, women, and children employed in industry.

That is all that is necessary. From my long service in this House I know that any constitutional amendment which I suggest or offer will not be adopted by the majority Members of the House, but I hope some Democrat will introduce it tomorrow and make a fight for such a constitutional amendment. I hope immediate hearings will be held, and that an effort will be made to pass a joint resolution during the present session of Congress.

I say to my Republican friends if you lend or express any sympathy for this decision of the Supreme Court or try to evade it, it will mean a million votes for the Democratic Party. As far as I am concerned, I propose to go before the national convention of the Republican Party at Cleveland or the proper committee to urge that such an amendment be incorporated in their national platform and try to take this proposed amendment out of politics by having both parties endorse it.

This was not a New Deal measure. The minimum-wage law has been advocated by Republican Congresses and Republican legislatures for years. It should not be brought into politics at all, and it is up to the Republicans to see that it is not confused with recent unconstitutional measures that have been passed by Congress and so held by the Supreme Court.

Mr. EKWALL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. EKWALL. May I say to the gentleman from New York that I think he will not find a dissenting voice on the Republican side of the House if he introduces such a measure.

Mr. FISH. I am introducing it today.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. If the Congress should fix a minimum wage, that would become the maximum, would it not?

Mr. FISH. It would not.

Mr. BLANTON. Let me ask the gentleman one further question: Suppose business or industry cannot stay in operation and pay the minimum wage that might be fixed by a legislature or by the Congress, but could stay in business by paying some less than the minimum wage fixed by the legislature, would the gentleman rather have the employers in business and have the people in employment earning something or be out of employment and have the employers also go out of business?

Mr. FISH. Since you ask me that question, I will go much further and say that I am not only advocating in this amendment a minimum wage for women and children, but I personally favor a minimum wage for all individuals—men, women, and children—for the States to pass upon themselves. If I thought it could be adopted I would go much further and put in a constitutional amendment giving Congress the right to enact a Federal minimum-wage law. I would like to vote for a Federal living wage of not less than $20 in order to keep up our American standard of wages and make America a place worth living in for all of our people.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, if my distinguished colleague from New York will yield a moment further, the gentleman knows from long business experience that we cannot have employees without having employers, and whenever you enact a law that puts employers out of business you put both of them—employers and employees—out of business and fix it so that employees do not have jobs.

Mr. FISH. I am pleased that the gentleman has asked that question, and I know he did so sincerely, and there is a very definite answer to it, which is simply this: The employers are not opposing this law; it is only the cutthroats or the chiselers, and not the big employers of labor, and not even the smaller employers of labor. It is just the bloodsuckers; and I may say to the gentleman that you would find that 90 percent of the employers of labor in favor of a minimum-wage scale in the industrial States of the Union. It does not affect agriculture. I cannot speak for the other States, but I do know that in New York State, so far as the employers of labor are concerned, over 90 percent of them would favor a minimum-wage scale law in the States, and a good many of them would favor such a Federal law. You would thereby raise your standard of living; you would pay more wages to labor and give them money to spend, so they could buy the products of agriculture—milk, meat, foodstuffs, dairy products, and other necessities of life.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. GREENWOOD. And is it not a further answer to the question of the gentleman from Texas that if any employer finds he cannot conduct a business and pay a living wage in America he ought to get out of business?

Mr. FISH. Now, you raise a question that I did not want to answer, as it brings up the tariff issue.

Mr. BLANTON. That is the main trouble now. We have been passing laws that have forced hundreds, and even thousands, of employers to go out of business, and when they closed shop it left millions of employees without jobs.

Mr. FISH. There is another objection that could be raised by the gentleman from Texas, and that is that the foreigners then would dump their goods into the United States. I am in favor of protecting the American market for the products of American wage earners. I am for high enough protection to prevent any such dumping in the United States. I would be in favor of preserving the home market for American labor and employing American labor at American standard of wages.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. Yes; I yield.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Would not a constitutional amendment calling for the same terms to be applied to all employers in a competitive market for labor answer the question that has been raised by the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. FISH. Certainly; the whole idea is to have honest competition and not cutthroat competition.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. BOILEAU. I would like to commend the gentleman for his statement that he believes we should have an amendment to the Constitution of the United States permitting Congress to fix minimum wages and fix hours of employment.

Mr. FISH. Let us take one step at a time.

Mr. BOILEAU. Does not the gentleman think that this is too important an issue to compromise by offering the amendment in a narrow form?

Mr. FISH. No; because I have been in politics long enough to know that it is better to get half a loaf rather than nothing at all or waiting for years and years.

Mr. BOILEAU. Once that provision went into the Constitution, it would take a good many years before the people would agree to accept a real amendment of the Constitution.

Mr. FISH. I do not agree with that philosophy at all. I think there is need in the country today for this minimum-wage amendment, and if the Democratic majority took up my proposed amendment or any similar amendment, they could put it through before we adjourned and put it up to the States, and it would go through automatically and be ratified within a comparatively short time.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the majority leader.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does the gentleman agree with the principle, along the line of the argument he is making, that there ought to be an amendment of the Federal Constitution that would give the Congress the right and the authority to regulate wages and working conditions?

Mr. FISH. No; I never said that.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Well, what is the gentleman's attitude on that proposition?

Mr. FISH. That is an entirely different issue, and I have not favored that and I do not favor it now; but I will make this statement: If there are many more decisions of the kind that was handed down yesterday by the Supreme Court, naturally I would be compelled to change my views.

Mr. FORD of California. There does not need to be any more such decisions.

Mr. FISH. Up to this time I have been absolutely against such a proposition, because I think the States ought to regulate such matters. I still believe this; but if the Supreme Court comes along and holds that the States have no power to regulate their own wages and working conditions, then we will have to do something about it; but we have not as yet reached that stage.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If the gentleman will yield, what is the difference in the logic of the situation? If the States should be given the power, as the gentleman has indicated in his proposed amendment, why should not the power be conferred upon the Congress to regulate matters affecting interstate commerce with reference to labor conditions? What is the difference of reasoning?

Mr. FISH. I am in favor of giving the States power to establish minimum wages, and that is the issue, and it will be easy to put through. I say to you as the leader of your party in the House that if you take this up you could put it through. You would not dare to take up your other proposal to confer power on Congress to regulate wages and labor conditions, as that is an invasion of State rights.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Under the last decisions of the Supreme Court are there any State rights left?

Mr. FISH. It only decided this one issue. If you believe, as I believe, that men, women, and children are being systematically exploited in America and we can help them, it is our duty to help them. But if we do not help them we will be playing into the hands of the Communists, Socialists, and other radicals, who say that the Constitution is a scrap of paper, merely representing wealth, reaction, and special privilege.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield to the chairman of the Rules Committee.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I agree with the gentleman that something should be done about it. At the moment I do not go any further than to say that the State should be authorized to deal with the question, because I am one of the sole survivors of the State-rights doctrine.

Mr. FISH. There are plenty on the Republican side.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman will admit that in the Legislature of the State of New York, of which the gentleman was a distinguished member and I was a mere member, that the Democratic Party in that State has led the fight and done everything in its power to pass this legislation, which was signed by a Democratic Governor.

Mr. FISH. I admit that and I commend you; but, in all fairness, there was a Republican legislature. However, it is all the more reason why you should proceed now to help put through an adequate constitutional amendment.

Mr. RAMSAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISH. I yield.

Mr. RAMSAY. I believe the gentleman is supporting the Borah candidacy for President. What about the Borah amendment, which would require a decision by seven judges to two to set aside an act of Congress?

Mr. FISH. I do not know anything about Senator BORAH offering any such amendment. I will say that there is no stronger supporter of the Constitution or the powers of the Supreme Court and against bureaucracy than Senator BORAH.

Let me go a little further, and give you a constitutional yardstick.

It does not make any difference whether a man is in the Republican Party, the Democratic Party, the Socialist, or the Communist Party, there is a real test for radicalism. When you find a man like Senator BORAH, who upholds the Constitution and the powers of the Supreme Court and is against the delegation of powers by Congress and is in favor of State rights, that man is not a radical. When you find a man trying to destroy the Constitution, to undermine it and the powers of the Supreme Court, no matter whether he be a Republican, a Democrat, or what not, you can classify him as a radical—and half my Republican friends today believe Senator BORAH is a radical, and most unjustly and to their own great disadvantage, as he would otherwise be the Republican candidate for President and would be elected.

The fight for a constitutional amendment to give the States the right to enact minimum-wage laws has just begun. The American people will not permit the continuation of sweatshop wages in our American system or admit the fact that our Government is powerless to help solve this social and economic problem in an orderly way. They do not propose that American wage earners shall be crucified on a cross of economic slavery and human bondage without striving to correct this evil and wiping out this national disgrace by adopting a sound and sane constitutional amendment.

The best and easiest way to curb the growing power of monopoly and pass prosperity around among the underpaid wage earners by increasing their purchasing power is to expedite ratification of a constitutional amendment permitting the States to establish minimum-wage laws for men, women, and children on their own terms and volition, but most emphatically for women and children.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOUSTON].

REPRESENTATIVE RANDOLPH CARPENTER

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that the Kansas bill for an additional judgeship is not included in the rule before the House at this time. The Kansas bill has the endorsement of the Judicial Council and has passed the Senate. It is now going to die in the Rules Committee. But then I am rather glad that it did not come up now, because probably next session, if we come back, we may have a chance to recommend the appointment to a new Kansas Federal judgeship of our colleague, RANDOLPH CARPENTER, to whom I want to pay a tribute at this time.

CONGRESS LOSES

Mr. Speaker, our colleague the gentleman from the Fourth Congressional District of Kansas [Mr. CARPENTER] paid this body a very high tribute a few days ago, when announcing his sincere regret upon retiring from the Halls of Congress to take up his duties as a lawyer and a private citizen in his native State of Kansas, by saying that it has been a great privilege to serve among us; and it is proper to say here and now that no man among us has served his district, his State, and the Nation with more unswerving devotion to duty, higher purpose, and more rugged honesty than RANDOLPH CARPENTER throughout his distinguished career of public service. It has been my privilege to closely associate and work with him during the past 2 years, and I am under lasting obligation to him for the always courteous, kindly advice and counsel given readily and freely. [Applause.]

He has been in every sense a national legislator. With him the welfare of the Nation as a whole outweighed the temporary welfare of any section or class. Yet, ever mindful of the welfare of his constituents at home, he is recognized as a man of exceptional ability and has the confidence and respect of Democrat and Republican alike. Through his exacting service as a conscientious Member of Congress he has maintained that human relationship of a genuine Representative which is as intimate as that of the doctor, the lawyer, the priest, or the minister.

He enlisted and fought in the World War and upon his return from France enlisted and fought in the public service. He will continue to carry on his high ideals, and I am confident that should he ever desire to serve as a public servant again, the people of Kansas will gladly and enthusiastically place him in any office to which he may aspire. He has won their admiration for the courage, fidelity to duty, and ability displayed in his work here under trying circumstances, and I know the Members of this body who, during the past 4 years, have enjoyed his bright, magnetic smile and sunny influence and unfailing kindness will long remember this stalwart Kansan for his high sense of duty, courage, and sterling character.

His record is one of faithful service to country in war and in peace. We bid him au revoir; we shall hear more of this distinguished colleague in the years to come whenever duty to friend and country calls. His retirement is a distinct loss to Kansas and the Nation; may it be only a temporary one, and may long-continued health, happiness, and prosperity be the lot of RANDOLPH CARPENTER, one of the most outstanding Representatives from the State of Kansas ever sent to Washington. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOUSTON. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. If the gentleman will permit, I would like to make the observation that I feel that the gentleman's tribute to his colleague from Kansas is certainly a splendid one. But it is no greater tribute than our colleague who is leaving us deserves. I feel sure that the gentleman in paying this wonderful tribute to his colleague has expressed the sentiment of all Members of this House, irrespective of their political affiliations. RANDOLPH CARPENTER is not only a good lawyer, a splendid legislator, and a Christian gentleman, but he has demonstrated over and over again that his great heart beats in sympathy with the toiling masses. [Applause.]

Mr. HOUSTON. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. EKWALL. And I rise to say that any time Kansas does not want RANDOLPH CARPENTER, just send him to Oregon and we will take him up there.

Mr. HOUSTON. And I thank the gentleman from Oregon. [Applause.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

TWO ADDITIONAL JUDGES FOR THE SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 3389) to provide for the appointment of two additional judges for the Southern District of New York, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, two additional judges of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of New York.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, in an endeavor to meet the objection raised by the gentleman from Michigan, that more time should be given to the consideration of bills of this sort, the Committee on the Judiciary sought a rule which would permit the consideration of bills for the appointment of nine Federal judges throughout the United States. In each instance the committee very carefully examined the needs, together with the report of the Judicial Council, and it was decided that the nine bills for which a rule was sought were the ones most needed throughout the United States. In every case the committee reported these bills unanimously.

In this particular bill, S. 3389, to provide for two additional judges for the southern district of New York, the former district attorney, Mr. Martin Conboy, and two of the judges from New York, appeared before our committee last year and pointed out conclusively the need for additional judges. I call the attention of the House to the fact that there are pending in that district, or were pending on June 30, 1935, 3,542 private cases, 913 civil cases in which the United States is a party, 499 criminal cases, aside from approximately 3,000 cases in bankruptcy.

It was utterly impossible to get a criminal case to trial in New York within 2 years, and I feel that the passage of this bill is absolutely necessary in order to see that justice is properly administered in New York. Each of the other bills provides for the appointment of judges where the condition of the trial lists, while not as congested as that in the southern district of New York, is such that the proper administration of justice is impossible. The Committee on the Judiciary very carefully inquired into the need for the creation of these additional judges and was guided by the report of the Judicial Council, recommendations of bar associations, judges, and litigants themselves. A great deal of very careful consideration was given every bill in an endeavor to present for the consideration of the House only those measures which provide for the appointments of judges where, in the opinion of the committee, the business of the courts can no longer be conducted promptly and properly without an increase in the number of judges.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill for amendment.

The Clerk again reported the bill.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I do this to make the observation that it appears, when Congress has nothing else to do, we meet here and create some more inferior Federal judgeships in this country, when for the welfare of the country it would be far better that we adjourn and go back to our homes. In regard to the bill under consideration providing for the appointment of two additional judges for the southern district of New York, it is very likely that there is greater need for two additional judges there than in certain other sections of the country.

Let me call attention to the fact that in this resolution an additional judgeship is created for Missouri. Missouri at the present time has a population of 4,000,000 and has four district judges. The State of Ohio, which I represent as Congressman at Large, has a population of 7,000,000 and has five district judges. There has been no complaint in Ohio that our Federal judges are overworked.

Oklahoma has a population of 2,000,000, and they have three district judges and are asking for an additional judge, as against 7,000,000 people in Ohio and five district judges; but I appreciate the fact that in Oklahoma they have Indian problems that we do not have in the State of Ohio.

In West Virginia, where they do not have any Indian litigation—which my colleague from Oklahoma would be giving as the reason for an additional judge in Oklahoma, and there may be some merit to his claim—they are asking for an additional judge.

Mr. ROGERS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG. I decline to yield.

In West Virginia they have a population of 1,700,000, and they have two United States district judges at the present time. This bill, if enacted into law, will increase the district judges for the State of West Virginia and give them three district judges, with a population of less than 2,000,000.

Then in Georgia there are three district judges at the present time and there is a population of 3,000,000. This bill gives them an additional district judge.

In Pennsylvania, where they have eight district judges at the present time as against Ohio's five district judges, they have a population of 10,000,000 as against 7,000,000 in Ohio. This bill increases the number to nine district judges in Pennsylvania, and the reason given is that they have a judge there who is about 80 years old and who is not capable of transacting business but still insists upon holding court there.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG. I yield.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I thank the gentleman from Ohio for his courtesy in yielding. In response to his suggestion that the number of Federal judges for Missouri is disproportionate to her population, may I call attention to the fact that litigation and the business of the courts, and the corresponding number of judges required for any particular State, is not determined by its population, but by the amount and character of its business and commerce. Missouri is not only a great manufacturing State but is also an important transportation center, as indicated by the heavy rail, highway, and river traffic converging at St. Louis, Kansas City, Hannibal, and St. Joseph. It is one of the notable banking and commercial centers of the Nation, and is the only State which has within its confines two Federal Reserve cities. Out of the 12 Federal Reserve cities in the United States, Missouri has 2, while only 10 other cities in the Union have 1 each. In addition to the large volume of business of the State, an additional burden has been thrown on the local Federal courts by the recent bankruptcy law. The railroad receiverships alone monopolize a large part of the time and attention of its courts, and the amount of business pressing upon the Federal judges of the State for administration and adjudication is so large that Judge Stone considers two additional judges for Missouri imperative and at least one indispensable. I ask that the bill S. 2075, to provide for the appointment of an additional district judge for the eastern and western districts of Missouri, be called up next. It has been reported favorably by the Committee on the Judiciary and approved by the Rules Committee, largely through the interest and efforts of our colleague, Congressman COCHRAN of Missouri, and on that account I am certain will have the unanimous approval of the House.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time and was read the third time.

APPOINTMENT OF ADDITIONAL DISTRICT JUDGE FOR THE NORTHERN DISTRICT OF GEORGIA

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 3043) to provide for the appointment of an additional district judge for the northern district of Georgia.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, an additional judge of the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of Georgia.

Mr. WHELCHEL. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WHELCHEL: Page 1, line 7, add the following: "That said additional judge shall be a resident of either Rome, Newnan, or Gainesville division of said district."

Mr. WHELCHEL. Mr. Speaker, some time ago I introduced a bill for the purpose of creating an additional district to be known as the northeastern district of Georgia, but my bill did not receive the approval of the Department of Justice. My colleague the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK] some time in May introduced a bill for the purpose of creating not an additional district but an additional judgeship. His bill received the approval of the Department and is the one now under consideration.

The purpose of my amendment is simply to restrict the selection of the judge to north Georgia, because I think north Georgia should be so recognized. I think just as good judges could be selected from Atlanta as from north Georgia, and it is not my purpose to fight this bill, but I think the selection should be made from the divisions set forth in my amendment.

It also appears to me that there is sufficient precedent for this request. I shall not, however, take the time of the House to read the precedents, but on numerous occasions restrictions have been written into similar bills, such as the requirement that the additional judge shall not live in the same county or the adjoining counties to that of the presiding judge.

I think that the matter may be better understood by referring to my amendment. I am not opposing the bill. I think we need some additional assistance in north Georgia, and that is why I introduced by bill, H. R. 10127. I hope, however, my amendment to H. R. 13042 will be adopted. Certainly I want an additional judge appointed for north Georgia, but I think from whence he shall come or be chosen should be restricted, and that is the purpose of my amendment.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHELCHEL. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Does the gentleman mean that a candidate, in order to be eligible for appointment, must live in one of these three places or after appointment he must take up his residence in one of these three places?

Mr. WHELCHEL. There are four divisions in this district. Atlanta now has the judge from Fulton County, and I am asking in this amendment that the judge be required to reside now and maintain his residence in one of the other three divisions.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. In order to be eligible for appointment, must he live at one of those three places?

Mr. WHELCHEL. Yes.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Does the gentleman think the President ought to be restrained in that way?

Mr. WHELCHEL. I would not make this request if there were not precedents for it.

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Is there a precedent for such amendment?

Mr. WHELCHEL. Here it is. There was an additional judgeship created in the western district of New York by an act of Congress dated March 3, 1927, Forty-fourth Statutes, 1370, and there is contained therein this language: "That the official residence of such judges shall not be in the same or adjoining counties."

Mr. HANCOCK of New York. Residence is one thing and eligibility for appointment is another.

Mr. WHELCHEL. Not only is it true in that instance, but here is another proposition having to do with an additional judgeship being northern district of New York, March 3, 1927, chapter 338, Forty-fourth Statutes, 1374, which reads as follows: "That the official residence of said judges shall not be in the same or adjoining counties." If I have not made myself clear, may I say that the selection of the judge may be from one of the other three districts, not from the district where the present judge now resides.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHELCHEL. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. I think there is some confusion.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. WHELCHEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 additional minutes to answer my most distinguished friend.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. May I suggest to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. WHELCHEL] there is a difference between limiting the discretion of the President in the selection of a judge and fixing the official residence of the judge who may be selected. Does not the gentleman think he will get into some constitutional difficulties if he undertakes to territorially limit the President with regard to an appointment?

Mr. WHELCHEL. I would not attempt to advise the gentleman from Texas, because he knows so much more about that than I do.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. May I suggest to the gentleman, and I am trying to help him, that his amendment, with all deference, should provide that the judge shall live in some territory rather than that he shall be selected from a particular territory.

Mr. WHELCHEL. Here is the amendment as I had it originally prepared:

The official residence of the said additional judge and the present judge for said district shall not be in the same or adjoining counties.

What is the difference? I may be entirely wrong about this matter. I am open to conviction.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHELCHEL. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. Does not the gentleman fear he will be endangering this bill with reference to the constitutionality feature by restricting the power of the President?

Mr. WHELCHEL. No. That is not the purpose of the bill. The purpose is to attempt to get a judge appointed from one of these three districts instead of from Atlanta, Ga. That is the whole purpose.

Mr. COCHRAN. Are we creating a judgeship for an individual to get a job, or because an additional judge is needed?

Mr. WHELCHEL. There are four divisions in the northern district of Georgia, and I think it fair and equitable the additional judge should be selected from some place other than Atlanta, and certainly I have no candidate for the job.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that my amendment be adopted. It is equitable, and I think justifiable under the circumstances.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Speaker, we are having a little illustration this afternoon of old-fashioned Georgia politics. Atlanta happens to be the capital of the State of Georgia, and about one-tenth of the population of the State lives there. Seventy-five percent or more of the lawyers who practice in this judicial district reside in Atlanta, and more than 75 percent of the business that the court has in this judicial circuit comes from Atlanta.

I have no objection to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. WHELCHEL] offering this amendment. Frankly, I think the gentleman from Texas has directed attention to the principal point. This is an unconstitutional limitation upon the power of the President and what the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. WHELCHEL] is seeking to accomplish is to keep an Atlanta lawyer from being appointed.

Mr. Speaker, I have no candidate for this office, and I will not be consulted with reference to the matter. Senators are the only ones consulted about these things. Atlanta is the point where the business is transacted; it is the point where the business originates, and it is the point where we need the services of this additional judge, and where he would have to be located if appointed from some other section of the State.

Presiding Circuit Judge Foster has stated that seven times in the last year it has been necessary for him to assign visiting judges to Atlanta to serve in this judicial circuit.

I therefore hope the Members of the House will not put this limitation in the bill. I do not think the President ought to be restricted or limited. I think if he finds the best lawyer in another county of the judicial circuit he ought to have the right to go there and get him, whether it be Gainesville, Rome, or Atlanta. I do not think the lawyers in my district ought to be discriminated against in favor of those residing in the district represented by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. WHELCHEL], or the district represented by Mr. TARVER, or any other district. I think the President should not be limited in his power to select the best man he can get.

Mr. WHELCHEL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. WHELCHEL. May I ask the gentleman if the present judge was not a resident, at the time he was selected for his position, of the gentleman's district?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Yes. He was appointed by President Hoover, and he was a resident of the district which I represent. But let me call the gentleman's attention to the fact that his predecessor, Judge Sibley, now on the circuit court of appeals, was not from Atlanta.

Mr. WHELCHEL. I have no candidate for the job, but I think it is just an equitable situation that should be agreed to. One man should come from one end, and one from the other.

Mr. RAMSPECK. The last one before Judge Underwood, came from Union Point, Ga., which is now in the district of my friend, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BROWN], and he made a splendid judge, and if the President sees fit to go outside of Atlanta, I have no objection, but I do not propose to stand idly by and see the lawyers in my district discriminated against, and I do not think it is good practice for the President to be limited in his selection of a Federal judge. The Lord knows we need some better ones than we have been getting in the past. I hope the House will vote down the amendment.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last two words of the amendment.

While I am in sympathy with the idea that my colleague is seeking to have incorporated in the bill by this amendment, I am not of the opinion that the amendment is properly worded or in line with the precedents to which he has referred.

For 2 months I have been in conference with the chairman of the Judiciary Committee at various times and with other members of the committee in an effort to secure a hearing by the subcommittee which reported this bill in order that there might be worked out by this subcommittee a limitation in proper language with regard to the official residence of the judge. Through misunderstanding, for which the chairman of the full committee is in no way to blame, the bill was reported without such a hearing.

I do not think we can require that the appointee shall be a resident of any particular area at the time of appointment. I do think that under the precedents referred to by my colleague, we can require that his official residence shall be in a certain division or in an area composed of certain counties and the President would doubtless accept this as a suggestion by Congress that when appointed the judge should be a legal resident of that area. This is important not only from the standpoint of furnishing an opportunity for lawyers from every part of the district to receive consideration in the filling of positions of this sort rather than that residents of one large city in the district should receive preferential consideration, but in order that the citizens of every part of the district may be as conveniently located as possible with reference to the official residence of a judge of the district. But I believe the matter ought to be carefully worked out. The precedents referred to by my colleague, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. WHELCHEL], and set out at page 1225 of the Code of the United States, contains limitations as to the official residence of the appointees and not as to their legal residence at the time of appointment. The requirement is—

> The official residences of the two judges in the western district of New York shall not be in the same or adjoining counties (U. S. Code, title 28, pt. 1, ch. 1, sec. 1).

I am very much impressed with the opinion that this bill will not be enacted into law during the present session of the Congress. I have every reason to believe it will not be passed by the Senate. It is not necessary to go into a discussion of the reasons which lead me to this conclusion, but I think the proper thing to do at this time would be to vote down this amendment in order that when the bill is reintroduced next year, the Committee on the Judiciary may afford a hearing to those of us who are interested in the incorporation in the bill of an amendment carrying into effect the idea of my colleague from Georgia [Mr. WHELCHEL] and may work out a proper amendment in line with the precedents that exist in other judicial districts in the country.

So I hope the amendment in its present verbiage will be rejected by the House in order that the matter may be left open for disposition next year, upon the justified assumption that this particular legislation will not be finally enacted during the present session.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the pro-forma amendment.

Mr. Speaker, I am going to speak briefly and to the point, and I am not going to advert to Georgia politics. I am sure that practically all of us would like to have both of our colleagues pleased and render them helpful service in helping some fine, outstanding lawyer in their respective constituencies receive a lifetime job at the public trough and then, upon retirement at the age of 70, receive a pension of $10,000 as long as he lives; but my study of this proposal leads me to the certain knowledge that there is no necessity for an additional district judge for the northern district of Georgia.

Georgia has three district judges at the present time, with a population approaching 3,000,000. My own State of Ohio, a great industrial and agricultural State, with a population of 7,000,000, has only five district judges; and back in 1932, for the year ending June 30, 1932, there were pending in the United States Court for the Northern District of Georgia 1,029 cases. At the same period for the year ending June 30, 1935, in the same district, there were pending only 517 cases, or approximately one-half the number. In 1932 there were pending at the end of the year 225 lawsuits of a private character, 219 civil cases in which the United States was a party, and 585 criminal cases, while at the end of the year 1935 there were pending only 133 private cases, as against 225; 156 civil cases to which the United States was a party, as against 219 3 years before; and of criminal cases there were only 228, as compared with 585 for the period ending in 1932.

Hence there would seem absolutely no reason whatever for this Congress in its closing hours to be called upon to supply at the public trough and at the expense of the taxpayers of this country an additional judge for the northern district of Georgia.

It would seem to those of us who have given careful consideration to bills of this character that there is absolutely less merit to this section of the bill we are voting on today, this particular bill, than any other bill we have voted on.

Personally, I am opposed to the inferior Federal judiciary. If I had my way, I would do away with the inferior Federal judges and have all constitutional questions taken directly to the Supreme Court of our country.

But probably I am prejudiced. I am opposed to these tyrannical Federal district judges who pay no attention to anyone, who are judges, jurors, and executioners combined in one individual.

But, Mr. Speaker, looking at this in an impartial way, when I consider the population of Georgia and the present number of United States district judges and all the surrounding sections, it would seem to me that the proper thing would be to vote against the amendment and then vote against the bill.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last three words. During the discussion of the previous bill I was told a story by one of the Representatives from a Midwestern State. He said there was a bill up for the appointment of another judge in that State. As it happened, the district judge did not want another judge appointed.

The argument in favor of the new judge was that the docket was overloaded with cases. So this judge who did not want the new one appointed immediately got busy and cleared the docket, so that there was no need of another judge being appointed.

I thought that that might be possible in some of these districts where they are clamoring for new judges. We have established eight new judges, and here is another one, which will make nine. Each of these judges will receive $10,000 a year. That means $90,000. We have created these new judgeships, and they will last, say, 20 years, and in that time you will get up quite a sizable bill. Every time an authorization for expenditure is brought up one of our political Members gets up and says, "Where are you going to get the money?"

Today we had a bill under consideration to establish a new judgeship in the State of Pennsylvania, and that very energetic gentleman who is always protecting the Treasury voted for the establishment of that new judgeship in the State of Pennsylvania. I ask him—and he was here a moment ago—where he is going to get the money for the new judge in the State of Pennsylvania?

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia?

The amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

A similar House joint resolution was laid on the table.

INVITING FOREIGN COUNTRIES TO PARTICIPATE IN SAN FRANCISO BAY EXPOSITION

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 226, authorizing the President to invite foreign countries to participate in the San Francisco Bay Exposition in 1939 at San Francisco, Calif., which I send to the desk and ask to have read, and ask unanimous consent that the resolution be read and that the whereases be omitted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 226, and that the whereases be omitted. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and respectfully requested by proclamation, or in such manner as he may deem proper, to invite all foreign countries and nations to such proposed exposition with a request that they participate therein.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 5, after the word "invite", strike out the word "all."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to; and the Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

INVITING FOREIGN COUNTRIES TO PARTICIPATE IN THE NEW YORK WORLD'S FAIR

Mr. McREYNOLDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 267, authorizing the President to invite foreign countries to participate in the New York World's Fair 1939, Inc., in the city of New York during the year 1939, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 267, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and respectfully requested, by proclamation or in such manner as he may deem proper, to invite foreign countries and nations to such proposed world's fair with a request that they participate therein.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

A similar House joint resolution was ordered to lie on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That during the remainder of the second session of the Seventy-fourth Congress it shall be in order for the majority leader or the chairman of the Committee on Rules to move that the House take a recess, and that said motion is hereby made of the highest privilege; and it shall also be in order at any time during the remainder of the second session of the Seventy-fourth Congress to consider reports of the Committee on Rules as provided in clause 45, rule XI, except that the provision requiring a two-thirds vote to consider such reports is hereby suspended during the remainder of the second session of the Seventy-fourth Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I understand that the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], the leader of the majority, have discussed this resolution with the leader of the minority, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], and that it is satisfactory to him.

I have discussed it also with the gentleman.

Mr. MICHENER. Reserving the right to object, I think this should stand over until tomorrow. There was much said about gag rule in the last session. Now, this is a gag rule. There is not any question about it. I may not object to it, but I am not going to sit here and permit a rule of this kind to go through by unanimous consent and then later have the Members say they did not know what was being done. I ask the gentleman to withdraw his request for the present.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Oh, no. I shall not withdraw it.

Mr. MICHENER. I object.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman reserve his objection for a moment? The gentleman is a good parliamentarian, and I desire to explain the situation to him.

Mr. MICHENER. I know what this rule is.

Mr. O'CONNOR. This is the usual resolution that is introduced toward the close of every session of Congress. There is no gag in it, in the sense that I ever heard the word "gag" used. The rule merely permits recessing. It provides that a rule, instead of standing over 1 day, can be brought up on the same day it is reported. Now, what "gag" is there in that?

Mr. MICHENER. It means this, that ordinarily the House has some right to know something about what is coming up for consideration. This means that a rule may be brought in at any time and without notice, therefore, every Member must remain on the floor all the time, every minute, and without any knowledge of what is coming before the House. In addition this resolution does away with the two-thirds vote.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The gentleman is unduly excited, especially because he sits on the minority side of the House, and the prime purpose of this suggestion is to permit the minority to attend a certain conclave to be held in Cleveland, where they are going to make certain misstatements to the country. [Laughter.] That is the sole purpose of the resolution. The other item is incidental.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. RICH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the chairman of the Rules Committee this question: I appreciate the fact that the membership of the House is in very bad circumstances. We have some of them over in an institution for examination. We have others who have been in the hospital. I question very much whether the chairman of the Rules Committee and the majority leader ought not to take charge of the membership of this House, so that they will not bring in any more ridiculous bills.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I have one Member particularly in mind of whom we would like to take charge, so that we could expedite the business of the House. [Laughter and applause.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I shall object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, I intend to object to any further legislation tonight. We have had a long day.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman there are some conference reports to be filed.

Mr. MAPES. I will not object to those.

REGISTRATION OF PERSONS ENGAGED IN LOBBYING

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I submit a conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 11663) to require reports of receipts and disbursements of certain contributions, to require the registration of persons engaged in attempting to influence legislation, to prescribe punishments for violations of this act, and for other purposes.

CHALMETTE NATIONAL MONUMENT

Mr. DEROUEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 5368) to provide for the addition of certain lands to the Chalmette National Monument in the State of Louisiana, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and appoints the following conferees: Mr. DEROUEN, Mr. KNUTE HILL, and Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT.

THE TOWNSEND PLAN

Mr. DOCKWEILER. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my colleague the gentleman from California [Mr. MCGROARTY] I ask unanimous consent to insert in the Appendix of the RECORD a speech on the Townsend plan prepared by him.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. MCGROARTY. Mr. Speaker, only the insistence of my colleagues in Congress and the duty I owe to the millions of good people throughout the country who have placed their hopes for the future in the success of the McGroarty bill prompts me to make a public statement of the break between Dr. F. E. Townsend and myself. My thoughts and efforts are now, and have been, concerned solely with the passage of the McGroarty bill, H. R. 7154, which embodies the Townsend plan and is the only bill before Congress which does so. I believe every member of a Townsend club shares my opinion that the passage of this legislation should be the sole purpose of Dr. Townsend and the O. A. R. P. organization.

I further believe that every club member agrees that Dr. Townsend has recently been receiving bad advice which led him away from the real purpose of this movement and set him to chasing rainbows. Let us stick to the job we started until we finish it before we tackle the "remaking of the world." Let us attend to our own problems of old-age security and unemployment before we bother with foreign affairs; yes, and let us do it without getting embroiled in politics or we will never get it done. The self-seeking politicians who have gotten Dr. Townsend's ear the last few months and who have supplanted the saner and sounder advice of Clements, under which he was proceeding, have conceived the idea of enlisting the Townsendites in a third party move.

Early in January, this year, the press called upon me with the information that Dr. Townsend had just given out a statement that he was launching a third party, and that petitions were being circulated in the State of California so that this party might appear on the ballot. This was the first intimation I had that such a move was really seriously contemplated by Townsend, because there had been two such third party announcements and retractions by him in as many months, and I believe there would be a similar retraction once the clear thinking strategy of the movement was brought into play. This last announcement has also been retracted but not until thousands of petitions were uselessly circulated in California, and a considerable amount of money was needlessly expended.

Dr. Townsend being in Washington at the time, I contacted him by telephone and ascertained that what the reporters had told me was correct. I promptly informed him that in my opinion this was a bad move and cited for his benefit the history of failures of third-party movements in this country. I also stated to him that I would have nothing to do with the venture and that he could not count on my support.

Mr. Robert E. Clements, co-founder of Old Age Revolving Pensions, Ltd., was ill in Chicago at the time of this third-party announcement by Dr. Townsend. Mr. Clements got up out of a sick bed and rushed to Washington to try to get Dr. Townsend to change his mind about turning this great movement into a political set-up when we were so close to the goal. A meeting was called of the congressional bloc favoring the McGroarty bill, H. R. 7154, which is the Townsend plan in legislative form, and Dr. Townsend, Mr. Clements, and Mr. Gomer Smith were present. It was quickly made plain to Townsend that in launching this third-party movement he had made a mistake and the following day he released a statement to the press to the effect that he abandoned the idea. The whole incident, of course, was unfortunate, as it created considerable confusion in the minds of the Townsend-plan supporters both in Congress and in the field.

My friends, within less than 3 weeks after Congress convened this session, Dr. Townsend returned to California to be near Edward J. Margett and Sheridan Downey, now his personal attorney, for advice along political lines. If Townsend were truly interested in the passage of this legislation, I say he should have remained in Washington and cooperated with Mr. Clements, the cofounder of this movement, and with the Members of Congress who were endeavoring to enact into law the McGroarty bill. We in Congress who were favorable to the bill found it necessary to hold many conferences to discuss and plan strategy that might successfully guide the bill through the legislative machinery.

These conferences resulted in ever increasing demands for factual information from Townsend headquarters here. These demands were ably met by Mr. Clements, who cooperated with our congressional bloc in every way possible, and who was available at all times day or night to assist us. It was a source of considerable annoyance to both our congressional bloc and to Mr. Clements that Dr. Townsend was not here on the ground. On several occasions it was suggested to Mr. Clements by friendly Congressmen that Dr. Townsend was not sincerely working in the interest of the movement by remaining in California. Mr. Clements replied that he was well aware of this feeling, but that despite his urgent requests Dr. Townsend refused to come to Washington.

I wonder if Dr. Townsend's refusal to come to Washington and work with the Congress here for the passage of the McGroarty bill could possibly mean that for one reason or another it was not his sincere desire that the McGroarty bill be enacted into law at this session of Congress.

My friends, while Dr. Townsend might not have been any material help here in Washington, most certainly his absence gave the enemies of the plan abundant reason to question the legislative sincerity of the movement, and greatly embarrassed the movements of friendly Congressmen.

Very shortly after Townsend returned to California there appeared a book written by Mr. Sheridan Downey and strongly endorsed by Dr. Townsend in a foreword. Townsend's endorsement of this book, which proposed ideas contrary to the McGroarty bill, was to all purposes an abandonment of the Townsend plan as set forth in the McGroarty bill, H. R. 7154. It did not seem to matter to Townsend that the McGroarty bill, H. R. 7154, was the official bill of the Townsend movement and had been drawn and approved by a committee selected by national headquarters and including Townsend and Clements. I sponsored this bill because it was, and still is, the official legislative form of the Townsend plan.

The fact that Townsend, in the foreword of Downey's book, declared himself "not entirely committed to the transaction tax" and mentioned a $10,000,000,000 bond issue to finance the "social dividends", which he, at the suggestion of Downey, has decided to call the annuities or pensions, as specified in the McGroarty bill, the fact that Townsend, in the same forword, which he has signed, suggests that the age limit start at the age of 75 instead of 60 years, and the fact that Townsend has done nothing to promote the passage or increase the interest in Congress of the McGroarty bill at this session should prove to any thinking person that Townsend has abandoned the McGroarty bill and is subverting the approved official legislative effort of the entire Townsend movement to the ideas and personal political ambitions of one man.

Contrary to what Townsend has given out to the press, the true reasons for the break between us were those I have just mentioned—namely, Townsend's insistent demand for the formation of a third party, Townsend's lack of sufficient interest in the success of our efforts to push the McGroarty bill forward in this session of Congress, as shown by his refusal to remain in Washington during this session, and Townsend's abandonment of the real Townsend plan and substituting therefor the Downey plan. These three very important issues were the ones upon which I differed with Townsend and were of fundamental importance to the success of our legislation.

Dr. Townsend gave out the information to the press that our differences arose over what he chose to term my "political ambitions", because I had allowed my name to be used in the California Democratic Presidential primary. This action on my part should have proved that instead of my having "political ambitions", I was willing to sacrifice not alone my so-called "political ambitions" but my standing with the present administration by daring to oppose the slate officially endorsed by the President. It was well known by national headquarters of the Townsend organization and by Mr. Clements that I did not hope or even dream of becoming a candidate for the Presidency, but I did hope and was willing to risk a great deal to try and bring the Townsend plan program to the floor of the Democratic national convention. This, and this alone, was my sole purpose in allowing my name to head a slate of delegates to that convention. My slate of delegates was the only one that was pledged to the Townsend plan, and only personal jealousy and not the good of the Townsend movement could have prompted Townsend to refuse to support this slate.

Dr. Townsend's frantic opposition to my well-meant intentions came without so much as a note of inquiry, much less a conference with him as to my purposes. I could not understand his attitude at the time, but I have since learned that my announcement came only a few days prior to a long-planned announcement by him declaring himself for the Presidency of the United States. When I learned these facts, I well understood that Townsend's opposition was caused by the jealousy that is born of thwarted desire. Unlike Dr. Townsend, I have no political ambitions and never did have, and I have never deserted the Townsend movement, but he did when he went over to the Downey plan.

I would like here to tell you of a matter which is vitally important to you. It is a matter in which I feel that Dr. Townsend either acted unwisely or, as I have previously stated, was ill-advised by his new advisers, who fanned the flame of unwarranted jealousy of Mr. Clements which was growing in Townsend's mind ever since the Chicago convention last fall. Dr. Townsend has been jealous of Mr. Clements because you Townsendites showed appreciation for his sincere efforts in this movement. Townsend should be so ashamed of himself and should get on his knees and beg forgiveness, because Clements made Townsend what he is today. Clements built this organization; Townsend did not, and Townsend knows it; but just as soon as the people began to find it out, Townsend wanted to get rid of Clements. And so the resignation of the cofounder of this movement was forced, and the selection by Dr. Townsend of a so-called national board of directors took place just prior to the investigation of the leadership of the Townsend movement by a congressional committee.

It is generally recognized by all who are close to the scene, that when the movement lost Clements they lost the real strategist, the man who had built the organization to such magnificent proportions, an organization considered by many to be the most powerful ever erected in the political history of the United States. As the Literary Digest stated, Clements was the "brains" of the movement. The Members of Congress friendly to the McGroarty bill depended on him for accurate information, while Congressmen unfriendly to the McGroarty bill feared him and the organization that he built. It was Clements who created in the minds of millions of Townsendites throughout the country an idealistic leader in the person of Dr. Townsend. Clements did not have to do that. This plan is as much his as Townsend's, but he preferred to stay in the background and wanted Townsend to have all the glory, all Clements wanted was to have the satisfaction of putting the plan into effect as quickly as possible. Dr. Townsend's vacillating policy of making erroneous statements calling for constant retractions was ever a source of worry and concern. I often wondered how Clements, a man with a definite policy, stood it as long as he did. It would seem to me that in Clements Dr. Townsend had the one man who might successfully carry him through an investigation by the congressional committee in the proper manner. His resignation, forced by Townsend and his new advisors who are apparently seeking Clements' place within the movement, has resulted in Congressmen, who were favorable to our cause, losing faith in the O. A. R. P. while retaining their belief in the McGroarty bill.

Clements' resignation has also resulted in the fact that Congressmen heretofore fearful of the O. A. R. P. now sigh with relief. I know that Clements at this time is as strong as he ever was for the McGroarty bill, but that Dr. Townsend's actions in secretly calling a meeting in California with his brother, Walter Townsend, and the then third member of O. A. R. P., Ltd., and changing the bylaws without the knowledge of Mr. Clements, made it impossible for him to continue with the organization harmoniously. To try and save the solidarity of the movement Clements resigned—he proved that he thought more of the movement than of his own position.

In spite of this he has been bitterly and falsely attacked and maligned; to all of which he has made no reply, all for the sake of harmony in the movement. It naturally followed under the new set-up engineered by those who wanted to take Clements' place in the movement and who had gained the confidence of Townsend, that Clements would be unable to pursue the policies which had heretofore proven so successful. The change effected by Dr. Townsend would make Clements subservient to a board which had had no part in building the organization or shaping its policies, and who, I believe, will prove wholly incapable of managing a movement of such proportions, and a movement which even Dr. Townsend knew little about. I believe the actions of this new board for the past few weeks sustain my belief.

At the time of Clements' resignation, April 1, 1936, there was $130,000 in the treasury of the O. A. R. P. and no debts. Dr. Townsend testified on May 20, 1936, that there was only about $60,000 of that amount left. In other words, this "great national board" when once given access to the cash not only spent all receipts taken in during the period but spent over half the total cash reserve within 6 weeks. An examination of the records of the O. A. R. P. will show that the cash reserve constantly increased from the inception of the movement to April 1, 1936, under Mr. Clements' direction. The spending of the money is bad enough within itself, but the condemning charge against this national board and its mismanagement, is that all during this time when over $100,000 was being spent by them, not a finger was being lifted toward assisting the enactment of our legislation. Not a single member of this new board nor a representative of the O. A. R. P. have made even the slightest effort in this direction. In contrast to this lack of interest, Mr. Clements has constantly worked for the McGroarty bill, even since his resignation, and is still on Capitol hill daily and at his own expense. No better proof of lack of interest in the enactment of our legislation can be given than the removal of the entire national headquarters offices from Washington, D. C., to Chicago. No office whatever of the O. A. R. P. remains in Washington. Do they think the Congressmen and Senators will call Chicago long distance for information? The laws are made in Washington, not in Chicago or California.

In the Townsend Weekly, Townsend says Clements refused to democratize the movement, says Clements wanted the autocratic power to remain in Townsend and Clements. What better proof of the wisdom of Clements' policy could be given than that he built the greatest organization ever built in the same length of time anywhere? I claim the people are interested in results and not whether the control is vested in two men or one or a "debating society" of seven or eight or nine, and Clements got results. A prominent Congressman favorable to our cause said just last week that he had over 20,000 letters from Townsendites in his files and there was not one word against Clements in all of them.

The new "democratic organization" the good Dr. Townsend has so much to say about is composed of a board of seven men besides Townsend, and six of the seven are on the pay roll of the O. A. R. P., and the seventh is a politician. Certainly Townsend has a "national board" of employees who say "yes" or get "fired."

Regardless of all else, what has Townsend or his "democratic" board done to promote the passage of our bill in this session? The answer, much to their discredit, is "nothing." Internal and external politics of the organization and a frantic and all too successful effort to get themselves comfortably on the pay roll of the movement has consumed their thoughts to the exclusion of what to them must be the "unimportant" matter of getting the Townsend plan enacted into law.

I am happy to see Clements defend the Townsend movement and the McGroarty bill before the investigation committee and Congressmen and the public, even after he is officially out of the movement. Clements is still a stanch friend and defender of the real Townsend plan.

Not to have continued the fight being carried on by Clements on the outside and myself on the inside of Congress was a definite retreat. There were held two meetings of Congressmen, one attended by 31 and the other attended by 37 Congressmen and several outsiders and congressional secretaries, at which the tax features of the McGroarty bill were discussed, and the old friends of the bill were strengthened with undisputable arguments, and new friends among the Congressmen made. A continuation of these meetings was planned as long as new Congressmen would attend and listen to Clements explain the simplicity and workability of the transactions tax. I also accompanied Clements on one of his several meetings with important Senators. He had arranged for a senatorial sponsor for our bill in the Senate. Since April 1, when Clements resigned, I have not been contacted, nor have I been able to find a single Congressman who has been called upon by Dr. Townsend or any member of the national board. All work for the passage of our bill has been abandoned by the present officials of the O. A. R. P., but they still frantically appeal for more money to pay increased salaries and hold board meetings and buy radio time to elect themselves to public office.

The forcing of the Frazier-Lemke bill out of committee in spite of terrific opposition only again proves the contention that by constant cooperative action we had a chance to bring the McGroarty bill to a vote in this session. Certainly the McGroarty bill with the united backing of the vast organization of the Townsend movement had a much more logical chance to be forced to the floor for open debate than the Frazier-Lemke bill.

This session our failure has come from within and not from without our own organization.

And now, in conclusion, let me again refer to the investigation by a congressional committee of the leadership of the Townsend movement. I feel that regardless of the findings of the committee with respect to the leaders of the Townsend movement, the clubs already formed should remain intact. They should work with their own officers and the other clubs in their congressional district to elect Congressmen favorable to the McGroarty bill.

Incumbent Congressmen who supported our legislation must be returned to Congress. Not to do so would be notice to all Members of Congress that we would double-cross our friends. We would lose standing by such a grave breach of confidence. This point I have emphasized in every way possible since I first introduced the bill. The future success of the McGroarty bill will be governed by the efforts of the workers in the field from now until November 1936. We must have in the Seventy-fifth Congress sufficient Congressmen and Senators to pass the McGroarty bill.

I am devoted to the cause of pensions for the aged citizens of our country. It is a holy cause which all God-fearing, just men may well espouse. I predict its ultimate enactment into the law of our beloved country.

AGRICULTURAL IMPROVEMENT IN SOUTH DAKOTA

Mr. HILDEBRANDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HILDEBRANDT. Mr. Speaker, it is a noteworthy example of progress in our economic life that cash receipts from the sale of principal farm products in South Dakota increased from $56,654,000 in 1932 to $94,835,000 in 1935—almost double. This includes $17,299,000 in rental and benefit payments. In terms of percentage, the increase was 67 percent. Approximately 97 percent of the total farm cash income from production is represented by these cash receipts.

On August 15, 1932, South Dakota farmers were receiving 33 cents for wheat, while on December 15, 1935, they were getting 89 cents a bushel.

Corn in the same period rose from 23 cents to 44 cents. Oats went from 9 to 19 cents. Barley, rye, buckwheat, flaxseed, potatoes, hay, and apples climbed perceptibly.

Hogs, which sold for $3.60 per hundredweight over 3 years ago, are now selling for $8.20.

I could quote at length figures referring to beef cattle, veal calves, milk cows, chickens, butter, eggs, and wool. The ratio of increase varies, but it is definite in all cases.

In the country as a whole the yearly average price of all groups of farm products increased from 65 to 108 percent of the pre-war level during the 1932–35 period—a gain of 66 percent.

A new appreciation of farm real estate in South Dakota is another result of increased farm income. Farm labor conditions have also improved materially. On January 1, 1933, the demand for farm labor in South Dakota was 56 percent below normal and the supply was 27 percent above normal. At the same time the average farm wage rate per person with board was $11.75 per month. Three years later, on January 1, 1936, the farm labor supply was 5 percent below normal. Demand was 39 percent below normal. The average farm wage rate with board stood at $16 per month, having advanced 56 percent above its 1933 level.

Agricultural adjustment is one of the genuine accomplishments of the Roosevelt administration. What the farmers of my State think of it can be realized from the vote in the Nation-wide wheat referendum May 25, 1935. In South Dakota 24,489 farmers out of 28,201—about 87 percent—cast their ballots in favor of a wheat-adjustment program to succeed that in force.

These are some of the signs of the times. They indicate that we are going steadily forward in national recovery.

Mr. CROWE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday, immediately after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of matters on the Speaker's table, I may address the House for 5 minutes.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, several requests have been made by Members on this side of the aisle for permission to address the House, and objection has been made. Today there were three special addresses made by Members on the other side of the aisle. I dislike to object to the gentleman's request, but under the circumstances, for the present, I shall have to object.

AMENDMENT OF COASTWISE LOAD LINE ACT

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 11915) to amend the Coastwise Load Line Act, 1935, with a Senate amendment, disagree to the Senate amendment, and ask for a conference .

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. BLAND, SIROVICH, RAMSPECK, LEHLBACH, and WELCH.

THE HIDDEN PURPOSE OF THE ROBINSON-PATMAN BILL—(WHICH EXPLAINS WHY THE WHOLESALERS WHO WROTE THE BILL IN ITS ORIGINAL FORM HAVE FOUGHT SO DESPERATELY FOR IT)—SOMETHING FOR THE CONFEREES TO CONSIDER

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the Balfour declaration.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, the real but hidden purpose of this bill is virtually to eliminate quantity discounts—that is, the economies of mass buying—thereby forcing mass buyers, such as chain stores, mail-order houses, farmers, and consumers' cooperatives, to pay more, and thus charge their customers more. This would naturally give the wholesaler who sells to small retailers a wider margin and would tend to force trade through the traditional wholesaler-retailer channels. If the large buyer could get little or no advantage in buying direct from the manufacturer, he would soon go back to the wholesaler.

The language of the House and Senate bills which covers this vital matter of allowable quantity discounts—section 2 (a), subsection 1—seems very innocent. It seems to provide that price differentials are allowable as between customers where they "make only due allowance for differences in cost of manufacture, sale, or delivery resulting from the differing methods or quantities in which such commodities are to such purchasers sold or delivered."

Even when this language is taken at what appears to be face value, it unduly restricts competing manufacturers whose costs of either manufacture, sale, or delivery may differ. That is, a manufacturer whose production cost may be high and whose distribution cost may be low might find himself unduly limited in trying to compete for the business of a large-scale buyer, since the allowable difference in price which he could quote would be restricted to the savings effected on his already low distributive cost.

But aside from this, the peculiar language which distinguishes this paragraph from the somewhat similar paragraph now found in the Clayton Act seems to have an extraordinary significance. This language has been insisted upon by the proponents of the bill and has been restored in the present form of the bill before us, although it was eliminated in an earlier version hereof.

Mr. H. B. Teegarden, attorney for the United States Wholesale Grocers' Association, who is the admitted author of the original Robinson-Patman bill, gave his explanation of what this peculiar language meant on pages 30–31 of the hearings, as follows:

> For illustration: Suppose manufacturer A maintains a system of branch sales offices and a corps of traveling salesmen for the purpose of canvassing and selling to the wholesale trade, and that the costs of this sales organization, including its overhead, represents 25 percent of his gross sales. Suppose, then, that chain X comes to A's headquarters office and offers him a large order for delivery direct to his chain retail outlets throughout the coming year and demands on that order a 25-percent discount on the plea that it has not required the services of A's selling organization in any respect. If the same additional quantity of business had been sold to A's wholesale customers, it would have cost him, say, 3 percent more for salesmen's traveling expenses and perhaps salaries of some additional salesmen, but otherwise would have been absorbed under his existing sales overhead.
> In such case the chain might be given the 3-percent discount, but not a 25-percent discount. The manufacturer is not able to abandon his whole selling organization merely by reason of the order of this chain, nor is he able to reduce his costs to an amount representing 25 percent of this chain's order. He does save 3 percent, however, as compared with the same amount of business sold to his other customers, and that 3 percent, therefore, represents the difference in cost of sale "resulting from the differing methods * * * in which such commodities are as to such purchasers (namely, the chains and the independents) sold or delivered."

It is evident from the above that the intent of this language is to restrict tremendously the discounts allowable to the mass buyer and greatly to increase the price which must be charged the mass buyer in order to avoid a violation of this section.

Senator LOGAN, in his committee report on the Robinson bill, gives approximately the same interpretation of this language, though less clearly. This interpretation is found at the bottom of page 5 and top of page 6 of the Senate committee report. Senator LOGAN attempts to summarize this point in the following language:

> It is designed, in short, to leave the test of a permissible differential upon the question: If the more favored customer were sold in the same quantities and by the same methods of sale and delivery as the customer not so favored, how much more per unit would it actually cost the seller to do so, his other business remaining the same?

The evident intent, as set forth by Senator LOGAN, is to force the mass buyer to pay for wholesaling, advertising, and other facilities and functions, even though he does not use them. It is easily apparent that under these circumstances the present wholesale-retail system would be legislated into a preferred position, since there would be little incentive for a manufacturer to seek more efficient distribution methods. This is, of course, exactly what the real backers of this legislation seek to accomplish.

Next came the House committee report, which, while clearly differing from the interpretations above quoted, still carried something of the same idea of forcing the mass buyer to pay for facilities and services which he does not utilize. The committee report says—page 10—concerning this language in this bill:

> This in its plain meaning permits differences in overhead where they can actually be shown as between the customers or classes of customers concerned, but it precludes differentials based on the imputation of overhead to particular customers, or the exemption of others from it, where such overhead represents facilities or activities inseparable from the seller's business as a whole and not attributable to the business of particular customers or of the particular customers concerned in the discrimination.

This might be considered by the Federal Trade Commission as authorizing them to require a manufacturer to charge to the mass buyer a proportionate share of the general sales or advertising expense of the manufacturer, even though the mass buyer did not use or receive any benefit therefrom and did, in fact, pay for his own advertising, as was the case in the pending Goodyear-Sears, Roebuck tire case.

If this is the meaning to be read into this language, it would be a severe blow to the development of more efficient methods of merchandising and is directly contradictory to the stated purposes of the bill.

Both in the Senate and later in the House, Members have asked questions in an effort to find out what limitations are put on quantity discounts under the terms of the Robinson-Patman bills and never once has there been a direct and unequivocal answer.

Usually the question has been, "Would manufacturers have to charge buyers the same prices for large orders as for small orders?" Or, "Is there provision in the bill for allowing lower prices on big purchases than on small purchases?" The answer has always been, "Yes." This is correct as far as it goes; there would be small allowable differences in price. But it does not answer the real question the inquirers had in mind. They want to know whether the full savings and economies of mass buying—either by cooperatives or chains and in cases where no quantity limit has been set by the Federal Trade Commission—could be allowed by the manufacturer to the mass buyer so that the latter could, in turn, pass it on to the consumer; and that question has never been answered.

This question was propounded in the House debate on May 28 by Mr. CELLER, who read a letter from Chester Gray, Washington representative of the American Farm Bureau Federation, dated May 26. Mr. Gray, after pointing out that they were puzzled by the interpretation of the Judiciary Committee reports given to the language of section 2 (a), subsection (2), in the House bill, wrote:

> We would like to have you ask those in charge of this bill to state whether this language would permit the full economies of mass buying to be passed on to the buyer or whether such a buyer would be required to pay for facilities which he does not utilize, such as a pro-rata share of salesmen's expenses, advertising, warehousing, etc.?

If you do not get a satisfactory answer, we would urge you to insist upon changes in the language so as to allow all of the economies of mass cooperative buying to be passed on to the buyers.

Mr. CELLER read this letter and propounded this question. Mr. PATMAN, the chief sponsor of the bill in the House, first evaded a reply by talking about "monopoly" (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 8450), and when Mr. CELLER protested that this was not an answer, and his time expired, Mr. MILLER—who was in charge of the bill—made no attempt to reply and forced an immediate vote on the pending amendment.

When cornered on this question in a public debate in New York Senator LOGAN finally admitted that the effect of this language as interpreted by the committees would be to force nearly the same price to chain stores as to small retailers; in other words, that there would be virtually no quantity discount. Senator LOGAN agreed at that time to endeavor to modify the language in this section.

No doubt this virtual elimination of quantity-purchase savings (discounts) was what Congressman WRIGHT PATMAN had in mind when he told groups of grocers and druggists all over the country that when this bill becomes a law the small merchant can buy his goods at the same price the large chain now buys. Mr. PATMAN also made this statement several times in printed speeches and on the floor of the House. On March 9, for instance, Mr. PATMAN said (CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 3573):

In truth and in fact, if the Robinson-Patman bill is enacted into law, all merchants will receive the same prices from the manufacturers that the chain stores now receive.

When questioned about this statement by Mr. CELLER during the debate on this bill on May 27, Mr. PATMAN claimed that his statement meant "for same quantities or under same conditions." But Mr. PATMAN's statement on the floor of the House and his speeches to dealers made no such reference. In fact, some of his statements emphasize the idea that the smallest merchant will receive the same—or nearly the same—price as the large chains.

So this vital part of the bill, and its committee interpretations, which would have standing in the courts in case of litigation, comes to final conference under a false impression if not actual misrepresentation.

Not over 5 percent of the Members of Congress realize how far reaching this bill would be, how it affects every line of business that does buying and selling, including the seller of raw materials to the manufacturer and the retail sales of the small retailer who may be located near a State line or otherwise involved in interstate commerce. Many feel certain that it will increase the cost of living but are not well enough informed on the bill to answer the assertions of the advocate who undertakes to claim that it will not increase living costs.

The Borah-Van Nuys bill has the decided advantage that it would prevent actual discriminations—either of the unfair advertising or brokerage allowance type or the unearned quantity discount—yet it would not upset legitimate and efficient business methods nor legislate a subsidy for any particular class of middlemen. Unless the Borah-Van Nuys bill can be adopted this whole matter should go over to the next Congress for more careful study.

LIBERALIZING FARM MORTGAGE LOANS

Mr. LEA of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEA of California. Mr. Speaker, on the 26th of May I introduced H. R. 12853, providing for the liberalization of farm-loan mortgages, to include a class of farmers now threatened with mortgage foreclosures, who are unable to qualify for loans under the existing farm credit system.

The farmer now threatened with foreclosure and the loss of his home may not have security to qualify under the appraised value his land and improvements will justify for a long-time loan. But his security, with a reasonable faith in returning farm values, may be ample for a short-time loan. Then, within the loan period, through improved price levels, he will be able to refinance his loan, or pay it off.

This bill is intended to cover that situation.

PROVISIONS OF H. R. 12853

Under provisions of this bill a first-lien loan may be made by the land bank commissioner for not more than 4 years at not exceeding 5-percent interest for 85 percent of the appraised normal value of the land, including permanent improvements. It is provided that no loan shall exceed $50,000. No loan shall be made unless, in the judgment of the commissioner, payment thereof, as agreed, is reasonably assured.

In determining the probability of repayment, the commissioner shall consider the probability of better farm prices with improved economic conditions, whether or not the property is prudently managed, and all other factors reasonably indicating its future value.

Such loans shall be limited to refinancing a farm indebtedness or the repurchase of a farm after foreclosure.

The authority to make these emergency loans will expire June 30, 1938.

SHORT-TIME LOANS FOR EMERGENCY

The additional class of farmers who could receive the benefit of these loans includes those who have suffered foreclosures, or who are now unable to qualify under the present loan provisions of the Federal farm-loan system. The farmers who should be especially benefited are those whose loan values are depressed because of abnormally low farm prices, or whose farm improvements are not of adequate security value for long-time loans, but of much higher value for short loans.

The original theory of the Federal farm-loan system was to provide the farmer with long-term loans at moderate interest rates. There was no purpose to subsidize farm loans at the expense of the public, either by accepting inadequate security or insufficient interest. The plan was intended to be self-liquidating, and intended to save the farmer from extortionate interest charges.

That policy was sound. To be permanently successful and afford the farmer long-time loans, at low interest, the loans must be supported by adequate security, appraised on the safe side of fluctuating values, and with full recognition of the depreciation to which land improvements are subject. Therefore, the long-loan plan, if on a sound basis, means relatively low land loans and still lower loans on improvements.

The imprudence of overindebtedness by a farmer or other debtor supports the wisdom of moderate loan values for a long-time farm-loan system.

FLUCTUATING VALUES

However, we now face a situation which has necessarily modified this conservative policy, especially as to refinancing existing farm mortgages. The present situation calls for a short-time loan with the higher loan value of short-time security to meet an old indebtedness. Within the last 16 years the index figures for farm-land values, as an average, has swung up and down from 73 to 170. Inevitably, loan values at the peak, and even at normal values, have become inadequate at depression levels.

In the depth of the depression we had an appalling record of farm foreclosures. The same psychology that made runs on banks created mortgage foreclosures. In some cases cupidity and avarice also conspired to take advantage of the debtor's misfortune, due to no act of his own. The Government has done much in providing the funds and liberalizing our farm credit system to combat and alleviate the evils of this situation.

PREVENT FORECLOSURES AT DEPRESSION VALUES

There are still farms threatened with foreclosure that cannot meet the present requirements of the Farm Credit Administration and which the Government might prudently save from foreclosure and keep the farmer and his family in their old home, and in some cases restore to them the home already lost.

Foreclosure and ejectment against a worthy farmer and his family is a tragedy. To save or prevent that tragedy is a most worthy form of relief.

The farmer's hope, the country's hope, is not in depression levels but in our confidence of a better day to come. It is not necessary for the Government, in order to do its duty, to subsidize the farmer's debt. That would be a burden beyond public duty. We can still do much in this situation, and prudently, by giving loan margins partly on a reasonable expectation of recovery values.

This bill, if justly and prudently administered, would authorize the refinancing of farm mortgages in every case where that could be done with due regard to public responsibility in the matter. It would not subsidize farm loans. It would not invite in any farmers who were not in need of such loans, or whose farms are already fairly financed.

This bill is introduced in the belief that there are still large numbers of farm mortgages that could be refinanced on a sound basis without undue hazard to the Government on the short-term basis proposed. That would carry the farmer over until advancing recovery conditions would make him able to refinance or pay off his debt, and thus save his farm.

I urge its favorable consideration by Congress at the earliest practicable date.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one-half minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, from day to day the House and Senate are being regaled by charges that W. P. A. funds are being spent for political purposes with a view of winning for the Democrats the coming election. Strange as it may seem, nearly all these charges are made by members of the Democratic Party. Resolutions of investigation have been introduced, but up to this time the overwhelming Democratic majority in each branch of Congress has been able to keep such resolutions in Committee.

In addition to the politics in the selection of workers on the W. P. A. "works" projects in Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Missouri, and many other States, (and by this I mean using W. P. A. jobs to coerce the people on relief into voting the Democratic ticket) many other things are happening in connection with the activities under Mr. Hopkins, the chief of the W. P. A., which will not bear the light of day. I ask my readers to bear these statements in mind in the near future when conditions in Michigan will receive an airing.

Conditions in Pennsylvania, where according to official records, the Administration has spent or has allocated to be spent, more than $500,000,000 of the taxpayers' money, seem to be about as bad as they can be. Some idea of the foolish and inexcusable ways in which this money is being dissipated can be had from a news release from the Works Progress Administration at Harrisburg, Pa., which reads in part as follows:

HARRISBURG, PA., May 14, 1936.—One of the most unusual undertakings of the Works Progress Administration in the State is a project providing beauty treatments for women who are mentally ill.

Scores of patients in the Allentown State Hospital have received facials, hair waves, and manicures from W. P. A. beauticians drafted from the ranks of the unemployed.

Similar treatments will soon be available to women patients in the Philadelphia General Hospital and the Torrance State Hospital.

One of the supervisors of the work (who, of course, is one of the W. P. A. higher-paid agents) declared: "Doctors have told us that the change brought about in patients by the beauty treatments have been remarkable. They have found that the women become much brighter in spirits, easier to handle, and infinitely more concerned with their dress and personal appearance."

The work is under the direction of the women's and professional projects of the W. P. A., which supervises employment for women and for men schooled in professions, arts, letters, and various skilled services.

I think everyone familiar with these activities will agree that this does constitute "a most unusual undertaking."

The same news release, referring to another W. P. A. project, called attention to 17,680 persons, nearly all of whom are women, who are engaged in producing clothing and bedding for the poor, and inmates of State institutions. This is unquestionably a proper and justified undertaking.

The release goes on to explain that a W. P. A. exhibit would be held in Philadelphia and says:

There will be vaudeville acts by W. P. A. entertainers, art galleries showing the canvasses of W. P. A. painters, sculpturing, concerts by a W. P. A. band and a W. P. A. orchestra, and a sewing exhibit.

From time to time we have learned of the spending of immense sums in teaching esthetic dancing to women in the cities, grand opera to the mountaineers in the Ozarks, and more than $60,000,000 for "recreation", but the prize crackpot scheme for wasting the public moneys seems to be incorporated in a news report from Nashville, Tenn., appearing in the Nashville Banner, a well-known and responsible newspaper of the South, which stated:

Despite the inclement weather, three tables of contract bridge were played in parlors of the Hotel Montgomery Tuesday night, sponsored by the W. P. A. recreational committee. * * * It is the plan of the committee to provide recreation and a wholesome manner of passing away leisure time for adults as well as children.

The tragedy of the situation is disclosed by the rapidly growing national debt. The latest information from the Treasury is to the effect that by July 1, it will have become $36,000,000,000, which is fifteen billions greater than it was at the beginning of the present Roosevelt administration 3½ years ago.

In pondering the general situation it ought not for a moment to be forgotten that not only must the people generally pay for all these boondoggling activities mentioned above, but the so-called gifts handed out to the various communities by the agents of the Federal Government are not gifts by any manner of means. All this money comes from borrowing on the credit of the American people. They will have to pay it back, every nickel of it.

With this in mind it must be apparent that wise care should be exercised in selecting projects and activities upon which to spend this money. Not 1 penny of it should be spent for purposes not useful and that will not be of some benefit to those who come after us, and who must pay in large part for it all.

Not less than 20 cents out of every dollar the farmer and the workingman have to spend goes to pay taxes. They may not realize it, but when they buy something from a store they are paying the tax of the storekeeper, the tax of the manufacturer who produces the finished article, and the tax of everyone who produces anything which goes into the finished article. The consumer pays it all. The only person who pays no tax is the individual who has no money to spend. Every other person is directly and vitally interested in this rapidly growing national debt and its accompanying rapidly increasing tax burdens.

Mr. MAIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one-half minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAIN. Mr. Speaker, Dr. Townsend made a serious mistake when he ordered his associates to ignore the Bell investigating committee. I doubt whether the House would have voted to cite the doctor for contempt if he had refrained from public comment after he made his dramatic exit from the committee hearings. I must add that the reported merger of Townsend forces with Huey Long share-the-wealth clubs does not click, so far as I am concerned. I resent the conduct of certain individuals, unknown to me, who presumed to issue a statement in my name concerning a supposed communistic pattern in the management of the Townsend investigating committee and the Huey Long assassination. I had no reason to make, and did not make, any such comment.

I have participated in the work of a steering committee of Congress in an attempt to clarify and perfect certain features of the McGroarty bill. But I have never been consulted regarding the management or plans of the Townsend organization in Washington. I have seen with regret some evidences of friction between Dr. Townsend and Representative McGROARTY. I have always believed that Dr. McGROARTY is a sincere believer in the principle of a just and generous pension for our deserving elderly citizens.

I stand by the principle of the McGroarty bill, H. R. 7154. In the absence of a constitutional amendment, practically all sales of commodities for personal consumption, as well as all other intrastate sales, would be exempted from the tax. The proposed 2-percent transactions tax in its broadest aspects may be a mild form of capital levy, but this does not mean that I subscribe to a radical share-the-wealth plank. Every owner of farm and residential property during the past 5 years has been subjected to a capital levy. But that was a necessary incident of the depression. Real-estate taxes have been confiscatory to a degree, and our elderly people have been among the chief sufferers. It is only an act of economic justice to give these people the benefit of another form of tax that will help to compensate them for the privations and losses that have been visited upon them through no fault of their own, and at a time in life when they cannot rehabilitate their own fortunes. The principle of just and generous pensions for deserving elderly people is bigger than any individual or any organization. And that principle will grow in wisdom and stature in the contemplation of the American people, regardless of the acts of omission or commission that may be credited to or charged against Dr. Townsend and his associates.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. DALY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to be granted leave of absence for 1 day on account of important business.

There was no objection.

To Mr. COFFEE, for 1 week, on account of important business in Nebraska.

PETITIONS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a resolution adopted by the congregation of the Arlington (Va.) Presbyterian Church, favoring the prompt calling by the President of a conference of the 63 nations that signed the pact of Paris, to clarify the rights and duties of the nations that entered into such agreement containing no provision for its abrogation, and to organize themselves into the United States of the World for Peace, and also to promote social, industrial, economic, and political justice among the nations, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to present for printing in the RECORD and appropriate reference a concurrent resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Louisiana pertaining to sugar.

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 1

Whereas sugarcane culture and the processing thereof into sugar, sirup, and molasses in Louisiana is, and has been for more than a century, a major industry of our State; and

Whereas through the splendid work of scientists of the United States Department of Agriculture and of the State experiment station of the Louisiana State University new varieties of sugarcane have been produced and improved agricultural and processing methods have been adopted, which have resulted in a progressive expansion of sugar; and

Whereas sugar is an import crop of which only one-fourth of the national consumption requirements are produced in the continental United States; and

Whereas the declared purpose of all existing Federal laws concerning the welfare of farmers is to restore the purchasing power of the farmer and to create a parity income as compared to the base period of 1909–14; and

Whereas the average annual production of sugar during such base period of 1909–14 amounted to 350,000 short tons, raw value; and

Whereas the actual production of sugar in Louisiana for the crop year 1935 was 340,000 short tons, raw value, and the growing crop is estimated to exceed 350,000 short tons of sugar, raw value: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Legislature of Louisiana, That we hereby wholeheartedly endorse the bill S. 4560, introduced by the Honorable JOHN H. OVERTON, United States Senator from Louisiana, which in substance provides a permanent Federal policy of unrestricted protection of sugar in continental United States and the preservation of the American market for our farmers to the extent of their ability to supply sugar; and be it further

Resolved by the Legislature of Louisiana, That should it become impossible to consider permanent legislation at the present session of Congress, but in order to meet the emergency created by the decision of the United States Supreme Court on January 6, 1936, and should it be considered expedient to fix quota restrictions upon continental sugar, we submit and we recommend that in no case should the quotas for continental areas be less than the present production and the normal expectancy of the presently growing crop, estimated for the continental cane area to be 450,000 short tons of sugar, raw value; and be it further

Resolved by the Legislature of Louisiana, That we hereby memorialize the Congress of the United States and we hereby request the President of the United States and the Secretary of Agriculture to protect and assist the sugarcane farmers in the manner herein recommended; and we hereby formally request the Senators and Congressmen representing Louisiana in the Congress of the United States to vote for and support the Overton bill as a permanent Federal policy concerning sugar, but not to vote for or support any measure, temporary or permanent, which fails to provide a marketing quota for Louisiana representing at least the full extent of our actual production of sugar.

DISCRIMINATION IN ADMINISTRATION OF RELIEF FUNDS

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from this morning's New York Times, which quotes Chairman McGrath, of the Massachusetts State Democratic committee, as follows:

I resent and object to the putting to work of a single enrolled Republican.

I should like to call the attention of the chairman of the Massachusetts Democratic committee, unless he is misquoted, to the fact that if my amendment numbered 50 shall remain in the deficiency appropriation bill, he will be eligible, if he persists in his reported attitude and cooperates in carrying it out, to a thousand-dollar fine and to a year in jail because of discrimination on account of race, religion, or political affiliation in the administration of relief. Sooner or later we shall catch up with political racketeering and exploitation of human misery, although it may take a national election to clear the track.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the printing of the article in the RECORD?

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Times of June 3, 1936]

IN CURLEYLAND

Chairman McGrath, of the Massachusetts Democratic State committee has uttered frankly his generous and humane view of the conditions of relief in Massachusetts. A brother committeeman had previously confessed that he had told a seeker for work on a sidewalk which the State is building to enroll himself as a Democratic voter. To the censorious meddlers who ventured to attack this instance of the theory and practice of relief for politics Mr. McGrath replied by this strong declaration of the Democratic faith that is in him:

"I resent and object to the putting to work of a single enrolled Republican."

He stood 100 percent behind his fellow-philanthropist. In his private life, no doubt, Mr. McGrath is kind of heart and hand. To one an hungered he gives meat without asking him to register on the Democratic list of voters. As a committeeman he demands more rigid tests. He must be satisfied with the political worthiness of the applicant. Probably there are too many committeemen like him. Few have the courage to make a statement so nakedly brutal. It is unnecessary to make the obvious moral reflections upon this barter between politics and need. The shame is evident. The folly is equally evident. In practical politicians it seems grotesque.

The money collected from all the taxpayers is granted or denied in consideration of an expected vote for one party. The Republican under duress registering as a Democrat will have an additional reason for voting the Republican ticket on election day. There may be Democrats on relief who detest the supposed buying of their votes to make the relief rolls correspond with the Democratic registration rolls. Relief for enrolled Democrats only is nearly as silly as it is revolting.

REFORESTATION AND TIMBER GROWING

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, yesterday the House passed House bill 8271. I have been authorized by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to report the bill to the Senate with a recommendation that it pass. I ask unanimous consent at this time to make the report and I ask further unanimous consent that the bill may be put upon its passage.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will it provoke any discussion?

Mr. NORRIS. I do not think so.

Mr. KING. The Senator understands that we have an important measure before us and if we continue to yield for the consideration of other matters we will never get through with that measure.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nebraska?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 8271) to amend the act entitled "An act to insure adequate supplies of timber and other forest products for the people of the United States, to promote the full use for timber growing and other purposes of forest lands in the United States, including farm wood lots and those abandoned areas not suitable for agricultural production, and to secure the correlation and the most economical conduct of forest research in the Department of Agriculture, through research in reforestation, timber growing, protection, utilization, forest economics, and related subjects, and for other purposes", approved May 22, 1928, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the act of May 22, 1928 (45 Stat. 699; U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 16, sec. 581a), be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto the following paragraph:

"The Secretary of Agriculture is further authorized to establish and maintain a forest experiment station in the Great Plains and prairie States, to be known as the 'Great Plains Forest Experiment Station', and to acquire by purchase, condemnation, donation, or otherwise such real property or interest therein as in his judgment is required for the use of said station, including the making of necessary expenditures in examining, appraising, and surveying any such property and in doing all things incident to perfecting title thereto in the United States. There is authorized to be appropriated annually such additional sums as may be required for the purposes of this paragraph."

WORK-RELIEF PROGRAM—EXTRACTS FROM ADDRESS BY LAWRENCE WESTBROOK

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an address by Mr. Lawrence Westbrook, Assistant Administrator, Works Progress Administration, before the Town Hall of the Air in New York City in a debate on May 7, 1936, be printed in the RECORD. The other side of the discussion has already been printed at the instance of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS].

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

If I were asked what is the most essential qualification for a person to have to properly discuss unemployment relief, I should say at once that he should be possessed of a deep sense of humility. Anyone who thinks that he understands all the implications of this greatest of our problems is to my mind thereby completely disqualified. No further proof of his ignorance should be needed. By the same token I would be even less tolerant of the fellow who claimed not only to know all about the problem but to be able to prescribe some specific solution.

I do not think that there is any specific solution, neither do I believe that there can ever be a complete and final solution. Certainly neither the President nor the Congress nor Harry Hopkins has ever regarded the W. P. A. or its predecessors, the F. E. R. A. and the C. W. A., as offering a solution to unemployment. These agencies were set up not to solve the problem of unemployment but to meet the problems of the unemployed. The distinction is extremely important. Many other agencies of the Government are devoted to the solution of unemployment. Indeed, nearly all the agencies of the Government have been established for the sole purpose of improving the economic condition of the citizenship. That is just another way of saying that they were established to relieve unemployment and thereby provide higher standards of living.

The number of people destitute and out of employment in America today represents the extent to which our industrial mechanism, operating under the protection and with the assistance of these numerous other Government agencies, has failed to provide the opportunity for gainful work. The President and the Congress have recognized that this failure is a definite responsibility of the Federal Government under which our industrial mechanism operates. Our economic life is not ordered by State and local governments but almost solely by the Federal Government. The President and the Congress, therefore, have undertaken a program of general reconstruction of these other agencies of the Federal Government, particularly those agencies having specific economic functions, to the end that our industrial mechanism may eventually be capable of providing jobs at decent wages to the maximum number of American citizens able and wanting to work.

EMERGENCY SUBSTITUTES

Pending this reconstruction, which obviously must be accomplished through evolutionary processes over a considerable period of time, the President and the Congress established the F. E. R. A., the C. W. A., and the W. P. A. to provide work opportunities for those citizens not at present offered employment by private industry. It should be clearly understood that the F. E. R. A., the C. W. A., and the W. P. A. were never intended to be a part of our industrial mechanism, but merely a substitute for it during a period of reconstruction. Today the W. P. A. is just "pinch hitting" for private industry, and I can say with confidence that no one will be happier than we when the necessity for this substitution no longer exists.

I know that there are a great many people who vociferously deny that these things are so. These people are quite articulate—much more so than the destitute unemployed. If their talents and energies and money, as now devoted to developing various forms of destructive criticism, could be turned into an honest effort to revive industry, then, I think, we should get some substantial pick-up in employment. Even as it is, they are helping some—they are using lots of printer's ink, quite a bit of radio time, and—God save the mark—a few of our surplus professors.

POLITICAL JUDGMENTS

You know and I know—as the saying goes—that a lot of this talk of theirs is just plain "hooey." They don't believe it themselves. We all know that in an election year the "outs" are compelled, by the very nature of things, to "view with alarm", while the "ins" must "point with pride."

I do not mean by this, however, that we stoop to scorn and ridicule all those who criticize us. Nor do I question the sincerity of many of those who complain most bitterly. In numerous specific cases I know that their complaints are identical with those made by some of us who have the responsibility of carrying out the program to which we are committed. I point with pride to the fact that we are allowed to be a pretty objective group, and that we can see and discuss some of our own shortcomings.

Up until recently most of the shots that have been fired at us have been of such a general and, as the lawyers say, frivolous nature that we have not taken time away from doing our job to pay any attention to them. As election day draws nearer, though, the "outs" realize more clearly that they must select some targets that the voters can see plainly. And so some real, understandable issues are being brought to the fore, and it is about them that I shall speak. As I read the papers and listen to the radio, I gather that these issues are:

THE SELECTED ISSUES

1. If the New Deal is reducing unemployment, why doesn't the cost of relief go down?
2. Should not the Government provide direct relief instead of work relief?
3. Should not unemployment relief be administered by States and local communities rather than by the Federal Government?
4. Boondoggling.
5. Isn't the New Deal using its vast relief machinery to obtain improper political advantage?

This question of why the relief load doesn't go down now that business is so much better is puzzling many people. We say that people had to be helped because business went smash. Now business is no longer bad, but we have nearly as many people needing help as ever.

There are many causes for this paradox, but the most important one is that at the height of the depression there were large numbers of workers out of jobs who had sufficient resources of their own to stay off relief. As time went on and business began to pick up they either got their jobs back or they exhausted their resources and had to go on relief. When one of these fellows got his job back, that didn't reduce the relief load. On the other hand, when one of them finally had to ask for aid the relief load was increased. This increase until recently just about offset any reduction in the relief load brought about by reemployment.

THE BETTER INVESTMENT

Now, however, the group out of work who are not on relief is getting smaller and smaller, and we may confidently expect that henceforth there will be a much more direct and proportionate relationship between increasing business activity and decreasing relief costs.

The next question is, Should the Government, pending full reemployment by private industry, assist the destitute through direct relief rather than through work relief—in other words, is the dole better than the W. P. A. method? Except for the fact that the immediate cost of the dole is only about half the immediate cost of W. P. A., I think that everyone would agree that work relief is far better. Those who are able to understand the ultimate cost of the dole are for the W. P. A. method overwhelmingly. Actually, even on a cold dollars-and-cents basis, without any reference at all to the humiliation, lost self-respect, and other nonmaterial social factors, the W. P. A. method is a better investment for the public than the dole.

WORTH THE EXTRA COST

As near as we can find out—and we have made a number of careful checks—the cost of doing an average project with relief labor is approximately 30 percent greater than if the project should be done under competitive contract. This is true on account of lack of skill on the part of some of the relief workers, and because, since our aim is to provide work for people, we do not use labor-saving machinery to the same extent that a contractor would use it.

Now, granting that work relief costs twice as much as the dole in the immediate expenditure of dollars, it must be borne in mind that for every dollar of work-relief money that we spend we get at least 70 cents' worth of valuable public improvements or public services. If we should follow the dole method we would accomplish no public improvements, and the dole dollar would be completely gone.

Far more important, however, is the fact that through the dole we would definitely consign people on relief to idleness and forever remove their incentive to work. If the dole should be given to our destitute unemployed for any considerable length of time, it would not only destroy their character, and particularly that of their children, but would eventually wreck our country. I submit that it is much better to keep people requiring Government aid at work so that when the opportunity comes for them to get jobs in private industry they will then know how to work, and they will want to work.

UNITED STATES OR LOCAL CONTROL

I now come to the question of whether unemployment relief should be administered by States and local communities rather than by the Federal Government. If we agree that the extension of unemployment relief is a Federal responsibility, then I think we must also agree that the administration should be Federal. For 2 years we tried the method of granting money to States, exercising control in somewhat the same way that a banker exercises control over the manner in which those who borrow from him do their business. Of course, if the job was not properly done in some State, in reality we could not just refuse to put up the money, because we couldn't let the destitute people who had the misfortune to be living in that State go without the necessities of life. Our experience has been that with the Federal control that we have under W. P. A. we are able to do a much more efficient and uniform job.

Now, as to boondoggling, I wish to point out that those who charge the W. P. A. with boondoggling mean to charge us with wasting money on frivolous and useless projects. Out of 170,000 individual projects that we have approved under the W. P. A. program, it might well be expected that some few would be wasteful. The following facts, however, are pertinent:

ONE HUNDRED MAYORS TESTIFY

In February of this year I had an investigation made of the 100 projects listed by the Republican National Committee and the American Liberty League as "boondoggles." Naturally, I would have supposed that they could find out of the total of 170,000 projects at least a hundred that would be pretty bad. Our investigation disclosed that 94 of these projects were being carried out at that time and that every one of this 94 was a worth-while project in the minds of the local sponsors. These sponsors were mayors, county judges, chairmen of school boards, and other local government officials. We have always felt that these local officials, who are guided by local public opinion, are better qualified than we are to decide what kind of work the people on relief in their respective communities had better do. We furnish the money and prescribe general rules, but we let local officials choose their projects.

In March, Mayor LaGuardia, chairman of the United States Conference of Mayors, filed a report with the President in which over 100 mayors of all shades of political persuasion, and representing an aggregate of more than 25,000,000 people, unanimously described their W. P. A. projects as being of great permanent benefit and efficiently conducted.

In regard to the charge that the W. P. A. is being used for partisan political purposes, there is some evidence that local politicians have attempted to influence relief workers and administrative employees. However, I do not think that anybody seriously believes that Harry Hopkins would knowingly permit those working under his direction to coerce relief workers or other subordinate employees, or to improperly influence them in the free exercise of their right of suffrage.

WHO IS COMPLAINING?

We have received quite a few complaints about politics in relief, but a check-up made not long ago showed that we had considerably more Democrats complaining of favoritism shown to Republicans than we had Republicans complaining about Democrats getting the best of it. Under the F. E. R. A. the selection of local administrative personnel was a responsibility of the States, and we did have a few bad political situations that we could not effectively control. Under W. P. A., however, I think even local political interference has been brought to a minimum.

In closing let me refer you to an article by John T. Flynn in the March 9 issue of Collier's and urge you to read it very carefully. He points out that out of every hundred employable people in America in March of 1933, only 72 had jobs. Mark well the date—March 1933. Then he says that as of November 1935 the number having jobs had increased to 82, and reports since that time indicate an even more impressive continuing increase in employment. The time is drawing nearer and nearer when there will be a much more direct relationship between this increase in employment and the decrease in the number of people requiring Government aid. It is our deep-seated conviction that the work program which we are now carrying out will immeasurably hasten the absorption of our workers into private industry. Not only does this program enable them to retain their skills but also their self-respect, which is far more important.

SUGGESTED POLITICAL PARTY COALITION

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from this morn-ing's Baltimore Sun concerning the coalescing of the two parties, and the suggestion of the New York Herald Tribune recently made as to such a coalition.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Baltimore (Md.) Sun of June 3, 1936]

REFORM OF REPUBLICANS

The important thing in the editorial yesterday in the Republican New York Herald Tribune is not the proposal that a Democrat be nominated by the Cleveland convention for Vice President. The important thing is the proposal that historic Democratic doctrine be introduced into the platform of the Republican Party, and into the next administration in the event the Republicans win the election.

The nomination of a Democrat for Vice President, however distinguished, would mean little more than a campaign dodge so long as the Republican Party persists in the policies which came to perfect flower in the Harding-Coolidge-Hoover regime. And it would be a feeble dodge. It might make easier the movement into the Republican camp of some Democrats, but the number probably would be few. Those Democrats who are so angry with Mr. Roosevelt that they are willing to take almost any Republican on almost any platform will not need the sop of a Vice Presidential nomination. As for the group of Democrats who have criticized Mr. Roosevelt specifically for abandoning or neglecting the historic tenets of his party, many of them see little to choose between New Deal paternalism and mercantilism and Old Guard paternalism and mercantilism. The essence is the same. And they would be amused by the nomination of a Democrat for Vice President on an Old Guard platform.

If the Republican Party is to make an overture to critical Democrats which has sincerity and dignity, it must undertake to reform itself and its policies.

The Herald Tribune courageously faces that music. It supports its proposal of the nomination of a Democrat for Vice President with a proposal that the Republican Party turn about and seek genuine economic liberalism. It calls for reform of the Republican position on the tariff, and declares "the platform should say as clearly as words can that the development of foreign commerce, through the growth of both imports and exports, is a first concern of the Republican Party." From the party standpoint, that position can be squared with McKinley's Buffalo speech. But for long years the Republican Party has mocked its one-time protectionist hero. The Payne-Aldrich law of Taft's time, the Fordney-McCumber law with which the Republicans of Harding's time overthrew Woodrow Wilson's last efforts to sustain economic liberalism in the post-war period, and the Smoot-Hawley law with which the Hooverites flouted reason—these are condemned in the Herald Tribune's present declaration.

The Republican organ goes on to demand reassertion of the antimonopoly principle. Again it is able to square this demand with Republican doctrine of another day. But equally it condemns the Republican Party which the present generation has known, for the party has been the wet nurse of monopoly. The Herald Tribune sees that if the fight against the New Deal, in the name of the "American system", is to have reality and vitality, those who make the fight must have courage enough to think their way through to fundamentals and courage enough to act upon them. It is ridiculous to expect intellectually honest men to work themselves into a rage over Mr. Roosevelt's projects to make all manner of small men the beneficiaries of the Government's largess and yet to remain serene before the Republican Party's record of tolerance and active support of direct and indirect largess to great interests. What was Mr. Roosevelt's monopolistic, production-regulating, price-fixing N. R. A. but formalized extension of the private monopolies tolerated and encouraged for years by Republican administrations—a formalized extension plus the effort to extract something from the monopolistic system for labor?

The "American system" that Mr. Roosevelt's foes talk about is, in principle, a system of free, competitive capitalism. In such a system the controlling of production, the fixing of prices, and the suppressing of competition in general are exactly as evil when practiced by "safe and sane" gentlemen at the top of the heap as when practiced by farmers or by labor. The long familiar practices of these gentlemen at the top of the heap are exactly as much the economics of scarcity as are any of the new devices undertaken by Mr. Roosevelt in behalf of agriculture or labor—and, for that matter, he undertook these devices, too, in behalf of industry when he instituted the N. R. A. and he was rewarded at that time with the loud acclaim of the United States Chamber of Commerce.

If the "American system" is to be made to work, competition must be restored at the top as at the bottom, the production of goods must be freed of both public and private restraints at the top as at the bottom, the price mechanism must be freed of both public and private interference at the top as at the bottom, and big fellows, no less than little fellows, must be told to stand on their own feet. And this is required not merely in the name of justice. It is required as fundamental to the operation of the free, individualistic, competitive economic life that we talk about as the "American system." If people wish some form of State capitalism or State socialism, well and good. But if they wish private capitalism and private enterprise, they must take the shackles off the men of ideas and initiative who wish to compete with entrenched interests, whether those interests be industry or agriculture or labor.

It is in order to remember that the pre-Roosevelt system of shackles was in control when the greatest economic disaster in American history gathered and broke upon the people. And when all allowance is made for the dislocations caused by the World War, it remains a fact that warnings of the disaster that came under the policies of the Harding-Coolidge-Hoover regime were given again and again by seasoned men in business and in politics who knew their fundamentals.

The Herald Tribune, in squaring off as a Republican organ to meet the facts, does itself honor and serves the people notably. The measure of its success in the immediate future is very doubtful. The one man in the Roosevelt administration who understands the fundamentals of the "American system" to which the Herald Tribune refers is Cordell Hull, Secretary of State. And his lonely, patient efforts to reform a destructive tariff system, his efforts to reduce the barriers to trade and to encourage production and distribution of goods, his efforts to regain the advantages of free competition, are promptly and steadily criticized by Mr. Hoover, that apostle of American individualism. They are criticized by Senator VANDENBERG, who fancies himself as a liberal. They are criticized by Senator BORAH—even though tariff reform is the most direct form of attack on the monopolies which the Senator condemns. Obviously, the Herald Tribune has its work cut out for it. But its brave stand heartens those who know what the fight is about.

SUPREME COURT DECISION ON NEW YORK MINIMUM-WAGE LAW

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial from the Philadelphia Record of this date relative to the recent decision of the Supreme Court on the New York minimum-wage law.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Philadelphia Record of June 3, 1936]

CHISELING IS CONSTITUTIONAL

Even conservatives are jolted by the Supreme Court's decision on the New York minimum-wage law.

Even the New York Times finds the decision unfortunate, and sees danger signals ahead.

Is it any wonder, when it is borne in mind that of the 13 Supreme Court Justices to pass on minimum-wage legislation, 7—a majority—have declared that legislation to be constitutional?

Minimum-wage laws are unconstitutional today only because no five of these seven Justices were on the bench at one time.

Both Chief Justice Taft and Chief Justice Hughes favored minimum-wage laws. Dissenting with Taft in the Adkins case, in 1923, were Justices Sanford and Holmes. Dissenting today, with Hughes, are Justices Stone, Brandeis, and Cardozo.

Minimum-wage laws are unconstitutional, then, because of the caprice of fate that Justices Sutherland, Butler, Van Devanter, and McReynolds all were on the bench in both 1923 and 1936, finding Justice McKenna to agree with them in 1923, and Justice Roberts now.

Upon such flimsy basis does the Court's obstruction of social reform rest today.

Is it any wonder even the Tories are worried?

They know that this latest decision of the Court, in many respects, is the most reactionary of all the reactionary decisions of this session. They know the New Deal is not involved. They know that the minimum-wage laws of 16 States, invalidated by this decree, were for the most part approved by Republican legislatures and Republican as well as Democratic Governors.

They know that these States went to great lengths to tailor their minimum-wage legislation to meet what were believed to be the requirements of the Constitution.

But five Justices say there shall be no minimum-wage laws.

Chiseling is constitutional.

Unwelcome as it may be to politicians of both parties, the Supreme Court's usurpation of power is the issue of the hour.

With all avenues of orderly social reform closed, there is but one peaceful alternative:

Orderly reform of the Court itself.

That must come if we are to preserve the Court as an American institution; if the Constitution itself is to survive.

Black robes do not make gods of men.

Is that not crystal clear to every American in this minimum-wage decision? Is it not obvious that we must bring the Justices down from the pedestal of fetish and deal with them as men and not supermen?

The American people have gone to great extremes to make the Supreme Court an impartial, just, and uninfluenced interpreter of the Constitution.

We have given the Justices life terms. We have put them virtually beyond recall, since impeachment is a practical impossibility. We have made them immune from politics. We have made them financially independent.

In short, we have placed the Supreme Court Justices in a position where they could afford to be truly independent, put aside their prejudices, their past associations, their partisan impulses.

We have given them the habiliments of gods.

All in vain. They are still men.

By their own admission they read their personal bias, their individual economic predilections into our fundamental law. Instead of utilizing their unequaled independence to serve the Constitution, they twist the Constitution to serve their notions.

And today the document dedicated to the general welfare is employed to destroy the general welfare.

Feet of clay tread beneath those black gowns.

America must meet the issue.

That great jurist and wise philosopher, Justice Holmes, said: "The foundation of jurisdiction is physical power."

The people of England were forced to strip the House of Lords of the power to nullify the public will.

Congress, the President, the States, the people possess the physical power to change the present usurped jurisdiction of the Supreme Court in many ways.

It is not nearly so important at this juncture that one certain way be chosen as it is that some way be chosen—

That aggressive leadership be exerted at once to safeguard public rights while there is yet time, before resentment against judicial rapacity leads to rash demagoguery and demands to abolish the Court and scrap the Constitution.

The President and Congress have it in their power to limit the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court under section 2 of article 3 of the Constitution. They can increase the number of judges to override the present arrogant majority. They can compel judicial retirements. They can sponsor constitutional amendments limiting the Court's power and specifically authorizing social reform, although there is scarcely time, in this crisis, to amend the Constitution.

The Nation must go forward.

It is to Congress that both people and States look for an ending of the no-man's land created by the Court, in which neither States nor Federal Government may legislate, but in which exploiters, chiselers, and plain crooks may prance with impunity.

MEMORIAL DAY ADDRESS BY GLENN FRANK

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a notable address, entitled "If We Keep Faith With the Dead", delivered on Memorial Day by Dr. Glenn Frank, president of the University of Wisconsin.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

IF WE KEEP FAITH WITH THE DEAD

The shadows of evening have thrown a soft blanket of darkness over another Memorial Day. The march and countermarch of veterans through our streets has ended. We have laid our wreaths of remembrance on the graves of our soldier dead. The bands have stilled their blare. The flags have been furled. Taps have been sounded.

Tomorrow we turn again to the inexorable demands of the living, but for today it has been as if these dead had been born again in the magic of a nation's gratitude.

Being dead, they yet speak.

The National Broadcasting Co. has asked from me a word of benediction as this day of country-wide remembrance ends. And it is in the spirit of a benediction that seeks to reflect the inner meaning of this national sacrament that I speak.

We have today honored the memory of men who gave their lives that life might be stabilized and enriched for us who live after them. It is altogether fitting and proper that we should, on this day, rehearse the grim circumstances under which the dead we honor gave the last full measure of their devotion. But the meaning of their devotion goes deeper than their valor at arms. The fact that they paid their debt to the past and left the legacy of their spirit to the future through the medium of war is incidental. The fact that dominates this day and gives it lasting significance is the fact that the men it honors died that the Nation they lived in and loved might have life, and have it more abundantly.

In a larger sense, therefore, this day is not a memorial to war. It is a memorial to lives bruised and broken by war, lives animated and sustained by a living sense of social responsibility and a generous willingness to spend and be spent in a common cause. These are qualities desperately needed just now to fortify the national future against the subtle poison of personal irresponsibility and the sinister blackmail of group selfishness which today make the task of statesmanship so incredibly difficult and tempt so much of leadership to the cheap quackeries of the demagogue.

These dead were not men who would have stooped to drive a bargain with the future as the price of their sacrifice, but they went to their death, I am sure, confident that we would keep faith with them in our trusteeship of the generations to come.

How well have we kept this faith?

What must we do if we are not to break this trust in the days to come?

These questions must echo through the tombs tonight without direct answer from them, but I want, if I can, to say what the cold lips of these dead might say were they again warm with life.

One thing I am sure they would say is this: Build and preserve a national life that stabilizes and enriches life for the millions and we will feel that you have kept faith with us, even if you never celebrate our memory. If you fail in this; if you squabble among yourselves, each for himself and his group and none for the Nation; if you plot and connive for narrow advantage; if you whimper always of your rights and forget your duties; if you fail to bend all the magnificent new powers of science and the machine to the benefit of the last and least of our people; if you permit or promote a bitterness that puts class against class; if you fail to weld yourself into a living unity of purpose to achieve the good life for citizen and State, not all your fervent orations on Memorial Day will conceal your failure. You will have broken faith with us.

Another thing I am sure they would say is this: Whether you keep or break faith with us will depend on what you do, not on what you say.

We are not concerned, I think these dead would say, with your protests of liberalism against things that are old or your cries of conservatism against things that are new. We are not impressed by your liberal pleas for the abundant life unless your liberal policies actually lower the cost and lift the standard of living for the millions. We are not impressed by your conservative pleas for liberty unless your conservative policies actually bring larger, rather than lesser, opportunity to the millions. Unless your words come alive in deeds, liberalism's cry for the abundant life becomes but a snare for the gullible and conservatism's cry for liberty the camouflage of a new slavery. We must judge you and your parties by the net effect of your actions in the lives of men. We cannot do otherwise. For men cannot eat words. Men cannot wear words. Men cannot trust their old age to words.

Constructive action, performances that square with promises, practical policies practically administered that light and liberate the lives of men—these are the media through which alone we can keep faith with these dead.

This call to workable policy and constructive action is most imperative just now on the political and economic sectors of our national front.

Thirty years ago today I took part in the Memorial Day observance of the little Missouri village of Glenwood. When the ceremony at the graves of the fallen soldiers was ended I walked through the cemetery and from the gravestones read the tragic record of family after family whose ranks had been broken by swift and treacherous disease. I carry one unforgettable memory from that day. In the family lots of the Smiths, the Birneys, the Hargraves, and the Freemans I read the record of little children from whom life had been snatched before they had had time to taste its full sweetness or test its strength. They had been robbed of life by three then dread diseases—typhoid, diphtheria, and tuberculosis. Thirty years ago the constant threat of these three diseases to young life chilled with fear the hearts of parents everywhere. But in the 30 years that have since slipped by the scientists have been hammering away at the cause and cure of these three diseases, until today the hearts of parents need no longer be chilled with fear of typhoid, diphtheria, and tuberculosis. Given intelligent use of the results of research in these diseases, they can, in most instances, be held at bay or conquered.

The fear that now chills the hearts of parents throughout the United States is the fear that the children of this generation will fall victim to the diseases that infect our political and economic life. The more threatening of these social ills are obvious.

1. War that may come upon us like a thief in the night, waste our substance, again disrupt all the patterns of our enterprise, wipe out in a few swift months the slow gains of generations of civilized effort, and thrust our children or theirs back to the precarious existence of our primitive ancestors.

2. Unemployment that leaves youth workless in a world of closed doors and rusts out with idleness the patiently achieved skill of mature men.

3. A smothering blanket of debt that sells the future into slavery, dampens initiative, takes hope from the hearts of men, and leaves despair in its place.

4. A back-breaking taxation that makes men the bond-slaves of government.

5. Poverty in the midst of plenty.

6. A pitiful old age without security.

7. The lashing of class hatred to a new fury.

8. The subtle disintegration of self-government.

9. The subordination of the individual.

10. The exaltation of the State.

11. The black specter of dictatorship that has already darkened the life of so much of mankind.

12. The loss of all those basic liberties of thought and of the expression of thought, of life, and of enterprise which are essential to the safety, the success, and the self-respect of a mature people.

13. And, even more insidious than all these, the spread of a spirit of defeatism among many Americans, in high position and low, a defeatism that seems to assume that progress has come to a dead end, that science and technology have been too efficient in producing a limitless output at low prices, and that the thing to do, therefore, is to plan a lesser output at higher prices, despite the human need that still stalks our streets.

These are among the diseases that have infected the political and economic life of one European nation after another in the last decade and a half. We are part of the western civilization to which these European nations belong. And, despite the distinctiveness we rightly seek to maintain, we are not of necessity immune to these distempers that have raced through the minds of peoples elsewhere in the world. The winds of strange doctrine that have shaken ancient traditions of government and economic organization in Europe are blowing across our judgments as well. The waves of popular desire that have been lashed up there beat against our shores also.

Nothing is to be gained by shutting our eyes to the fact that these politico-economic diseases that have wracked the body of Europe are threatening the health and integrity of the American social order. We must, once and for all, drive these diseases from our midst. By a bold and skillful surgery we must cut the sources of these infections alike from our Government and from our enterprise.

If we could but emancipate ourselves from the tyranny of our vested interests and our vested ideas; if we could but free ourselves from the prejudice, the passion, and the partisanship that blind us to reality; if we could but stop confusing issues without everlasting warfare of words over who is liberal and who is conservative; and if, for but one full month, we could bring a cool and steady intelligence to bear upon our problems, the mine-run of Americans, regardless of party, would not greatly disagree on what must be done to free us from the threat of these diseases.

We must preserve ourselves as a self-governing democracy at whatever cost. We must not fall victim to the fatigue and despair that have led so many of the peoples of the old world to dream of a short cut to social salvation through the strong arm of excessively centralized authority. Time is beginning to audit the actual results of some of these new strong-arm governments. And the audit does not live up to the advertisement with which these ventures in centralized power began. This should not surprise anyone with a sense of history. Down the ages unduly centralized power has run true to form. It has invariably ended in tyranny.

Even when effected with Democratic consent and designed to serve emergency ends only, centralized power has always moved relentlessly in the direction of self-perpetuation. And it has scorned no weapon that would advance it on its road to permanent power. It has always, sooner or later, sought to bully into silence the voice of corrective criticism, intimidate minority opinion, liquidate all opposition by character assassination, and thus gain unquestioned right-of-way for its every whim. And once entrenched with a presumption of permanence, centralized power has always grown domineering. It has become less rather than more concerned with the common good. It has become the victim of whim and caprice until at last a revolt of the governed has proved the only road to progress.

If we are to keep faith with these dead, we must not permit an undue centralization of political power or an undue concentration of economic power to drop the seeds of a new tyranny in American soil. We must, at whatever cost, preserve ourselves as a self-governing democracy, for only so can we hope to keep power centralized enough to achieve efficiency without tyranny and keep power decentralized enough to preserve freedom without anarchy.

From whatever quarter they hail or whatever party they serve, we must scourge the demagogues from the temples of leadership. We must build a public opinion that will stamp out of American public life the growing tendency to promise the moon to the millions for a handful of votes. After all, you can corrupt an electorate with false hopes as easily as you can corrupt it with money. And the one is quite as reprehensible as the other. We must realize that the demagogue—whether the reactionary demagogue who would have us think that he alone is patriotic or the radical demagogue who would have us think that he alone is progressive—is our worst enemy. He deserves nothing but damnation at our hands, for always, in the end, he leads us into the quicksands of betrayal or futility.

We must be eternally on guard lest our new reforms but give new expression to our old evils. We must not delude ourselves into thinking we are making progress if our public planning does the incredible thing of adopting without revision all the old tricks of private monopoly, such as the arbitrary fixing of prices, the arbitrary cutting down of production, and the arbitrary elimination of competition which have so long jammed the gears of what might have been a workable economics of plenty.

And finally we must utilize instead of sabotage those instruments of science, technology, and power production which our own genius has invented for providing prosperity, leisure, and security for the millions. Surely we can bring these fruits of plenty to the millions only by producing more wealth, not less. We must clear our minds of all confusion and make an utterly clear decision between an economics of scarcity and an economics of plenty.

As I have said before, to many of you who are listening tonight, if the toiling millions can be convinced that greater happiness can be found by declaring a holiday on scientific progress, throwing the brakes on technological advance, and deliberately reducing the enterprise of the Nation to smaller and more easily manageable dimensions, well and good. If that is what they want. But that is not what they want. They hunger to have full human advantage of the utmost this age of science, technology, and power production is so clearly equipped to bring them in comfort, convenience, and liberation of spirit.

In an age of actual scarcity, the poor will endure their lot without undue whimpering, but the poor will not forever stay docile in the presence of potential plenty kept always just beyond their reach by blind absurdities of policy. This is why our choice between an economics of scarcity and an economics of plenty will determine the social stability or instability of the Nation in the days ahead.

Scientific and technical leadership has abolished the physical necessity of poverty on this continent. It remains for political and economic leadership to abolish the social fact of poverty and its milder manifestation, underconsumption. Science and the machine have brought us to the threshold of an age of prosperity, leisure, and security, but we have lacked the wit to unlock the door. Now, instead of planning to adjust ourselves to the half-hearted and insecure existence of a deliberately reinduced age of scarcity, we should not rest until we have found the key that will unlock the door into this new age of prosperity, leisure, and security which science and the machine have at last made possible.

All the necessary tools are now in our hands for emancipating this people from poverty, drudgery, and insecurity. If now we fail to effect this emancipation, we shall go down in history as traitors to the tools of our own creation.

The tragic fact is that we are not now using these tools of science, technology, and power production to this high end. We are deliberately letting many of them rust out under a misguided theory that restriction is a road to a renewed national life. In our frantic effort to stabilize we may actually sterilize the Nation's economic enterprise. To play down our productive powers while so many Americans are in dire need may well result in the stabilization of want rather than the stabilization of welfare. This repressing, restricting, and reducing of our maximum productive capacities, unless minimized, rationalized, and intelligently related to policies that build instead of blast the buying power of the millions, will make poverty the permanent heritage of our people.

This must not be.

The spirits of the dead we have today honored hover over us in these critical hours of decision we face, as we struggle with the problem of maintaining a stable and significant national life in the midst of a world influx.

We must keep faith with them.

SAN FRANCISCO BAY EXPOSITION IN 1939

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 226) authorizing the President to invite foreign countries to participate in the San Francisco Bay Exposition in 1939 at San Francisco, Calif., which was, on page 2, line 5, to strike out "all."

Mr. JOHNSON. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

ADDITIONAL DISTRICT JUDGE, EASTERN DISTRICT OF PENNSYLVANIA

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, on Monday I objected to the consideration of Senate bill 4664, being Calendar No. 2216. Yesterday I called the attention of the Senate to the bill and desired to have it considered at that time, but the request was made that it go over until this morning. It is a bill authorizing the appointment of an additional judge for the eastern district of Pennsylvania. I have just been informed that a similar measure has passed the House of Representatives, and I wish to inform the Senate that I withdraw my objection and ask that the bill be acted upon this morning, if it is possible to do so. I may add that the Senate bill was introduced by my colleague the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY].

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will report the bill by title.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (S. 4664) authorizing the appointment of an additional district judge for the eastern district of Pennsylvania.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it seems to me that it is not quite fair to the bill which is under consideration——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the Chair state the parliamentary situation. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS] has requested the Senate to consider a Senate bill to which he himself objected on Monday, and states that a similar bill has passed the House.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I understand the parliamentary situation; but the point I desire to make is that we have under consideration an important bill, and I do not like to yield for the consideration of other measures, no matter how important they are.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands the Senator from Pennsylvania to have conveyed the idea that if any debate ensued, he would withdraw the request.

Mr. DAVIS. That is correct.

INTERNAL-REVENUE TAXATION

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 12395) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is——

Mr. COPELAND. A parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. COPELAND. When the Senate adjourned last night I was still on the floor. Am I recognized?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator is correct. The Chair was going to state the question before the Senate, which is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] to the committee amendment. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In the committee amendment, on line 15, page 267, it is proposed to strike out "whale oil (except sperm oil)"; and on lines 16 and 17, after "marine animal oil", to insert "except denatured whale oil for inedible use and except sperm oil."

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I do not see the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] present at the moment. I should like to ask some member of the Finance Committee whether or not there is now an import duty on whale oil.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I have not had time to investigate the particular section around which the debate is revolving, but I believe there is a duty.

Mr. COPELAND. The duty is 6 cents per gallon, is it not?

Mr. GEORGE. I do not recall.

Mr. COPELAND. May I ask the Senator from Georgia, who appears to be the only member of the Finance Committee present, if the Bailey amendment should be adopted, would that mean that in addition to the 6 cents per gallon there would be placed on whale oil an excise tax of 3 cents a pound?

Mr. GEORGE. I am unable to answer the Senator. However, the Senator from North Carolina has just entered the Chamber, and he, no doubt, can do so.

Mr. COPELAND. May I ask the Senator from North Carolina if there is now a tariff duty on whale oil?

Mr. BAILEY. I do not know.

Mr. COPELAND. Then I will state, for the information of the Senator from North Carolina, that there is a tariff duty of 6 cents per gallon on whale oil. In addition to that, the Senator from North Carolina proposes to place an excise tax on whale oil of 3 cents a pound. Six cents a gallon is equal to at least 20 percent on a crude material produced by a country which has the same high standard of living that we have. In addition, it is proposed to have a tax of 3 cents a pound, which would make the duty on whale oil 205 percent.

I am speaking now for the farmers in my State. In part, I represent the great Empire State.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, what uses of whale oil are made by farmers?

Mr. COPELAND. Whale oil is used in the manufacture of the cheap soaps which the housewife uses. However, that is not the point. The point is, that if we could bring in the inedible whale oil to be used for this purpose there would be restored to us a market in Norway and Germany for our lard and butter. That is the point.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. MURPHY. What assurance can the Senator give in support of the statement that Germany would open her markets to our lard?

Mr. COPELAND. I cannot give any assurance about anything, but I know that the Agricultural Department, the State Department, the Treasury Department, and the President of the United States think it is a mistake to put this new tariff on whale oil. I cannot give any assurance about what Germany or Norway or the Argentine or some other country may do about it, but I know that since this tremendous tariff has been placed upon whale oil our exports of lard and butter to Germany have been reduced from $7,000,000 or $8,000,000 a year to $156,000. That is the practical consideration.

Mr. MURPHY. It is hardly fair to say the tariff on whale oil explains Germany's failure to accept our lard. As a matter of fact, Germany has been continually making an effort since the war to make itself self-sufficient in a military way. The last war was terminated possibly because of Germany's deficiency in fats. If whale oil should be diverted from Germany to this country, there is no assurance that Germany would not substitute tropical oil and other oil. There is the definite assurance that it is not possible now under any circumstances to expect trade with Germany with respect to our animal fats.

Mr. COPELAND. What has the Senator to say about Norway?

Mr. MURPHY. The same condition affects Norway, although her situation is not identical with that of Germany. Germany's great consideration is to conserve her gold. For instance, in this morning's newspaper it is recounted that at a meeting of the stockholders of the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey, Mr. Teagle told the stockholders that in order to sell oil in Germany he had to take in exchange for the oil a number of harmonicas equal to two for every child in the United States.

Germany is seeking to conserve her gold. She will not let it go out. That is why she is not taking our lard—that and the further reason that she is striving to make herself militarily self-sufficient.

Mr. COPELAND. There is not any question, however, about Norway.

Mr. President, a brief restatement of the fundamental point involved in the amendment I am proposing will afford a reply to the Senator from Iowa.

Whale oil is a product which is not eaten or consumed in the United States; but while we make margarine or oleomargarine with lard, in Europe whale oil is used. If the whale oil which is produced in Norway and other countries cannot be sold for use in soap making, for which we use it in the United States, it is used by European manufacturers as the basis of margarine, and the people in Europe consume margarine instead of using our lard and our butter.

In discussing this subject I do not have to depend on any knowledge of my own. I am depending upon the statement of the Secretary of State, backed up by official documents from certain foreign countries. I hesitate to speak about foreign countries, because we have such an obsession of hatred for foreign countries that merely to mention one is in itself almost certain to condemn and end in argument. I have here this statement, however, contained in an official letter from the British Embassy to the Secretary of State:

> As regards the United Kingdom, I have to point out that the United Kingdom's participation with Norwegian interests in the whaling industry and the production of whale oil is very large.
> As regards Newfoundland—
> Our neighbor up here—
> the officer administering the government of Newfoundland reported in March 1935 that the effect of the tax of 3 cents per pound imposed on whale and seal oils under section 602 of the Revenue Act of 1934 had been to raise the total duty to 28½ cents per gallon, as compared with a former rate of 6 cents per gallon.

When the Smoot-Hawley Act passed, there was not a Democratic newspaper or a Democratic orator in the United States who did not condemn it in set terms. Yet in addition to the tax of 28½ cents a gallon placed upon this product by the Smoot-Hawley Act, it is now proposed to place upon it a tax of 3 cents a pound, making a total duty of 205 percent.

What are the Democrats going to say when they go out next fall to make speeches? I am not sure what the platform said on the subject; that does not make much difference; we do not regard the platform; but we did condemn the Smoot-Hawley Act. I, myself, came in for great personal condemnation because I voted for so many protective items in that act; but now we outdo the Smoot-Hawley iniquity by raising the tariff on this product from 20 percent to 205 percent. The other was bad, and this is 10 times worse.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. What countries now furnish the imports of whale oil to the United States? Did the Senator say that Norway and Great Britain furnish them?

Mr. COPELAND. Norway, largely.

Mr. TYDINGS. Is it not a fact that the United States has a favorable balance of trade with Norway?

Mr. COPELAND. Oh, yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. To what extent does the importation of whale oil reflect itself in the total imports from Norway? What percentage is it of the total?

Mr. COPELAND. Our exports to Norway are largely reduced by reason of the failure of Norway to sell her whale oil.

Mr. TYDINGS. Can the Senator give us the percentage which whale oil bears to the total imports from Norway?

Mr. COPELAND. I am sorry I cannot do so at the moment. I have the figures in my mass of papers; but I refer the Senator to the letter written by the Secretary of State.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to have the Senator read that particular pertinent paragraph.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, if I may interrupt my friend the distinguished Senator from New York, I am now prepared to answer the question which he propounded to me. At the moment I was not, because I am not familiar with this particular amendment.

Under the existing tariff act, whale oil and seal oil are dutiable at 6 cents per gallon. Under the 1934 Revenue Act, which is continued in the 1935 act, whale oil is subjected to a special processing tax of 3 cents per pound, the same as carried in this bill; so that no change is proposed by this amendment so far as the rates are concerned.

The pending bill does not raise the tax on whale oil by any amount whatsoever. This amendment is intended merely to prevent the importation and processing of certain extracts or derivatives of these various oils and is intended merely to stop up loopholes in the present law which permit the escape of many of these oils from the taxes imposed.

Mr. COPELAND. I thank the Senator. His statement confirms exactly what I have said. Whether under the processing tax or whether under the amendment, it does make the tax 205 percent.

Mr. GEORGE. What I desire to call the Senator's attention to is that the pending bill does not raise the existing tax on whale oil. The Senator, as I understand, wishes to except from the existing tax inedible whale oil.

Mr. COPELAND. Now, Mr. President, I am going to speak to the farmers in the State of New York.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I ask the Senator if he is going to meet the point raised by the Senator from Georgia, which flatly contradicts his statement that we are very greatly increasing the tax on whale oil.

Mr. COPELAND. I do not care whether or not the tax is being very greatly increased. It has already been placed at 205 percent; and if the Senator would accept my amendment and take it to conference, as I have begged him to do, it could be decided in conference whether it is wise to continue this condition, which has destroyed the importation of whale oil from Norway and elsewhere. I do not care a rap whether the Senator is proposing to change something, or to perpetuate an evil; the result is the same.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, that was not the point, as the Senator must know. He stated there was proposed an increase of something more than 200 percent. The Senator from Georgia showed that no increase whatever is proposed. Now the Senator from New York says he does not care. I think he does care whether or not he makes an accurate statement on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, the Senator from North Carolina is attempting to perpetuate the processing tax, is he not?

Mr. BAILEY. We are undertaking to perpetuate precisely the tax passed in 1934, and that, I regret to say, but I say it most respectfully and courteously, contradicts directly the statement made by the Senator from New York that we are proposing an increase of over 200 percent. I wish to say for the Senator that I really think he does care whether or not he makes an accurate statement on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. COPELAND. Very well. Assuming I did make an inaccurate statement, so far as the technical point is concerned, I still insist it does not matter to the average man whether or not my statement is correct, for the fact remains that with a 6 cents a gallon tariff on whale oil and 3 cents a pound processing tax, or excise tax, call it by what name you please, there is a tariff of over 200 percent upon that product, and, as a result of that, the trade of the United States with European countries and countries adjacent to Canada is being hurt.

Mr. President, I am going back now to talk to my friends at home. I represent a State which stands eighth in agriculture in this country. It is a great dairy State. I know something about its activities in that field, because for many years I was in an official position where it was my duty to know the quality of the milk and cream supplied to the market of New York, and the health department had supervision of the creameries. There are 100,000 dairy farmers in my State. The Senators from Wisconsin have in their State larger numbers of dairy farmers who have butter to ship and butter to sell.

New York is not a great pork-producing State; nevertheless, we produce some lard, some of which is sent abroad; and let me say to my friends on the farms of New York that it is proposed here to perpetuate an economic theory which has resulted in a decline in the demand for the butter produced on New York farms and for the lard which comes from New York farms.

What is true of the State of New York is true of every farming State, and I say to my friends from New York that they have merely to walk through the corridors of this Capitol to get the sulphurous fumes of hell, from the lobbying and the log-rolling going on in the Capitol with reference to this particular item. There is a coalition between the fish industry and farm leaders. I am ashamed of the American Farm Bureau Federation and of the Grange in their choice of leaders.

Mr. President, this is an unholy alliance. Advantage is being taken of an opportunity to place a prohibitive tariff upon certain products, including the one of which I am speaking, and the farm leaders are in constant contact with the fish leaders to force upon the Congress and upon the country a prohibitive tariff of this sort.

I want my friends on the farms of New York, from Niagara Falls to Suffern, on every farm in my great State, to know that there is, in effect, a conspiracy here on the part of the official leaders of farm groups, not between the members of those great farm groups who are interested in what is going on, but a conspiracy, a combination, between the fish dealers, who were here in numbers, swarming like bees, during the Smoot-Hawley tariff discussions, coming here to find ways of increasing the tariff upon every sort of fish oil.

I have nothing to say about the other parts of this pernicious amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. May I ask how much revenue is involved in the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York?

Mr. COPELAND. I cannot answer the Senator at the moment.

Mr. GEORGE. The total revenue, under the whole oil section, amounts to an increase of probably $10,000,000. But that is not by virtue of increased rates; it is by virtue of stopping up gaps in the existing tax on the same oil.

Mr. ROBINSON. Does the amendment of the Senator from New York relate only to whale oil?

Mr. GEORGE. It relates only to one oil out of an innumerable group of oils.

Mr. ROBINSON. Does the Senator from Georgia know, or can any other Senator inform us, how much revenue is involved in this particular amendment?

Mr. GEORGE. I am not able to answer the Senator. I can only say that I am more or less familiar with the oil schedules in the tariff act and with these special taxes. The bringing in of one oil tends to break down the whole oil-taxing provision, in that they are so readily interchangeable.

One may be substituted for the other. The particular item of whale oil is not a large item within itself, I think, under any circumstances.

Mr. COPELAND. It amounts to less than half a million dollars.

Mr. GEORGE. I think it is very small.

Mr. COPELAND. For the sake of getting less than half a million dollars, it is proposed to deny to American manufacturers the opportunity to send to Norway the products of our manufacture, and to deny the American farmer the opportunity to send butter and lard abroad.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator what is the assumed advantage professed justifying this tax?

Mr. COPELAND. I am sorry the Senator from North Carolina is not in the Chamber. He would tell the Senator very elaborately that these oils are interchangeable, that fish oils and vegetable oils may be homogenized, and therefore may be interchanged in their uses.

I am not questioning that fact, nor am I asking that all the whale oil brought into the United States should be free of this excise tax. I am asking that all oil which is brought in free of this excise tax shall be denatured, shall be poisoned, so to speak, shall be rendered inedible, so that it cannot be eaten, so that it cannot go into any product of the bakery, cannot be used for shortening, cannot be used for any purpose except for soap making.

The amount is so small, relatively, that it is not worth all the battle, it is not worth all the fight, we are making for it, but to me it is a plain matter of justice, and I perhaps would not be so sure of my ground except for the fact—and let me say this to my friend the able Senator from Illinois—that the position I take is the position of the President of the United States, it is the position of the Secretary of State of the United States, it is the position of the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, it is the position of the Secretary of Commerce of the United States, and it is the position of the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. Practically the entire administrative arm of the Government is in opposition to the proposed tax. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. Does the letter of the Secretary of State deal with any other oils except the whale oil?

Mr. COPELAND. It does not.

Mr. TYDINGS. Just whale oil?

Mr. COPELAND. Just whale oil.

Mr. TYDINGS. And the Secretary of State has pointed out that the economics of this tax would act to the detriment of the United States, judged as a whole?

Mr. COPELAND. Let me answer the Senator in the language of the Secretary, quoting from his letter:

> The exclusion of whale oil has been definitely injurious to our export trade. First of all, the exchange available to Norwegians for the purchase of American goods has been reduced, and for this as well as for sentimental reasons our actual and potential export trade with Norway has been injured. Germany was our second largest market for lard. Norway has been forced to conclude clearing agreements with Germany for the disposition of the whale-oil catch, which our tax made Norway unable to sell here. The greatly increased use of whale oil in Germany for the manufacture of margarine has in part served to reduce our exports of lard to that country from $7,185,000 in 1933 to $1,546,000 in 1934, and to $136,135 in 1935 (11 months). I am not sure that the shift from lard to whale oil for margarine may not lead to a permanent restriction of some part of our German outlet for lard. It is obvious, therefore, that the tax not only has not benefited American agriculture but has served to react adversely upon our export trade with at least two countries, Norway and Germany.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Has the Senator seen fit to point out to the Senate that as a nation we have just recently tried to embark upon a program of agricultural curtailment because we had no market for our surpluses, and that the Federal Treasury has been called upon to pay farmers for not growing grain because of the lack of a market? Has the Senator pointed out that under the pending amendment that market will be still further reduced? And what does all the talk about agricultural tariffs amount to in actually helping the poor farmer when Congress takes the position of still further cutting down his market? We propose to help the farmer through such measures as the Frazier-Lemke bill and other measures designed for his relief. How can he really be helped by such measures if we still further cut down his markets?

Mr. COPELAND. I thank the Senator from the bottom of my heart because he has contributed an argument which I have not used, which had not occurred to me, but he is entirely right about it. We are seeking in every way we can to create means for disposing of our agricultural products. We wish to have a market for our butter and for our lard. Yet we have done a thing which prohibits the exportation of those products. Simply to change the amendment by striking inedible whale oil would make the difference referred to by the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I will say to the Senator from New York that the other day I saw a statement that for the years 1933, 1934, and 1935 our foreign export trade was about $3,000,000,000 under our normal export trade. I will point out to the Senator from New York that that is just the amount of money that we have expended during each one of those years for relief to take care of the unemployed.

May I further point out to the Senator that, as I understand, what helped to bring on the depression was the economic-isolation policy of 12 years which we inherited, and I certainly would be reluctant to see my party embrace the very policy that put the party which originally offered it out of power, and by reason of which the Democratic Party was brought into power.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. In view of the fact that for years we have had a large surplus on the farms, and in view of the fact that that is one of the troublesome questions which now confront us, how can we possibly advance the solution of the farm problem by permitting heavy imports from the agricultural foreign field? How can we reduce the agricultural surpluses of this country in that way?

A few months ago, two boatloads of corn came to this country from the Argentine. They were shipped to Peoria, Ill., and unloaded there. That corn was shipped in, the tariff paid, and it was sold at a profit against any corn the American farmer could possibly produce. How are we going to reduce the surplus produced by the American farmer if we are going to permit the introduction of agricultural products from foreign fields where labor is paid one-third of what it is paid on the American farm? I suppose we all believe in building up foreign trade, but not in the things of which we produce a surplus as in the products of the farm. We are not benefited by reducing acreage at home and increasing acreage abroad.

Mr. COPELAND. Of course the Senator from Idaho is making a general observation. He is not applying it to the particular point in question.

Mr. BORAH. No; I am not. I am talking about the question of imports saving the American farmer.

Mr. COPELAND. I am personally in the fullest degree in favor of the general expression made by the Senator. I do not think it is right that we should permit the free entry into our country from foreign countries of agricultural products which are competitive with the products raised upon our farms, but, of course, that is quite aside from what I am arguing here. My argument about the question now before us is that if we should permit whale oil to come in denatured so that it would not go into any edible product and would not compete with lard and butter for shortening purposes, and so forth, but would be used strictly for making a very cheap soap, then the market abroad, in Norway, and Germany, and elsewhere, where whale oil is now used as the basis for margarine, would be opened to our lard and butter.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. As I understand the interpretation placed upon the amendment by the Senator from New York, supported by the letter of the Secretary of State, if denatured whale oil is allowed to come into this country we will have a corresponding export market for agricultural products in Norway, so that the very pertinent observation made by the Senator from Idaho, namely, that we need a place to sell our surpluses rather than to import agricultural products, would not apply, because in this instance if the economic setups presented by the Senator from New York, and supported by the Secretary of State, are accurate, we would have an export market for agricultural products in Norway in exchange for the importation of whale oil. I think the Senator from New York did not point out that the observation of the Senator from Idaho would not be pertinent to the amendment which he is offering in the respect that I have indicated.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I am very clear in my mind that what we are seeking to do is to create competition for ourselves. We certainly prevent the export of farm products which would be exported if a product from Europe to be used here for inedible purposes were permitted to come in here. By prohibiting its importation we are just creating competition for ourselves. We are destroying our own welfare by that sort of procedure.

Mr. President, we are the largest exporters of butter substitutes in the world—at least we used to be. We used to export in large quantities raw materials such as refined cottonseed oil and edible lard and also edible tallow. But what happened? We put a tax on whale oil which in this country is in no sense a substitute for butter and lard, but which is used, as I have said repeatedly, for the making of margarine and compound lard in Europe. So we have created competition for our own most valuable farm exports, such as lard and cottonseed oil.

I can understand why it is that the support for the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina comes largely from the cotton States. Yet there is not a thing in it, so far as whale oil is concerned, that is of the slightest value to the cotton farmer. We have forced whale oil to be used in Europe, by what we have done, as a raw material for making margarine, and so we have frozen out our own exports of edible oils and fats. We did more than that. By putting a tax on whale oil we depressed the butter price of the world to such extent that cheap butter could be shipped to this country and has been shipped to this country in competition with our own butter.

The price of an article depends upon the demand for it, and we have cut off the demand for American butter in Norway and Germany and Newfoundland and probably in other countries. Therefore, the price of butter has been decreased in the export market.

If we could bring in denatured whale oil to be used here for soap making, we would immediately increase the demand abroad for lard and butter. I am not asking that the tax on whale oil for edible use be repealed, but I think we never should have had a tax upon inedible whale oil. We ought to encourage the importation of this oil into this country for inedible use, so that it can be used in our soap kettles and as a part of compounded marine lubricating oils. For every barrel of oil we import to this country for inedible use we create a market abroad for our own products, which are higher priced.

I am sorry that the farm organizations have been misled in this matter. They have not had an opportunity to study it and see what its effect may be. I would not stand on my feet and argue as I have here—uselessly, I fear—and take the chance of incurring the enmity of my friends from the farming sections of my State if I were not confident that a study of this matter will bring convictions to them, as it has to me, that this proposal has in it more than the destruction of the butter industry of New York.

Cheap tallow and fish-oil producers ask for this protection, but the farm organizations ought to be aware of the fact that they are creating competition for themselves and shutting out their own export markets if they attempt to shut out whale oil from this country where it can be used inedibly.

Mr. President, we have a great Department of Agriculture, employing experts in every line relating to agriculture. That Department has made a thorough study of this problem. I dislike to take the time of the Senate to incorporate in my remarks the statement of the Secretary of Agriculture, but, Mr. President, I am so intensely interested in this subject, and so eager that it should have fair treatment, that I impose upon the Senate as I am doing. Pretty soon Senators will have returned from luncheon, and they may be in a more amiable mood when they return. Perhaps at that time it may be possible to induce the Senator from North Carolina, in the enjoyment and digestion of a good meal, scientifically chosen, to yield to my prayer and permit whale oil to be released from this amendment. I do not see as yet evidence of any yielding on his part. So I am forced to continue.

I have here, Mr. President, a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, dated May 29, 1936. Wishing to be certain that my proposal was a scientific and proper one, I wrote to him, and he replied:

> Reference is made to your letter requesting the opinion of this Department in regard to your bill, S. 4274, the object of which is to repeal the excise tax on whale oil for inedible use.
> This Department is of the opinion that little benefit accrues to American agriculture from the excise tax on imported whale oil, particularly in view of the relative low duty on imported inedible tallow, which is used for similar purposes.

Mr. President, wishing to find a reference to a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury——

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Utah is interrupting the able Senator from New York, and so I hope that he will not be charged with any delay. I am seeking certain information, and do not want it to appear that there is a hiatus in the proceedings of this august body.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I will make reference in a moment to the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, which I quoted yesterday. If the Senator from Utah will do me the honor of looking in the RECORD, he will see that I made reference to certain members of the Cabinet and to the President about the particular matter under discussion. I will have to refer to it in a moment, if I may, and enlarge upon it. A direct reference to it, however, is found in the RECORD.

Perhaps the Senator from Utah will be good enough to scan this letter to see if it is the one in which the reference is made to which he has referred [handing letter to Mr. KING], but, anyway, if that is not the particular one, it is found in the RECORD in one of the letters which I read from the Secretary of State.

Mr. President, I was referring to a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture regarding this particular matter. The Department of Agriculture, which was organized and officially established for the benefit of the farmers of America, is opposed to the provision in the committee amendment, as is shown by this language, which I repeat:

> This Department is of the opinion that little benefit accrues to American agriculture from the excise tax on imported whale oil, particularly in view of the relatively low rate of duty on imported inedible tallow which is used for similar purposes. This Department also feels—

May I ask the experts of the Treasury Department if it is a fact that, as compared with whale oil, the tax on inedible tallow is very much lower?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I do not see any of the Treasury experts on the floor at the moment.

Mr. COPELAND. Well, I must assume that it is correct; otherwise the Secretary of Agriculture would not say—

This Department is of the opinion that little benefit accrues to American agriculture through the excise tax on imported whale oil, particularly in view of the relatively low rate of duty on imported inedible tallow which is used for similar purposes.

Why should they not be on the same plane of equality? If there is a lower rate on inedible tallow, why should there not be a lower rate on inedible whale oil?

Now, to continue the quotation from the letter of the Secretary of Agriculture:

The Department also feels that the tax may actually be harmful to some branches of agriculture—

"May actually be harmful to some branches of agriculture"— in that it tends to divert Norwegian whale oil into edible channels in countries which have in the past taken large quantities of American lard.

Of course, I have enlarged upon that.

The salient facts in regard to the significance of an excise tax on imported whale oil, as viewed by this Department, are as follows:

1. Whale oil is used in large quantities in Europe for making edible products, competing with butter and lard, but in the United States it is used almost exclusively in soap making, with no prospect of any change in such use in the near future.

I want to say at that point to my farmer friends in New York that the amendment as reported by the committee increases the cost of the plain soap used in the farm homes and increases the cost of the linoleum upon the kitchen floor in the farm homes.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not desire to prolong the debate, but I should like to point out to the Senator that I have received about an equal number of telegrams from Maryland on each side of this question. The statements of those who oppose the amendment seem to me to be very pertinent. I should like to read one or two of them. One of them says that causing higher soap prices will, of course, increase the cost of laundry work.

Another one says that increasing the cost of paints will add to the cost of painting all the houses in America.

Here is one from the Continental Can Co. which says increasing the cost of these oils will increase the cost of can containers and therefore not only increase the cost of the canned goods but also the cost to the farmer proportionately of the things that go into the can.

I point those three things out to the Senator from New York as being worthy of comment.

In this connection, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a number of communications I have received on this subject.

There being no objection, the communications were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BALTIMORE, MD., May 21, 1936.

Senator MILLARD E. TYDINGS,
Washington, D. C.:

The added tax to perilla, tung, and hempseed oils as suggested by Senator BAILEY's amendment would add to the cost of painting the homes in the United States that have been so long unpainted. This is a great injustice to the small-home owners.

H. J. GETTEMULLER & Co.

BALTIMORE, MD., May 21, 1936.

Senator MILLARD E. TYDINGS,
The Senate:

Our association advises the Senate is considering a tax on fixed drying oils such as imported tung and perilla; this would be unfair and outrageous and wish you would exert every effort against it. Please wire immediately our expense what you are going to do about it.

MILTON D. SWARTZ FARBOIL PAINT CO.

BALTIMORE, MD., May 28, 1936.

Senator MILLARD E. TYDINGS,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

The Bailey amendment proposing an excise tax of 3 cents per pound on palm oil will seriously burden tin-plate products and does not, in our opinion, compete with American agriculture. We strongly urge you vote against this proposed tax.

CROWN CORK & SEAL CO., INC.

BALTIMORE, MD., May 25, 1936.

Senator MILLARD TYDINGS:

Respectfully request your opposition to Bailey amendment to tax bill increasing excise taxes on tallow and inedible olive oil. Passage will bring heavy increase living expenses to housewife, either by causing higher soap prices or higher prices for laundry service.

ELITE LAUNDRY CO.

SALISBURY, MD., May 23, 1936.

Senator HARRISON,
Chairman, Finance Committee, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Proposed amendment by Senator BAILEY to H. R. 12395 providing for import tax on fish scrap will increase cost of fertilizer and feed to farmers. We use 2,000 tons fish scrap annually in fertilizer. This tax would add $25,000 to cost of same. We respectfully urge you to oppose this amendment.

Hon. MILLARD E. TYDINGS, M. C.,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: May we ask that you vote against and use your influence to defeat the amendment of Senator BAILEY to the pending revenue bill to place a tax of 4½ cents per pound on imported perilla, tung, and hempseed oils. Such a tax would be detrimental to the entire paint industry of the country (manufacturer, jobber, dealer, and painter) and would be a penalty on and a drawback to the movement for better-painted property which the industry and the Federal Government has spent huge sums to encourage as a means toward reemployment and better housing.

Very truly yours,

HANLINE BROS.,

Senator MILLARD F. TYDINGS,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:

Having two plants in Maryland, we earnestly request your immediate intervention and assistance in preventing tax on palm oil for use in manufacture of tin plate as provided in Senator BAILEY's amendment to tax bill, H. R. 12395, now before the Senate Finance Committee. No domestic oil suitable as substitute for palm oil in manufacture of tin plate. Tax will not protect but rather harm domestic industry. Palm oil tax for tin-plate manufacture will increase burden on farm products and obviously on consumers of canned food products.

Senator MILLARD E. TYDINGS,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: May we respectfully urge the importance in blocking the proposed tax on perilla and china wood tung oils, which bill, we understand, has been introduced by Senator BAILEY.

Such tax would lay undue hardship on this industry and many other important industries depending upon a supply of these oils.

The situation covering the tung-oil market for the past several years has been thoroughly perplexing in itself, without adding other encumbrances which might tend to make the use of the oil thoroughly unprofitable and thereby drastically reduce its importation.

Yours truly,

THE H. B. DAVIS CO.,

Hon. MILLARD E. TYDINGS,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We are asking you to vote against the additional tax on perilla, tung, and hempseed oils as included in the amendment to the pending revenue bill introduced by Senator BAILEY. We understand this amendment, if approved, would place a tax of 4½ cents per pound on these oils.

It would be a very serious matter if this additional tax were put upon these oils at this time. If this tax is approved, it would result in a considerable advance in price of the high-gloss paint products, and would tend to increase the use of cheaper grades of paint. This would result in a decreased use of these oils and defeat the purpose of securing increased revenue.

The paint industry is just emerging from a very unprofitable period, and we do not think our industry should be burdened with any additional taxes at this time. The competition from the makers of cheap paints has been a very unfortunate condition existing during the depression, and any additional taxes added to the better grades of paint at this time would only result to the benefit of the makers of the cheaper products. We are asking that you vote against the increased tax as mentioned above, and we thank you in advance for your attention in the matter.

Yours truly,

THE HIRSHBERG PAINT CO.,
MORTON M. GOLDSMITH, Secretary-Treasurer.

BALTIMORE, MD., May 27, 1936.

Senator MILLARD E. TYDINGS,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In reference to the proposed tax on perilla and wood oil, introduced by Senator BAILEY, this tax would certainly be a hardship on every paint manufacturer in this country.

This tax is absolutely uncalled for, and it would result in imposing a tremendous hardship on the users of these products and favor a few individual companies who are manufacturers of linseed oil.

We certainly trust that you will vote against this amendment, and we believe our sentiments will be expressed by every manufacturer of paints, varnishes, and lacquers; also, every user of oil, such as linoleum and floor-covering manufacturers.

For your own information, the tax of 4½ cents per pound would cause the Government to lose more money in curtailing the uses of paint and varnish products than the amount of money derived from the tax. In all probability it would cause a curtailment in the manufacture of paint, which would cause manufacturers to lay off some of their help. This is a situation which is exactly opposite to what should be done—to put people back to work.

Yours very truly,

THE WHITE CO.,

Hon. MILLARD E. TYDINGS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We understand that Congressman J. W. BAILEY has introduced an amendment to the Revenue Act of 1936 providing an excise tax on fish oil and fish meal.

We understand from some of our customers who are running so-called fish factories, who are engaged in what is otherwise known as the menhaden industry, have had a very precarious existence during the past 8 or 10 years, and that conditions with them are none too good at this time, and that many of them could not survive if this amendment went into effect.

We therefore most earnestly ask your attention in this matter, and your efforts to defeat this amendment.

Yours very truly,

EGERTON BROS.,
STUART EGERTON.

BALTIMORE, January 13, 1936.

Senator MILLARD E. TYDINGS,
Baltimore Trust Building, Baltimore, Md.

DEAR SENATOR: We understand that at the coming session of Congress an effort will be made to obtain a relief from the excise tax of 3 cents per pound on soap-making oils and fats, created by the November 1934 revenue bill.

The laundries of this country represent one of the most stable means of employment there is in industry and accordingly render to the Nation a very stabilized effect. This industry is subjected to severe external competition due to the nature of our work, being such that under the stress of circumstances this work can be performed by those in the homes, and to the fact that prices of supplies have advanced and are advancing continually. The price of soap alone has advanced about 36 percent. These factors do not benefit an industry which is one of the most dependable sources of steady employment of our citizens.

The burden of this tax has added to the difficulty experienced by every man, woman, and child of the United States in making their income cover expenses and having a small amount remaining for emergencies. Cleanliness is part of our national pride and prerogative. In spite of the recent theories, it is still necessary that individuals and organizations of any kind or service be able to accumulate a surplus and reserve necessary to care for unexpected contingencies and obsolescences which come to individuals as well as organizations. Beyond these requirements, necessary reserves and surpluses are needed for the further development of our country, its interests, and our standards of living.

This tax on coconut oil and fat has not helped the farmer in that the United States farmers do not produce enough tallow to anywhere nearly supply our Nation's demand for this product.

We cannot see where this tax has benefited anyone except to swell the Government funds and further encourage the excessive spending and wasteful methods that have been and are being pursued.

Your attention to this particular tax and to the general condition referred to above is urged; and as your constituents, we request that you use your entire effort to the elimination of this onerous and unreasonable impost.

Very truly yours,

SANITARY LAUNDRY CO.,
EDWARD L. RICH, Jr., President.

CLAIBORNE ANNAPOLIS FERRY CO.,
Annapolis, Md., April 16, 1936.

Hon. M. E. TYDINGS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR TYDINGS: There has been referred to the Committee on Ways and Means in the House, a tax bill imposing a tax of 1 cent per gallon on fuel oil, H. R. 12161.

Useless to tell you that this is ridiculous and vicious as it would increase the fuel cost on our ferry boats over 22½ percent. Why wouldn't they also include a tax of $2.50 per ton on coal and $2 per cord on cordwood? One is about as absurd as the other.

I am sure you will do all in your power to help kill this vicious piece of legislation.

With very best wishes and kindest regards, please believe me,

Yours very truly,

B. F. SHERMAN.

Mr. COPELAND. Of course, the statements referred to by the Senator from Maryland are true. Every article into the manufacture of which these oils enter will be affected. The cost of paint, when the farmers want to paint their kitchen floors, if they do not use linoleum, will necessarily be increased. The correspondents of the Senator from Maryland are right about it.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President——

Mr. COPELAND. I yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not desire to prolong the debate. Of course, it is wholly unnecessary to debate the question longer. If it will increase the cost by a very small fraction of 1 percent, it will be because the importers are now evading the tax. We have not increased the tax by one tittle. We have simply stopped up some loopholes.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, from my youth I have been familiar with the arguments of the Republican Party that the manufacturer absorbs the tax. The people cannot be fooled any more by that argument. Every time a tariff tax is imposed, every time the tariff rates are increased, every time an excise tax is imposed, while it may be figured that as to one little can of paint it is just a fraction of a cent, yet in the long run the American people pay the entire bill.

I assume the Democrats next fall, when they are in the campaign, will tell about how much better the Democrats are than the Republicans. I am going to be honest with my constituents, as I always try to be. I am going to tell them that we are not any better than the Republicans and that we are getting worse. [Laughter.] I do not want anyone to imagine the Democrats will have a walkaway next fall. They will have no walkaway in the sections of the country with which I am familiar.

Let us not fool ourselves about that matter. Sometimes I am foolhardy enough to say in public what I hear said in private. I know the doubts which are in the hearts of many Democrats about the outcome of the election. I am not going to try to fool the American people or the Democratic Party. But what excuse have we to exist as a party if we are going to do exactly as those on the other side of the aisle have done? We are not a bit better, generally speaking, and as regards this particular amendment we are a little worse, because when we got through with the Smoot-Hawley tax bill, that pernicious document which brought about a combination of thinking Democrats, we had a 20-percent tariff on whale oil. Now the Democrats have come into office and we have 205-percent tariff on the same commodity. We are just 10 times as bad as the Republicans in this respect. I suggest to Senators that they tell their constituents that next fall when they are making speeches.

It has been argued by Senators that cottonseed oil and some other oils will be benefited. The Secretary of Agriculture does not take that view. Speaking about whale oil he said:

> It is not generally regarded as competitive with domestic vegetable oils, and forms only a small percentage of the total fats used in soap making, the figures normally varying between 3 and 4 percent thereof.

How is that going to benefit cottonseed oil? These are the words of the official representatives of the farmers of America, and I am glad to be numbered, by reason of heredity and residence, with the farmers of America.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I was interrupted and did not hear the source of what the Senator just read. From what did he read?

Mr. COPELAND. I am reading from the letter of the Secretary of Agriculture written to me under date of May 29, a strong letter opposing the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] and approving the idea of taking the excise tax off of whale oil because of the benefits which would accrue to the farmer by the removal of that tax. I have been trying to make an argument, borne out by the testimony of the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Secretary of Commerce, as well as the Secretary of Agriculture, whose letter I am reading, that the use of whale oil in Norway and in Germany as a basis for margarine has prevented the export from the United States of butter and lard.

Let me quote further, and I remind the Senators again that I am quoting the words of the Secretary of Agriculture:

Placing an excise tax of 3 cents a pound on whale oil, in addition to the tariff of 6 cents per gallon (approximately 0.8 cent per pound, has caused imports to fall to half the normal tonnage, the main reason being the failure to place a similar excise on inedible tallow, which is substitutible therefor.

Has the Senator from North Carolina provided a tax on inedible tallow? That good meal which I hoped might have its effect apparently has failed me.

I continue to read from the letter of the Secretary of Agriculture. I am glad to have it go into the RECORD. I believe that my agricultural constituents have faith enough in me to believe that I would not try to fool them. My judgment is there will be one State in the Union which will not be so enthusiastic about these conspiracies between the alleged leaders of farm groups and the fish industry. Go out in the corridor and smell the sulphur of these unholy alliances between a group seeking to give themselves protection against every other part of the world and then to fool the leaders of farm groups and to have the farm industry, which is invincible, come here and further a scheme for protecting fish oils. When the farmers of America know how frequently they are outwitted and exploited by their alleged leaders it will not be so easy for the alleged leaders to put over some of the legislation which is sought to be had and which in no sense would be helpful to agriculture in America.

The third paragraph of the letter of the Secretary of Agriculture reads as follows:

Shutting out whale oil appears to have had little price-raising effect on domestic oils and fats and little effect in increasing the tonnage of domestic products consumed. Its chief effect apparently has been to stimulate imports of inedible tallow.

I can see now the cartoons in the World-Telegram of New York and the Evening Post showing burning tallow dips. Sometime the logrolling which characterizes our legislation will be abolished. The more I see of what goes on in the Capitol the more enthusiastic I am for the law proposed by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] to have lobbyists registered, so that we may know who they are, by whom their salaries are paid, and what it is all about.

Prior to the imposition of the excise tax on whale oil the United States had been importing annually on the average around 50,000,000 pounds of whale oil and but little inedible tallow, usually less than 1,000,000 pounds. In 1934 our imports of whale oil amounted to 15,803,000 pounds, and in 1935 to 20,793,000 pounds. On the other hand, in 1934 imports of inedible tallow rose to nearly 43,000,000 pounds and in 1935 to 146,000,000 pounds.

That is where the trouble is; it is with the inedible tallow. I am talking about whale oil. To bring inedible tallow over here does not help our farmers. We wish to deal with something which will induce the importation into America of a product which may be used in soap making, and thus open a market abroad for our butter and lard. To bring over inedible tallow does not help us at all. Inedible tallow is not eaten even in the old countries; so that has no bearing upon the case.

I continue the quotation:

Rising prices of inedible tallow (from 2.7 cents per pound at Chicago in January 1934 to 4.7 cents in December 1934 and 6 cents in December 1935) created an international price differential sufficient to attract imports, for use in seaboard soap plants, over the tariff duty of one-half cent per pound. This price increase has been due in part to general economic recovery and in part to a shortage of domestic tallow and other fats.

The fourth paragraph of the letter of the Secretary of Agriculture is as follows:

4. The excise tax on imported whale oil, together with that on imports of other oils, was presumably one of the factors contributing to the rise in price of inedible tallow in the summer and fall of 1934.

The tax on whale oil was so great that it could not be brought in; so, instead of bringing whale oil away from Europe, where it is eaten, the importers brought over inedible tallow, which is not eaten anywhere; so it did our farmers no good. It did not reopen a market for farm products.

4. The excise tax on imported whale oil, together with that on imports of other oils, was presumably one of the factors contributing to the rise in price of inedible tallow in the summer and fall of 1934. Evidently, however, it was a minor factor as compared with the marked increase that occurred in the demand for soap-making materials. Total consumption of oils and fats in soap making in 1934 was 1,474,000,000 pounds, as compared with 1,311,000,000 pounds in 1933. Of inedible tallow the consumption was 663,000,000 pounds, as compared with 509,000,000 pounds in 1933. The consumption of whale oil, on the other hand, was 34,000,000 pounds in 1934 as against 45,000,000 pounds in 1933, the decrease being only a fraction of the increase in tallow consumption.

5. So long as the duty on inedible tallow remains at one-half cent a pound, any beneficial effect of the whale-oil tax upon domestic-tallow prices is necessarily confined to whatever part the tax plays in bringing domestic-tallow prices up to a level, relative to foreign prices, at which tallow can be profitably imported.

May I ask the Senater from North Carolina whether inedible tallow is included in his amendment?

Mr. BAILEY. Tallow, both edible and inedible.

Mr. COPELAND. At what rate?

Mr. BAILEY. Four and a half cents a pound.

Mr. COPELAND. The Secretary continues:

After the tallow-importing point had been reached the only effect of the exclusion of whale oil was to foster substitution of imported tallow. From the foregoing it follows that the repeal of the whale-oil tax could not, under existing conditions, have a materially adverse effect upon domestic prices of inedible tallow.

6. In any event, however, any increase in the price of domestic inedible tallow which can possibly be attributed to the whale-oil tax—or, for that matter, any increase that might occur if imports of inedible tallow were excluded—would not be likely to have any important effect on the incomes of the domestic cattle producers. Most of this product is obtained from butcher-shop, hotel, and restaurant offal. The renderers probably pass on to these centers of collection only a moderate part of any price increase received for tallow.

I desire to say to the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] that I have found the reference to the President in the letter of the Secretary of State:

The information which I had gathered during the last session convinced me, as well as the President and the Secretary of Agriculture, that this tax could be removed without injury to American agriculture or dairy interests.

So it is readily seen that the tax of 4½ cents per pound on inedible tallow which the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] now says he has put in his amendment will not profit the cattle industry, because, as the letter of the Secretary of Agriculture says:

The renderers probably pass on to these centers of collection only a moderate part of any price increase received for tallow; since, unless the offal is sold to them, it is merely garbage to be dumped. In turn, revenue received by these stores and restaurants will go only in part to the meat packers, and from them only in part to the farmers.

The poor farmer is always at the little end of the horn. Great benefits are given to the meat packers, but the benefits which reach back to the farmer are so small that he has to stay home from Sunday school to figure out where he gets any. My advice to him is to go to Sunday school and not waste his time attempting to find out what is inevitable—that he is not benefited. He does not get any benefit. It is always some big interest that gets the benefit. In this case the fish-oil interests get the benefit.

When the Smoot-Hawley bill was before us I could hardly get within a mile of my office because of the fish-oil people who were there trying to induce me to change my judgment about it. I told them that I was more interested in the cleanliness of the people, in cheap soap, than I was in the fish industry, important as that is in my State.

Let no one assume for a moment that I have hesitated to take a stand in opposition to the interests of certain selfish groups in my State, as I have done time and time again, and as I shall continue to do regardless of results.

Mr. President, I am glad there is one valiant Senator representing a great farm State who is broad enough to take a national view of a problem. I hope the distinguished Senator from North Carolina is in the same mood he was in when he talked with me this morning. He knows, as the Secretary of Agriculture knows, that this is not in the interest of agriculture.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURKE in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. BAILEY. I do not understand the Senator. He suggests that he had a conversation this morning in which he got the impression——

Mr. COPELAND. I am not speaking of the Senator from North Carolina; I meant the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER]. I beg pardon. I could say nice things about the Senator from North Carolina, but I was looking at and meant for the moment the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER.]

Mr. BAILEY. While I am on my feet, I wish to say, in the plainest language possible, that, so far from knowing that the Secretary of Agriculture is not in sympathy with this, the committee amendment, I know that no one has a right to stand on this floor and say to the contrary.

Mr. COPELAND. Pardon me; what did the Senator from North Carolina say?

Mr. BAILEY. I said that so far from knowing that the Secretary of Agriculture was not in sympathy with the committee amendment, I knew that no one had the right to stand on this floor and say the Secretary was not in sympathy with it.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I do not know anything about what thought the Senator from North Carolina may have, but I am reading a letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, signed with his own name, "H. A. Wallace, Secretary", dated the 29th of May. I have had no conversation with the Secretary of Agriculture about this matter, but I have in his writing the expression of the conviction that he thinks the committee amendment ought not to prevail.

Mr. President, I wish to continue reading from the letter. But first I desire to speak once more about my friend, the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. FRAZIER]. I have tried all of my years in the Senate to help agriculture. I fought as valiantly as I could for the McNary-Haugen bill, and I still believe that that has in it a greater measure of hope for agriculture than any other measure which has been presented. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY], the joint author of the bill, knows that I begged him at the beginning of this session of Congress to reintroduce the bill.

I have tried to stand shoulder to shoulder with the farm group, with the Senator from North Dakota, the Senator from Oregon, and others, in attempting to help agriculture; and I would not be here now taking up this useless task if I did not believe in my soul that what I am talking about is a matter of great concern to the farmers of the United States. This is only one of many things; yet it is one which has to do with the exportation of butter and lard and which has to do with the fixing of the prices of butter and lard in foreign markets.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. MCNARY. I have been impressed by the remarks of the Senator. The Senator is not only a great statesman, but a splendid economist, when he commends again the McNary-Haugen farm-relief bill.

Mr. COPELAND. Joking aside——

Mr. MCNARY. I am not joking.

Mr. COPELAND. I have been very much impressed by the McNary-Haugen bill, and I still believe, just as strongly as when we were working shoulder to shoulder for its enactment years ago, that it has in it greater hope for American agriculture than has any other measure.

Mr. MCNARY. I was speaking most earnestly and sincerely when I commended the Senator. He has been a worker in the ranks for agriculture, and the philosophy of the bill to which he has referred appealed to him, and he has always been interested in that great subject matter.

Mr. COPELAND. I thank the Senator.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator from New York and the Senator from North Carolina whether, in view of the discourse which we have had, they would be willing now to have a quorum called and a vote upon the amendment without further discussion? May I appeal to both of my colleagues whether such a course as that would be proper?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. BAILEY. I am not responsible for whatever another Senator says or how long he speaks, and I cannot be held responsible. I am perfectly willing to have a vote at any time, and I myself have no desire to speak. But I wish it understood that I am speaking only for myself, and I am not responsible for the eloquent remarks of my good friend the Senator from New York, neither their content nor their length.

Mr. KING. I thank the Senator. I hope I will be forgiven for interrupting the address of my friend from New York. Will the Senator from New York consent to the calling of a quorum and a vote upon the amendment?

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I am very much obliged to the Senator from Utah. I know perfectly well that my amendment will be defeated. I think it is rather a strange procedure. Yesterday there were certain exceptions made as to amendments to be taken to conference.

I ask for nothing more than that my amendment be accepted tentatively by the Senate and taken to conference. I was not satisfied and I am not satisfied now to let the matter go by default without expressing my conviction regarding it, especially when that conviction is confirmed by the statement contained in the letter of the Secretary of State, dated January 20, 1936, addressed to Mr. DOUGHTON, chairman of the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives. In that letter the Secretary of State says the question was discussed by the President. My conviction is also confirmed by the statement of the Secretary of Agriculture in his letter.

Mr. President, of course, I have met many defeats. I may not be defeated now. I am here to say to the farmers of America and to the fishermen, too, that my amendment should be accepted by the committee and taken to conference. There the experts can be brought in. I was given a hearing of about 10 minutes before the committee. I left before the matter was considered by it. An outsider appearing before the committee is at great disadvantage. I had no opportunity to argue or to answer questions which might have been raised concerning the amendment. I have tried on the floor to have consideration given which I could not get in the committee. However, I could not blame the committee. I know how busy its members are, and how pressed they are. They made a very bad bill better, but still it is so bad that I hope it will not pass.

However, as regards the amendment in question, my last request of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] is, Will he permit my amendment to go to conference?

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I cannot agree to that. I am perfectly willing to agree to have a vote on the merits of the proposal.

Mr. COPELAND. Very well. I cannot resist the appeal of the acting chairman of the committee. I know that time is pressing. I desire it understood, however, that I have not attempted to filibuster either against the amendment or against the bill. I have tried earnestly to impress upon the Senate, and through the Senate upon the country, the inequity of the committee amendment.

Now, Mr. President, I shall walk out in the corridors and smell the sulphur that comes from the burning of hell, because all conspiracies against the welfare of the people are just as devilish as anything that can come from hell. The provision we have been discussing which has been incorporated in the bill by the committee is not right. It is an imposition upon the farmers of America. It is an imposition upon the manufacturers of America. It does away with international harmony and amity between our country and a country which has the same high standards of living that we have, the great country of Norway, one of the great countries of the earth. We are not dealing with a country having oriental labor; we are not dealing with a country employing slave labor or serf labor. Norway is a country of free people, a people as free as are we. Through the imposition of this tax we seek to break up those relationships which ought to continue to the mutual advantage of our two countries.

Mr. President, I leave myself in the hands of the chairman of the committee to do as he pleases.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I think the suggestion which I made a moment ago requires in good faith that I request a quorum call before asking for a vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Clark	La Follette	Reynolds
Austin	Coolidge	Lewis	Robinson
Bachman	Copeland	Loftin	Russell

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

AMENDMENT OF PUBLIC PRINTING ACTS

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3440) to amend certain acts relating to public printing and binding, and the distribution of public documents and acts amendatory thereof.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in all of the House amendments except amendments numbered 7, 12, 14, 16, and 44; that the Senate insist upon its disagreement to those amendments, ask for a conference with the House thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, may I inquire the nature of the request?

Mr. HAYDEN. My request is to concur in the amendments of the House to a bill amending certain acts relating to public printing and binding, except amendments numbered 7, 12, 14, 16, and 44, which relate to the number of copies of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Arizona.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. FLETCHER, and Mr. VANDENBERG conferees on the part of the Senate.

INTERNAL-REVENUE TAXATION

The Senate resumed consideration of the bill (H. R. 12395) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New York [Mr. COPELAND] to the committee amendment. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment, on page 267, line 15, it is proposed to strike out "Whale oil (except sperm oil)"; and, on the same page, line 17, after "marine animal oil", it is proposed to insert "except denatured whale oil for inedible use and except sperm oil."

Mr. COPELAND. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. McNARY (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON]. Not knowing how he would vote, if present, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DAVIS. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LOGAN]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. NYE], and will vote. I vote "nay."

So Mr. COPELAND'S amendment to the amendment of the committee was rejected.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, as a final word, by way of obituary on the amendment to the amendment of the committee, I wish to call attention to the fact that, with the exception of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. COUZENS], not a single Republican voted to cut down this tax. I wish to call further attention to the fact, so that Senators may use it in their campaigns next fall, that today the Democrats of the Senate, with the exception of ten, united with the Republicans in voting for the highest tariff that, so far as I know, was ever placed upon a single article in a tariff law. I congratulate my colleagues. I hope that next fall they will have a glorious time in defending a vote for a tax of 205 percent upon a product which, under the terms of the committee amendment, will not be permitted to come into the country because of the embargo placed upon it, and which, of course, is going to deprive American farmers of a market for butter and lard. I congratulate my colleagues upon this magnificent record, and I hope that they will have a "bully" time of it next fall.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I listened yesterday with very great interest and almost entire agreement to the very able and eloquent remarks of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] until he reached his conclusion. I know that the farmers of America have no better friend than he and that his only purpose is to benefit the farmer. I agree as to the purpose but disagree as to the effect of his amendment. His statement of the premise for the deplorable situation of the farmer in America, the causes of it, and the conditions which have led up to it, was absolutely unanswerable, and I agreed with every word he said until he began to apply the remedy. I sincerely hope that the predictions of the Senator from North Carolina of an organized movement of the farmers which will compel a fair adjustment between the prohibitive tariff for industry and the free market for agriculture may soon come to pass. I do not believe that it can come about through such sops to agriculture as is contained in the pending amendment.

I agree entirely with the Senator from North Carolina that the condition of the farmer in America today is due to the high protective tariff, the prohibitive tariff as it exists in most instances. Today that tariff system has barred the farmer of the United States from the markets of the world; it has compelled him to keep his surpluses; it has compelled him to produce for less than cost; it has compelled him to buy everything he has to buy in a protected market and to sell everything he has to sell in a free market; it has compelled him to pay a tax on everything he has to buy and to sell everything he has to sell in a market regulated by world conditions.

I agreed with everything the Senator said up to the point of his conclusion. The Senator concluded finally that the remedy for the condition is to apply the protective-tariff system or the equivalent of the protective-tariff system to agricultural conditions.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MOORE in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. CLARK. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. BAILEY. I am not undertaking to controvert what the Senator has said. I merely wish to say that, there being a tariff—and there is one—my contention is that so long as there shall be one it is indispensable that the farmers should have equality under it. I believe the Senator from Missouri will agree with me about that.

Mr. CLARK. Of course, the objection to the theory advanced by the Senator from North Carolina is the historic fact that the only way in which the prohibitive tariff system has been imposed on the country, the only way in which the farmers of the United States have been induced to endure through the years of our existence such a system as that which pauperizes them and impoverishes them, has been that the protected interests occasionally threw some little bait to them, some little concession such as this, to induce them to endure the system. The remedy of the whole condition is not to bait the farmers along with such infinitesimal concessions as this but to obviate the condition from which they are suffering by reducing the tariff duties.

I freely agree that by our own acts, by the action of the United States Government, in causing retaliatory tariffs by other nations, we have created a situation throughout the world which we cannot correct by ourselves. Therefore the Congress very properly entered upon a system of reciprocal-trade agreements for the purpose of undoing, so far as may be, the mischief which we ourselves had created throughout the world by our own arrogant, persistent enactment of prohibitive tariff laws. The United States Government itself is essentially responsible for the system of retaliatory tariffs that today exists throughout the world.

The proposal of the Senator from North Carolina that the farmer ought not to be placed in a different situation from the industrialist is absolutely unanswerable. To my mind, however, there is very great danger if, instead of starting at the root of the evil and reducing the prohibitive system of tariffs, we start in again on the old buncombe game, which was never anything except bait to catch gudgeons, we try to fool the farmer by saying, "All right; we have this prohibitive tariff system, and we will give you a little bite of your own."

The tariff on agricultural commodities can never be made effective as an offset to the taxes the farmer has to pay on everything he has to buy through the medium of a prohibitive tariff. We had an illustration in very recent years which to my mind proved completely the case, when in the darkest days of the Hoover depression, with a tariff of 42 cents a bushel on wheat, wheat sold in western Kansas for 23 cents a bushel. That showed the absolute lack of protection of the tariff tax to the farmer.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. CLARK. I yield.

Mr. BAILEY. Agreeing to the Senator's proposition, is that a reason why we should not give the farmer all we can give him while the tariff exists?

Mr. CLARK. I am in favor of cutting down the tariff instead of throwing out this bait, this sop, to the farmer to mislead him, with very little advantage to him, into longer enduring the system under which he has been suffering.

Mr. BAILEY. That is not the proposition at all.

Mr. CLARK. That is the proposition so far as I am concerned.

Mr. BAILEY. It is not in this bill. It is not before the Senate.

Mr. CLARK. No; it is not before the Senate now.

Mr. BAILEY. Let us come to the point. Agreeing to what the Senator has said to the effect that we could never compensate the farmer in the matter of tariffs, as compared with the tariffs enjoyed by others, is that a good reason why we should not undertake to compensate the farmer insofar as we can?

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I stated just a moment ago that my objection to the proposal of the Senator from North Carolina is that it involves a recognition, a condonation, an acceptance of the whole prohibitive tariff system which has brought the American farmer to his present sorry pass.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. CLARK. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. Is it not admitted that we have given up the fight and that the only relief the farmer can get is, as the Senator said, a little sop which is thrown out to him? Whenever we address ourselves to a real earnest effort to relieve the burden of the consumer, the farmer, by adjusting the tariff, then he may get the relief to which he is entitled. But we are politically afraid of it. That is a matter with reference to which we have not the courage to stand on our own platform.

Mr. CLARK. I agree entirely with what the Senator from South Carolina has said. I stand on my own personal platform, and the national platform of 1932 on which I ran. If I were willing, as a Senator sworn on my oath, to abandon the traditional attitude of the Democratic Party and accept a prohibitive tariff system as an accomplished fact, then I would be in favor of imposing as high duties on agricultural products as anyone might suggest. But I am not willing to abandon that position. I am not willing to admit the prohibitive tariff system is fastened irretrievably upon the Government of the United States. Every time we pass such a measure or adopt such a provision as the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] proposes, we have fastened just that much more firmly upon the necks of the farmers of the United States, the consumers of the United States, the highly indefensible prohibitive tariff tax system, because that is all it is. What has ruined the farmer in America is the payment of the tariff taxes imposed on everything he has had to buy.

GRANT ANDERSON

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4116) for the relief of Grant Anderson, which were, on page 1, line 7, to strike out "such sum representing" and insert "in full satisfaction of his claim against the United States for"; and on page 2, line 9, after "receipts", to insert a colon and—

Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Mr. BULOW. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

HOMER BRETT

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4140) for the relief of Homer Brett, Esq., American consul at Rotterdam, Netherlands, as a result of money stolen from the safe of the American consulate, which were to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Homer Brett, American consul at Rotterdam, Netherlands, the sum of $116.58 in full settlement of his claim against the United States for the unrecovered amount of Government funds stolen from the safe of the American consulate at Rotterdam, Netherlands, on the night of September 27, 1935: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

And to amend the title so as to read: "An act for the relief of Homer Brett, American consul at Rotterdam, Netherlands."

Mr. PITTMAN. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

ADDITIONAL DISTRICT JUDGE, NORTHERN AND SOUTHERN DISTRICTS OF WEST VIRGINIA

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2456) to provide for the appointment of an additional district judge for the northern and southern districts of West Virginia.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House, ask for a conference with the House thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. NEELY, Mr. HATCH, and Mr. AUSTIN conferees on the part of the Senate.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

CHESTER ROBEY BENDER

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, there is on the desk the nomination of a young man as ensign in the Coast Guard. The other day the Senate approved the list of nominations for ensigns, but inadvertently the Treasury Department omitted one name. I ask unanimous consent that, as in executive session, the nomination of Chester Robey Bender be confirmed, and the President notified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination will be read.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Chester Robey Bender to be ensign in the Coast Guard of the United States, to rank as such from June 8, 1936.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed; and, without objection, the President will be notified.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Megill, one of its clerks, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12624) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1936, and prior fiscal years, to provide supplemental appropriations for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1936, and June 30, 1937, and for other purposes, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. BUCHANAN, Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, Mr. OLIVER, Mr. WOODRUM, Mr. BOYLAN, Mr. CANNON of Missouri, Mr. TABER, Mr. BACON, and Mr. THURSTON were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5730) to amend section 3 (b) of an act entitled "An act to establish the composition of the United States Navy with respect to the categories of vessels limited by the treaties signed at Washington, February 6, 1922, and at London, April 22, 1930, at the limits prescribed by those treaties; to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels; and for other purposes", approved March 27, 1934, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. VINSON of Georgia, Mr. DREWRY, and Mr. DARROW were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3071) providing for the placing of improvements on the areas between the shore and bulkhead lines in rivers and harbors.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3531) to amend the act entitled "An act for the control of floods of the Mississippi River and its tributaries, and for other purposes", approved May 15, 1928.

The message further announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 588) for the designation of certain streets or avenues in the Mall as Ohio, Missouri, Oklahoma, and Maine Avenues, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled bill (S. 4354) to authorize the attendance of the Marine Band at the Arkansas Centennial Celebration, at Little Rock, Ark.; the Texas Centennial, at Dallas, Tex.; and the National Confederate Reunion, at Shreveport, La., between the dates from June 6 to June 16, 1936, inclusive, and it was signed by the Vice President.

INTERNAL-REVENUE TAXATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12395) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I desire to offer two amendments to the oil provision. They are what might be called corrective amendments. To them I invite the attention of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY].

On page 267, at the end of line 24, after the word "foregoing", I propose to insert the words "or from linseed oil", so the phrase would read:

> Olive oil and sesame oil, provided for in paragraph 1732 of the Tariff Act of 1930, sunflower oil, rapeseed oil, kapoc oil, hempseed oil, fatty acids derived from any of the foregoing or from linseed oil, and salts of any of the foregoing.

Linseed oil is in the tariff act, but not in this bill.

Then, on page 268, in line 14——

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I suggest that the Senate dispose of one amendment at a time.

Mr. FRAZIER. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The clerk read as follows:

> On page 267, line 24, after the word "foregoing", it is proposed to insert the word "or from linseed oil", so the phrase would read:
> "Olive oil and sesame oil, provided for in paragraph 1732 of the Tariff Act of 1930, sunflower oil, rapeseed oil, kapok oil, hempseed oil, fatty acids derived from any of the foregoing or from linseed oil, and salts of any of the foregoing."

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, linseed oil is not covered in any additional tax, but now the Senator from North Dakota proposes to cover fatty acids derived from it, although there is no increase in the linseed-oil tax.

Mr. FRAZIER. Fatty acids are included.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes; but not those derived from linseed oil.

Mr. FRAZIER. I know that very well, but there is a tax now on linseed oil of the same amount, 4½ cents a pound, and fatty acids are derived from linseed oil. They are being imported from Holland in increasing amounts.

Mr. GEORGE. What is the tax?

Mr. FRAZIER. There is none on fatty acids from linseed oil, but 4½ cents a pound on linseed oil is included in the tariff act.

Mr. GEORGE. Is that the tariff?

Mr. FRAZIER. Yes.

Mr. GEORGE. But not in any special tax?

Mr. FRAZIER. No.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, this is simply an indirect effort to raise the tariff, and the committee has steadfastly refused to raise tariff duties.

Mr. FRAZIER. I do not think it would raise the tariff. It would be only fair, unless fatty acids are included among the oils covered by the bill that come in competition with linseed oil, to include linseed oil.

Mr. GEORGE. This section is intended to stop up loopholes in the law. Some of these oils are covered in the Tariff Act and some are on the free list, but all oil is subjected here to an additional tax. To impose a tax upon a derivative of linseed oil, upon which there is no special tax, but only a tariff, is necessarily an effort to raise the tariff by indirection. There may be merit in the Senator's proposal, but if the committee opens the bill to tariff amendments, we will be here not only today, not only this week, not only to the end of next week, but through all of July, all of August, and into September and probably October. For that reason, having temporary charge of the bill, I oppose the amendment, and am willing to have a vote upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment on page 268, to insert in line 14, after the word "hempseed" and the comma, the words "perilla seed" and a comma.

Perilla seed was included yesterday in an amendment to this particular amendment on oil; and perilla-seed oil should also be included in the latter part of the amendment, to make it harmonize with the first part of the amendment, including perilla oil.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, in my judgment the amendment now offered by the Senator from North Dakota is a meritorious one. I have no objection to it so far as I am concerned, and will vote with him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Dakota to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment, as amended.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, does that include the entire title, or only the section?

Mr. GEORGE. Only the section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the section, as amended.

The amendment (section 701) as amended, was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment of the committee.

The next amendment was on page 268, after line 15, to insert:

SEC. 702. PROCESSING TAX ON CERTAIN OILS.

(a) The first sentence of section 602½ (a) of the Revenue Act of 1934, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"(a) There is hereby imposed upon the first domestic processing of coconut oil, palm oil, palm-kernel oil, fatty acids derived from any of the foregoing oils, salts of any of the foregoing (whether or not such oils, fatty acids, or salts have been refined, sulphonated, sulphated, hydrogenated, or otherwise processed), or any combination or mixture containing a substantial quantity of any one or more of such oils, fatty acids, or salts with respect to any of which oils, fatty acids, or salts there has been no previous first domestic processing and no import tax has been paid under section 601 (c) (8) of the Revenue Act of 1932, as amended, a tax of 3 cents per pound to be paid by the processor."

(b) Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (a) of this section, the first domestic processing of sunflower oil or sesame oil, imported prior to the effective date of this title, shall be taxed in accordance with the provisions of section 602½ of the Revenue Act of 1934 in force on the date of the enactment of this act.

(c) The last sentence of section 602½ (a) of the Revenue Act of 1934, as amended, is amended by striking therefrom the last comma and the words "but does not include the use of palm oil in the manufacture of tin plate."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 269, after line 15, to insert:

SEC. 703. MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS.

Nothing in section 601 (c) (8) of the Revenue Act of 1932, as amended, shall be construed as imposing a tax in contravention of an obligation undertaken in any trade agreement heretofore entered into under the authority of section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, or as imposing a tax on the importation of glycerin or stearine pitch or on the importation of any article by reason of any component of such article derived directly or indirectly from a waste not named in section 601 (c) (8) of the Revenue Act of 1932, as amended. Section 402 of the Revenue Act of 1935 is hereby repealed. All taxes accrued or paid under section 402 of the Revenue Act of 1935 on the importation of glycerin or stearine pitch shall be remitted or refunded under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 270, after line 6, to insert:

SEC. 704. EFFECTIVE DATE.

The provisions of this title shall be effective on and after the thirtieth day following the date of the enactment of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. The next amendment is an amendment passed over, on page 270, after line 10, to insert:

TITLE VI—MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

SEC. 801. DEDUCTION FOR ESTATE-TAX INSURANCE.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to pass over that amendment temporarily. It will lead to certain debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GEORGE. I now ask unanimous consent to recur to title I of the bill, and consider the amendments proposed to that title.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senate will recur to title I.

Mr. GEORGE. I may say, if the Senate will give me its attention, that so far as the amendments of substance to title I are concerned, they commence on page 9, in section 12, the surtax on individual incomes. I believe there are no preceding amendments.

In this connection I may say that the House bill does not change existing law so far as the surtax rates are concerned. Both the majority and the minority of the Senate committee with respect to an important matter yet to be reached in the bill, I believe, agreed that the amendments made in the surtax rates should be adopted. In other words, there is no difference of opinion in the committee regarding them.

The only change made in the surtax rates is the addition of 1 percent on all net taxable incomes from $6,000 up to $50,000. The increase in the rate is indicated by 1 percent up to a given point in the schedule, and mechanically then the 1 percent is translated into dollars and cents; but the actual increase is an increase of 1 percent in the surtax rates from a net taxable income of $6,000 up to a net taxable income of $50,000. The greatest increase, of course, comes on the net taxable income of $50,000, and in dollars and cents it amounts to $440 per annum.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I submit a parliamentary inquiry. As I understand the order of procedure on the bill, committee amendments are to be first considered. I have an amendment which I intend to propose, adding a new section to title V of the bill. I merely wish to ascertain when it will be in order to offer that amendment—whether it should be offered after all the committee amendments have been considered to all the various titles of the bill, or whether it should be proposed to title V while that title is pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Title V will be open to individual amendments after the committee amendments shall have been disposed of.

Mr. RUSSELL. Do I understand the Chair to hold that the committee amendments relating to corporation taxes must be disposed of before title V will be open to individual amendments?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes; the Chair is so informed.

Mr. RUSSELL. That will be quite some time.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, if the Senator from Georgia will yield for a question, I should like to ask him what estimate was made of the total amount which will be returned by this additional tax of 1 percent.

Mr. GEORGE. Does the Senator mean the revenue that will be derived from the addition of 1 percent to the surtax brackets from $6,000 to $50,000?

Mr. AUSTIN. Yes.

Mr. GEORGE. My recollection is that it is estimated at $50,000,000.

Mr. President, I had made the statement that the greatest increase, of course, is in the higher brackets, and that the actual increase in dollars and cents on a net taxable income of $50,000 amounts to $440. That amount, of course, is carried on through all the subsequent brackets up to the highest income-tax bracket; and, as a mere illustration, under the proposal made by the Finance Committee, the actual increase on a net income of $8,000 is only $20.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

Mr. GEORGE. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It is estimated by the Treasury Department that the increased individual surtaxes provided in this title will produce $29,000,000 of additional revenue.

Mr. GEORGE. My recollection was that it was estimated that they would produce from forty to fifty million dollars; but I have not had any later estimates from the Treasury.

With that explanation, I ask that the amendments commencing on page 9 be acted upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments of the committee to title I will be stated.

The first amendment of the Committee on Finance was, under the heading "Title I—Income tax: Subtitle B—General provisions", on page 9, line 10, before the words "per centum", to strike out "5" and insert "6", so as to read:

(b) Rates of surtax: There shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the surtax net income of every individual a surtax as follows:

Upon a surtax net income of $4,000 there shall be no surtax; upon surtax net incomes in excess of $4,000 and not in excess of $6,000, 4 percent of such excess.

$80 upon surtax net incomes of $6,000; and upon surtax net incomes in excess of $6,000 and not in excess of $8,000, 6 percent in addition of such excess.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 11, before the word "upon", to strike out "$180" and insert "$200", and in line 13, before the words "per centum", to strike out "6" and insert "7", so as to read:

If the dividend credit is a percentage of the adjusted net income which is less than 55 (and such percentage is not shown in the foregoing table) the tax shall be a percentage of the adjusted net income equal to the sum of 15, plus one-half of the amount by which 55 exceeds the percentage which the dividend credit is of the adjusted net income.

If the dividend credit is a percentage of the adjusted net income which is more than 55 and less than 71 (and such percentage is not shown in the foregoing table) the tax shall be a percentage of the adjusted net income equal to the sum of 9, plus three-eighths of the amount by which 71 exceeds the percentage which the dividend credit is of the adjusted net income.

If the dividend credit is a percentage of the adjusted net income which is more than 71 and less than 86 (and such percentage is not shown in the foregoing table) the tax shall be a percentage of the adjusted net income equal to the sum of 4, plus one-third of the amount by which 86 exceeds the percentage which the dividend credit is of the adjusted net income.

If the dividend credit is a percentage of the adjusted net income which is more than 86 and less than 100 (and such percentage is not shown in the foregoing table) the tax shall be a percentage of the adjusted net income equal to two-sevenths of the amount by which 100 exceeds the percentage which the dividend credit is of the adjusted net income.

SCHEDULE III—ALTERNATIVE SCHEDULE FOR ADJUSTED NET INCOME OF MORE THAN $10,000 AND LESS THAN $40,000

If the adjusted net income is more than $10,000 and less than $40,000 the tax shall be computed by adding:

(A) A tax computed under schedule I. For such purpose the percentage which the undistributed net income is of the adjusted net income shall be ascertained by subtracting from the adjusted net income the dividend credit and a tax determined under schedule II or II–A; and

(B) A tax upon the amount of the adjusted net income in excess of $10,000 at the rate which would be applied if the tax upon the entire adjusted net income were being computed under schedule II. For such purpose the percentage which the undistributed net income is of the adjusted net income shall be ascertained by subtracting from the adjusted net income the dividend credit and a tax determined under schedule II or II–A.

(c) Exempt corporations: For corporations exempt from tax, see section 101.

(d) Banks and trust companies: For taxation of certain banks and trust companies, see section 104.

(e) Receiverships: For taxation of domestic corporations in receivership, see section 105.

(f) Improper accumulation of surplus: For surtax on corporations which accumulate surplus to avoid surtax on stockholders, see section 102.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, after line 21, to strike out the following section:

SEC. 14. ACCUMULATED EARNINGS AND PROFITS LESS THAN ADJUSTED NET INCOME.

(a) General rule: If the accumulated earnings and profits of the corporation as of the close of the taxable year (computed without diminution by reason of the distribution during the taxable year of earnings and profits, or by reason of the taxes imposed by this title for the taxable year) are less than the adjusted net income, the tax imposed by section 13 shall, in lieu of being computed under section 13, be computed by adding:

(1) A tax of 15 percent of the excess of the adjusted net income over such accumulated earnings and profits; and

(2) A tax upon the remainder of the adjusted net income (less the tax under paragraph (1)) computed under section 13 as if the adjusted net income were equal to the amount of such remainder so reduced.

(b) Tax not to be increased: This section shall not be applied in any case in which such application would operate to increase the tax which would be payable without its application.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, after line 17, to strike out the following section:

SEC. 15. CONTRACTS NOT TO PAY DIVIDENDS.

(a) General rule: If under a written contract executed by the corporation prior to March 3, 1936, there is no form in which dividends equal to the adjusted net income for the taxable year may be paid during the taxable year without violating a provision of such contract expressly dealing with the payment of dividends, the tax imposed by section 13 shall, in lieu of being computed under such section, be computed by adding:

(1) A tax of 22½ percent of the excess of the adjusted net income over the amount which is not prohibited during the whole of the taxable year from being paid as dividends during the taxable year; and

(2) A tax upon the remainder of the adjusted net income (less the tax under paragraph (1)) computed under section 13 as if the adjusted net income were equal to the amount of such remainder so reduced.

(b) Tax not to be increased: This section shall not be applied in any case in which such application would operate to increase the tax which would be payable without its application.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, after line 14, to strike out the following section:

SEC. 16. DEBTS.

(a) Definition of "debt": As used in this section the term "debt" means an indebtedness of the corporation existing at the close of business on March 3, 1936, and evidenced by a bond, note, debenture, certificate of indebtedness, mortgage, or deed of trust, issued by the corporation and in existence at the close of business on March 3, 1936, or by a bill of exchange accepted by the corporation prior to, and in existence at, the close of business on such date, to the following extent:

(1) If having a maturity at the time of issue of 3 years or more, then to the full amount thereof;

(2) If having a maturity at the time of issue of less than 3 years, then to the extent shown to the satisfaction of the Commissioner (whose decision shall be final) to represent indebtedness incurred by the corporation prior to March 4, 1933; or

(3) If having a maturity at the time of issue of less than 3 years, then to the extent shown to the satisfaction of the Commissioner (whose decision shall be final) to evidence indebtedness of the corporation incurred in the acquisition of capital assets, except (A) shares of stock in any corporation, or (B) rights to subscribe for or to receive such shares, or (C) bonds, debentures, notes, or certificates or other evidences of indebtedness, issued by any corporation, with interest coupons or in registered form, or (D) certificates of profit, or of interest in property or accumulations, in any investment trust or similar organization holding or dealing in any of the instruments mentioned or described in this paragraph, regardless of whether or not such investment trust or similar organization constitutes a corporation within the meaning of this act.

(b) Computation of tax: If the sum of all the debts computed under subsection (a) of this section is in excess of the accumulated earnings and profits of the corporation as of the day before the first day of its first taxable year beginning after December 31, 1935, and if the corporation, in its return for its first taxable year under this title, specifies the number of consecutive taxable years (not less than 5) over which such debt excess shall be amortized for the purposes of this subsection, then for such number of consecutive taxable years, beginning with the first taxable year of the corporation under this title (or if no such specification is made, then for the first 10 taxable years) the tax imposed by section 13, in lieu of being computed under such section, shall be computed by adding:

(1) A tax of 22½ percent of an amount of the adjusted net income equal to the amount of such debt excess divided by the number of years so specified (or, if no specification, then by 10); and

(2) A tax upon the remainder of the adjusted net income (less the tax under paragraph (1)) computed under section 13 as if the adjusted net income were equal to the amount of such remainder so reduced.

(c) Tax not to be increased: This section shall not be applied in any case in which such application would operate to increase the tax which would be payable without its application.

(d) List of evidences of indebtedness: Every corporation shall accompany its return for its first taxable year under this title with an itemized list (prepared in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary) of the bonds, notes, and other instruments which it claims evidence indebtedness coming within the meaning of the term "debt" as defined in subsection (a). For the purposes of this section no debt shall be included in computing debts under subsection (a) unless the instrument evidencing such debt is included in such list.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, after line 11, to strike out the following section:

SEC. 17. APPLICATION OF SECTIONS 14, 15, AND 16 TO SAME TAXABLE YEAR.

If in the case of any corporation more than one of sections 14, 15, and 16 are applicable, the tax shall be computed under the one of such sections which will produce the least tax.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, after line 17, to insert the following section:

SEC. 13. NORMAL TAX ON CORPORATIONS.

(a) Definition: As used in this title the term "normal-tax net income" means the net income minus the sum of—

(1) Interest on obligations of the United States and its instrumentalities: The credit provided in section 26 (a).

(2) Dividends received: The credit provided in section 26 (b).

(b) Imposition of tax: There shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the normal-tax net income of every corporation a normal tax, as follows:

Upon normal-tax net incomes not in excess of $2,000, 15½ percent.

$310 upon normal-tax net incomes of $2,000; and upon normal-tax net incomes in excess of $2,000 and not in excess of $15,000, 16 percent in addition of such excess.

$2,390 upon normal-tax net incomes of $15,000; and upon normal-tax net incomes in excess of $15,000 and not in excess of $40,000, 17 percent in addition of such excess.

$6,640 upon normal-tax net incomes of $40,000; and upon normal-tax net incomes in excess of $40,000, 18 percent in addition of such excess.

(c) Exempt corporations: For corporations exempt from taxation under this title, see section 101.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, this section brings up a controversial feature in the bill. I suggest that we pass on to page 39. That would carry us by all the matters in controversy, if that is agreeable to Senators.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over. The clerk will state the next amendment of the committee.

The next amendment was, in section 23, "Deductions from gross income", on page 39, line 7, after the word "taxes", to insert "(other than the excess-profits tax imposed by section 106 of the Revenue Act of 1935)", so as to read:

In computing net income there shall be allowed as deductions:

(a) Expenses: All the ordinary and necessary expenses paid or incurred during the taxable year in carrying on any trade or business, including a reasonable allowance for salaries or other compensation for personal services actually rendered; traveling expenses (including the entire amount expended for meals and lodging) while away from home in the pursuit of a trade or business; and rentals or other payments required to be made as a condition to the continued use or possession, for purposes of the trade or business, of property to which the taxpayer has not taken or is not taking title or in which he has no equity.

(b) Interest: All interest paid or accrued within the taxable year on indebtedness, except on indebtedness incurred or continued to purchase or carry obligations (other than obligations of the United States issued after September 24, 1917, and originally subscribed for by the taxpayer) the interest upon which is wholly exempt from the taxes imposed by this title.

(c) Taxes generally: Taxes paid or accrued within the taxable year, except—

(1) Federal income, war-profits, and excess-profits taxes (other than the excess-profits tax imposed by section 106 of the Revenue Act of 1935);

(2) Income, war-profits, and excess-profits taxes imposed by the authority of any foreign country or possession of the United States; but this deduction shall be allowed in the case of a taxpayer who does not signify in his return his desire to have to any extent the benefits of section 131 (relating to credit for taxes of foreign countries and possessions of the United States);

(3) Estate, inheritance, legacy, succession, and gift taxes; and

(4) Taxes assessed against local benefits of a kind tending to increase the value of the property assessed; but this paragraph shall not exclude the allowance as a deduction of so much of such taxes as is properly allocable to maintenance or interest charges.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 52, after line 8, to strike out:

SEC. 26. CREDITS OF CORPORATION AGAINST NET INCOME.

For the purpose only of the tax imposed by section 13, 104, 105, 231 (a), 251, or 261 there shall be allowed as a credit against net income the amount received as interest upon obligations of the United States or of corporations organized under act of Congress which is allowed to an individual as a credit for purposes of normal tax by section 25 (a) (1) or (2).

And in lieu thereof to insert:

SEC. 26. CREDITS OF CORPORATION.

In the case of a corporation the following credits shall be allowed to the extent provided in the various sections imposing tax—

(a) Interest on obligations of the United States and its instrumentalities: The amount received as interest upon obligations of the United States or of corporations organized under act of Congress which is allowed to an individual as a credit for purposes of normal tax by section 25 (a) (1) or (2).

(b) Dividends received: Ninety percent of the amount received as dividends from a domestic corporation which is subject to taxation under this title. The credit allowed by this subsection shall not be allowed in respect of dividends received from a corporation organized under the China Trade Act, 1922, or from a corporation which under section 251 is taxable only on its gross income from sources within the United States by reason of its receiving a large percentage of its gross income from sources within a possession of the United States.

(c) Contracts not to pay dividends: The amount by which the adjusted net income exceeds the amount which during the whole of the taxable year is not prohibited by a contract from being paid as dividends during the taxable year. As used in this subsection, the term "contract" means a written contract executed by the corporation prior to March 3, 1936, under which there is no form in which dividends equal to the adjusted net income for the taxable year may be paid during the taxable year without violating a provision of such contract expressly dealing with the payment of dividends.

(d) Bank affiliates: In the case of a holding company affiliate (as defined in sec. 2 of the Banking Act of 1933), the amount of the earnings or profits which the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System certifies to the Commissioner has been devoted by such affiliate during the taxable year to the acquisition of readily marketable assets other than bank stock in compliance with section 5144 of the Revised Statutes, but the aggregate amount allowable under this subsection for all taxable years shall not exceed the amount required to be devoted under such section to such purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 54, line 11, to strike out "dividend" and to insert in lieu thereof "dividends paid."

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, has the amendment in subsection (c) of section 26, on page 53, been agreed to? I did not hear that amendment stated.

Mr. GEORGE. It is my understanding that it has been agreed to.

Mr. COUZENS. I do not remember the clerk reading the different sections for approval. I raise the question because an amendment is being prepared to subsection (c) in regard to contracts not to pay dividends, so as to provide a cushion for corporations which are required to create sinking funds as the result of bond issues.

Mr. GEORGE. I recall that.

Mr. COUZENS. If subsection (c) has been agreed to, I suggest that the vote be reconsidered and that the amendment be passed over.

Mr. GEORGE. If the amendment on page 53 in subsection (c) has been agreed to I ask that the vote by which it was agreed to be reconsidered and that the amendment be passed over temporarily.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection the vote by which the amendment, beginning on page 52, line 9, and going through line 9, page 54, was agreed to, is reconsidered, and the amendment will be passed over.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I now offer my amendment.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I should like to state, merely in order that we may maintain regularity, that the Senate committee has made no amendment to the text at this place, and the amendment is not now in order. If it were one single amendment, of course, I should be delighted to accommodate the Senator from New Jersey, but I apprehend that he will have to remain in attendance in the Senate anyway until we finish the committee amendments, and we would like to proceed regularly.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, that is perfectly reasonable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment of the committee.

The next amendment was, in section 27, "Corporation credit for dividends paid", on page 54, line 11, before the word "credit", to strike out "dividend" and insert "dividends paid", and in line 12, after the words "the" where it occurs the second time, to strike out "dividend" and insert "dividends paid", so as to read:

(a) Dividends paid credit in general: For the purposes of this title, the dividends paid credit shall be the amount of dividends paid during the taxable year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 54, line 15, after the word "the", to strike out "dividend" and insert "dividends paid", and in line 18, after the word "the", to strike out "dividend" and insert "dividends paid"; in line 22, after the article "a", to strike out "dividend" and insert "dividends paid"; and on page 55, after line 3, to strike out "in the case of a taxable year the tax for which has been or is being computed under section 14 or 15 the term 'adjusted net income' as used in this subsection means the amount subject to tax under subsection (a) (2) of such section; and in case of a taxable year the tax for which has been or is being computed under section 16 the term 'adjusted net income' as used in this subsection means the amount subject to tax under subsection (b) (2) of such section", so as to read:

(b) Dividend carry-over: In computing the dividends paid credit for any taxable year, if the dividends paid during the taxable year are less than the adjusted net income, there shall be allowed as part of the dividends paid credit, and in the following order:

(1) Dividends paid during the second preceding taxable year in excess of the adjusted net income for such year, to the extent not needed as a dividends paid credit for the taxable year preceding the taxable year the tax for which is being computed; and

(2) Dividends paid during the first preceding taxable year in excess of the adjusted net income for such year. No credit shall be allowed for dividends paid by a corporation prior to its first taxable year under this title.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, line 16, after the word "the" where it occurs the second time, to strike out "dividend" and insert "dividends paid", so as to read:

(c) Dividends in kind: If a dividend is paid in property other than money (including stock of the corporation if held by the corporation as an investment) the dividends paid credit with respect thereto shall be the adjusted basis of the property in the hands of the corporation at the time of the payment, or the fair market value of the property at the time of the payment, whichever is the lower.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, line 24, after the word "the" where it occurs the second time, to strike out "dividend" and insert "dividends paid", so as to read:

(d) Dividends in obligations of the corporation: If a dividend is paid in obligations of the corporation, the amount of the dividends paid credit with respect thereto shall be the face value of the obligations, or their fair market value at the time of the payment, whichever is the lower. If the fair market value is lower than the face value, then when the obligation is redeemed by the corporation, the excess of the amount for which redeemed over the fair market value at the time of the dividend payment (to the extent not allowable as a deduction in computing net income for any taxable year) shall be treated as a dividend paid in the taxable year in which the redemption occurs.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 56, line 13, after the word "the", to strike out "dividend" and insert "dividends paid", so as to read:

(e) Taxable stock dividends: In case of a stock dividend or stock right which is a taxable dividend in the hands of shareholders under section 115 (f), the dividends paid credit with respect thereto shall be the fair market value of the stock or the stock right at the time of the payment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 56, line 21, after the word "the", to strike out "dividend" and insert "dividends paid", so as to read:

(f) Distributions in liquidation: In the case of amounts distributed in liquidation the part of such distribution which is properly chargeable to the earnings or profits accumulated after February 28, 1913, shall, for the purposes of computing the dividends paid credit under this section, be treated as a taxable dividend paid.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 56, line 23, after the word "No", to strike out "dividend" and insert "dividends paid", and on page 57, line 2, after the word "class", to strike out the comma and "and each of the shareholders of that class, who are subject to taxation under this title for the period in which the distribution is made, receives a taxable dividend as a result of the distribution", so as to read:

(g) Preferential dividends: No dividends paid credit shall be allowed with respect to any distribution unless the distribution is pro rata, equal in amount, and with no preference to any share of stock as compared with other shares of the same class.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 57, line 11, after the word "no", to strike out "dividend" and insert "dividends paid", so as to read:

(h) Nontaxable distributions: If any part of a distribution (including stock dividends and stock rights) is not a taxable dividend in the hands of such of the shareholders as are subject to taxation under this title for the period in which the distribution is made, no dividends paid credit shall be allowed with respect to such part.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 57, after line 13, to strike out:

(i) Intercorporate dividends: If 80 percent or more of the gross income of the corporation is derived from dividends, then the dividend credit with respect to each dividend payment shall be reduced to an amount equal to the sum of:

(1) The portion of such dividend payment paid to shareholders other than corporations;

(2) The portion of such dividend payment paid to corporations taxable under section 104, 105, 201, 204, 207, 231, 251, or 261, or to corporations exempt from taxation under section 101;

(4) An amount of such dividend payment paid to other corporate shareholders which bears the same ratio to the total dividend payment paid to them as the part of the gross income not derived from dividends bears to the entire gross income.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 58, line 19, after the numerals "143", to insert "or 144", so as to make the section read:

SEC. 32. TAXES WITHHELD AT SOURCE.

The amount of tax withheld at the source under section 143 or 144 shall be allowed as a credit against the tax.

The next amendment was, in section 43, on page 60, line 7, to strike out the word "dividend" and to insert in lieu thereof the words "dividends paid", so as to read:

SEC. 43. PERIOD FOR WHICH DEDUCTIONS AND CREDITS TAKEN.

The deductions and credits (other than the dividends paid credit provided in section 27) provided for in this title shall be taken for the taxable year in which "paid or accrued" or "paid or incurred", dependent upon the method of accounting upon the basis of which the net income is computed, unless in order to clearly reflect the income the deductions or credits should be taken as of a different period. In the case of the death of a taxpayer there shall be allowed as deductions and credits for the taxable period in which falls the date of his death amounts accrued up to the date of his death, if not otherwise properly allowable in respect of such period or a prior period.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 102, "Surtax on corporations improperly accumulating surplus", on page 82, after line 21, to strike out:

(a) Corporations to which applicable: This section shall apply only to (1) banks as defined in section 104, (2) insurance companies, (3) foreign corporations, (4) corporations organized under the China Trade Act, 1922, (5) corporations entitled to the benefits of section 251, and (6) personal holding companies as defined in subsection (b).

(b) Definitions: As used in this title—

(1) The term "personal holding company" means any corporation (other than a corporation specified in clauses (1), (2), (3), (4), and (5) of subsection (a)) if—(A) at least 80 percent of its gross income for the taxable year is derived from royalties, dividends, interest, rents, annuities, and (except in the case of regular dealers in stock or securities) gains from the sale of stock or securities, and (B) at any time during the last half of the taxable year more than 50 percent in value of its outstanding stock is owned, directly or indirectly, by or for not more than five individuals. For the purpose of determining the ownership of stock in a personal holding company—(C) stock owned, directly or indirectly, by a corporation, partnership, estate, or trust shall be considered as being owned proportionately by its shareholders, partners, or beneficiaries; (D) an individual shall be considered as owning, to the exclusion of any other individual, the stock owned, directly or indirectly, by his family, and this rule shall be applied in such manner as to produce the smallest possible number of individuals owning, directly or indirectly, more than 50 percent in value of the outstanding stock; and (E) the family of an individual shall include only his brothers and sisters (whether by the whole or half blood), spouse, ancestors, and lineal descendants.

(2) The term "retained net income" means the net income minus, in the case of corporations subject to the tax imposed by section 13, the dividend credit allowed by section 27, and, in the case of corporations not subject to the tax imposed by section 13, a dividend credit computed in the same manner as if such corporations were subject to such tax. In either case for the purposes of this section the dividend credit shall be computed by substituting in section 27 for the words "adjusted net income" wherever appearing in such section the words "net income."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 84, line 18, after the word "year", to insert "(in addition to other taxes imposed by this title)"; in line 20, after the word "corporation", to strike out "specified in subsection (a)" and insert "(other than a personal holding company as defined in section 351)"; and in line 25, after the word "permitting", to strike out "gains and" and insert "earnings or", so as to read:

(1) 25 percent of the amount of the retained net income not in excess of $100,000, plus

(2) 35 percent of the amount of the retained net income in excess of $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 85, line 10, after the word "the", to strike out "gains" and insert "earnings", and in line 12, after the word "surtax", to insert "upon shareholders", so as to read:

The amendment was agreed to.

(2) The term "undistributed adjusted net income" means the adjusted net income minus the sum of:

(A) 20 percent of the excess of the adjusted net income over the amount of dividends received from personal holding companies which are allowable as a credit for the purposes of the tax imposed by section 13 or 204;

(B) Amounts used or set aside to retire indebtedness incurred prior to January 1, 1934, if such amounts are reasonable with reference to the size and terms of such indebtedness; and

Any amount so included in the gross income of a shareholder shall be treated as a dividend received. Any subsequent distribution made by the corporation out of earnings or profits for such taxable year shall, if distributed to any shareholder who has so included in his gross income his pro-rata share, be exempt from tax in the amount of the share so included.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the committee amendments in title III were agreed to yesterday.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, there is one other amendment in title III that should be agreed to, at least for the purpose of having it go to conference. I refer to the words "after March 3, 1936", on page 249, in line 5. The language at that point relates to the crediting of any refund made by a processing taxpayer who is subject to the windfall tax, if he had made a refund to his vendee. The Finance Committee struck out "March 3, 1936, or pursuant to any bona-fide agreement in writing", and inserted in lieu thereof a provision for the crediting of such refund made within 30 days after the enactment of the bill, or at any time if made pursuant to a valid contract entered into before March 3, 1936. I offer the amendment for the purpose of studying it. I am not committing myself to it, but I believe it will be found to be a necessary amendment. The amendment relates to the windfall tax. It is on page 249, line 5, after "1936", to insert "or in settlement of a judgment or an arbitration award in proceedings begun before the passage of this act."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President——

Mr. GEORGE. I will say to the Senator from Illinois that the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] has the floor and has kindly yielded to me. I may say further to him that there are pending amendments offered by the Senator from Alabama and the Senator from Wisconsin as well as the amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. LONERGAN].

Mr. LEWIS. I understand they will require considerable discussion, and my remarks probably will not exceed 5 minutes. However, I will defer what I desire to say.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, there are certain committee amendments which I am asking the privilege of taking up out of order. While they are committee amendments, they are offered on the floor by order of the committee. They consist of a series of amendments which are technical in nature. I should like to have permission to consider them now, in connection with the various sections to which they are applicable, and I should like to precede the request with a brief statement explanatory of the whole scope of all these various technical amendments.

CORPORATE LIQUIDATION AMENDMENTS

Section 112 (b) (6) of the present law was adopted last year by the Senate, as an amendment to the revenue bill of 1935. It was intended to permit the simplification of our corporate structures, and the liquidation of subsidiaries. However, the provision as adopted by the Senate was changed in conference and two difficulties are now encountered, both of which are remedied by the amendments proposed by the committee:

First. The present law requires the control of 80 percent of the voting stock and 80 percent of all other classes of stock of the subsidiary, speaking of liquidations. Inasmuch as voting control is all that is necessary to authorize the liquidation of a corporation, there seems to be no reason for compelling ownership of the nonvoting stock. The proposed amendment would permit the complete liquidation of the subsidiary if the parent owns sufficient stock to give it 80 percent of the number of votes.

Second. The present law requires a new "basis" for the property of the subsidiary, after the property has been taken over by the parent corporation. The protection of the Treasury, as well as sound policy, requires that the property retain the same basis after the liquidation as before. The committee amendments adopt this principle.

A clarifying amendment is also made to section 112 (h) of the bill, making it certain that "voting stock" means number of votes, and not number of shares. In the opinion of the committee, this amendment is declaratory of existing law but expresses it in more apt language. The committee, however, in order to be safe in the event that the courts hold that the amendment does make a change in existing law, are also proposing an amendment adding a new paragraph (16) to section 113 (a) of the bill dealing with basis, in order that proper provision may be made for basis in the case of transactions occurring under the revenue acts prior to the present one.

Now, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that these several amendments may be at this time considered for reasons which I think the acting chairman of the committee will appreciate, in view of my statement of the case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments offered by the Senator from Georgia, on behalf of the committee, will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 93 it is proposed to strike out lines 3 to 24, both inclusive, and on page 94, lines 1 to 4, both inclusive, and insert:

(6) Property received by corporation on complete liquidation of another: No gain or loss shall be recognized upon the receipt by a corporation of property distributed in complete liquidation of another corporation. For the purposes of this paragraph a distribution shall be considered to be in complete liquidation only if—

(A) the corporation receiving such property was, on the date of the adoption of the plan of liquidation, and has continued to be at all times until the receipt of the property, the owner of stock (in such other corporation) possessing at least 80 percent of the total combined voting power of all classes of stock entitled to vote; and

(B) no distribution under the plan of liquidation was made before the first day of the first taxable year of the corporation beginning after December 31, 1935; and either

(C) the distribution is by such other corporation in complete cancelation or redemption of all its stock; or

(D) such distribution is one of a series of distributions by such other corporation in complete cancelation or redemption of all its stock in accordance with a plan of liquidation under which the transfer of all the property under the liquidation is to be completed within a time specified in the plan, not exceeding 3 years from the close of the taxable year during which is made the first of the series of distributions under the plan, except that if such transfer is not completed within the period specified in the plan no distribution under the plan shall be considered a distribution in complete liquidation.

If such transfer of property is not completed within the taxable year the Commissioner may require of the taxpayer such bond, or waiver of the statute of limitations on assessment and collection, or both, as he may deem necessary to insure, if the transfer of the property is not completed in accordance with the plan, the assessment and collection of all income, war-profits, and excess-profits taxes then imposed by law for such taxable year or subsequent taxable years, to the extent attributable to property so received.

On page 94, line 7, after "(3)", to strike out "(5), or (6)" and insert "or (5)."

On page 95, line 23, after the word "to", to strike out "(6)" and insert "(5)."

On page 97, line 18, beginning with the word "at", to strike out through the word "stock", in line 19, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "stock possessing at least 80 percent of the total combined voting power of all classes of stock entitled to vote."

On page 98, line 2, to strike out "(5), or (6)" and insert "or (5)."

On page 100, line 23, after the word "basis", to insert "(except as provided in paragraph (15) of this subsection)."

On page 101, line 20, to strike out all after the word "reorganization" through the comma in line 23.

On page 106, after line 23, to insert a new paragraph, as follows:

(15) Property received by a corporation on complete liquidation of another: If the property was received by a corporation upon a distribution in complete liquidation of another corporation within the meaning of section 112 (b) (6), then the basis shall be the same as it would be in the hands of the transferor.

On page 106, after line 23, after the matter just inserted, to insert a new paragraph, as follows:

(16) Basis established by the Revenue Act of 1934: If the property was acquired after February 28, 1913, in any taxable year beginning prior to January 31, 1936, and the basis thereof, for the purposes of the Revenue Act of 1934, was prescribed by section 113 (a) (6), (7), or (8) of such act, then for the purposes of this act the basis shall be the same as the basis therein prescribed in the Revenue Act of 1934.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POPE in the chair). Without objection, the amendments offered by the Senator from Georgia will be considered en bloc. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. LEWIS obtained the floor.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, inadvertently certain amendments which should have been offered were omitted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield.

Mr. KING. I invite attention to page 90, where one or two amendments are necessary. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the committee was adopted on page 90, line 1, in order to move to strike out the word "and" at the end of the line and to insert the word "or."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote by which the amendment of the committee was agreed to will be reconsidered; and, without objection, the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah to the amendment of the committee is agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. KING. On page 172, I move to reconsider the vote by which the committee amendment was agreed to for the purpose of offering a clarifying amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection the vote by which the committee amendment was agreed to is reconsidered. The clerk will state the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah to the committee amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 172, line 13, after the word "by", it is proposed to insert a comma and the words "or cash, stock, or securities or both held in trust by."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment to the amendment is agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. KING. On page 172, line 18, after the word "and", I move to strike out "reinvesting, as a unit, funds" and insert a comma and the words "or investing or reinvesting or holding, as a unit, a diversified group of stock, securities, or other funds."

I ask for the adoption of that amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

IN SUPPORT OF MR. LEWIS' MOTION TO RECOMMIT THE TAX BILL, H. R. 12395—TO COMMITTEE AND POSTPONEMENT

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I arise at this time to submit, concretely I trust, my views in support of the motion I now place on the table, which later it will be appropriate for me to call up, and which I may engage the attention of the Senate to support.

Mr. President, I am utterly opposed to the passage of the pending tax bill. In many respects I regard it as a decided improvement over the bill which came to the Senate from the House. I esteem the Senate bill, if a tax bill is to be passed and should be passed, as one that would remedy many of the errors that appear to me to take on the form of persecution in the bill that came over to us for consideration. But, Mr. President, I am not able to see that there is an immediate necessity for the passage of this tax bill that justifies it as a matter of needed legislation.

I would not disguise to this honorable body a personal sentiment which is moving me, at least, in its memory. I saw a great administration in this Government, after victory in a cataclysmic war, in the year 1918, bring in a tax bill to this body, of which I was then honored to be a Member, and I saw that administration defeated in the final result before the people, despite the renown and prestige which ordinarily inure after the successful conduct of a war. Then the administration, not learning from example and taking no lesson from experience, proceeded, as Senators sitting around me will recall, to duplicate that undertaking in 1920. Upon the basis of their action, they, by a tax bill, invested the people with such uncertainty and alarm, such fear and terror, largely stimulated by prophecy as to what the results of the tax bill would be upon the people and the merchants, that it brought to us, to the party in power, defeat in the Presidential contest of 1920. I use the word "us" as meaning those who were advocates of what they felt was unnecessary taxation at that time. I was one.

Mr. President, a tax bill ought never to be presented to the representatives of a people save when justified by a necessity. Taxes at best are a persecution, always a form of oppression, and should be withheld from a people as long as possible. Such measures should always be withheld wherever there is an uncertainty of time and condition which might indicate that the enactment of the bill could have been avoided, and the oppression and the injuries arising from it upon the people, likewise avoided.

Mr. President, the records of our finance today disclose, using round figures, a revenue of four billion dollars. The ordinary expenses of the Government exceed by only a very small sum those proposed and intended and expected revenues. There will be emergency expenses, and there will be, of course, that which we call relief. But let us recall that in summer relief should be cut down more than one-half of what it was, month by month, in the winter. The bonus is to be paid; and that, sir, will be paid out of money as provided in a system now established, extending along through a considerable period of time.

The question for us, sir, is this: Is there any immediate need at this day for a general tax bill which comprehends every feature of taxes, to anticipate every equally assumed, or hoped-for, or feared expenditure; and this just at the eve of a national election?

I contend—and here it is that I predicate my motion to postpone the bill—that we should return the bill to the committee to have a proper investigation of every item in the bill, enlightened by the wisdom that would be necessary to throw a just and proper light upon it. For the next 6 months the Government can pay its expenses. If we run a little deficit, in the meantime business will prosper, exempted from draining tax, and can multiply in its returns. If the success in business and industry we expect shall be ours, and continue as it is now promising to us, we shall not need these taxes, because the ordinary business will restore itself to high prosperity, and the taxes to be drawn from the prosperity upon the business of the country will serve all the immediate uses.

We are about to go to the people. The general election is ahead of us in November. Every feature of the proposed tax bill will be considered. All the threats that it carries, all the fears that it engenders, all the dangers that it prophesies, all the errors, if you please, all the adjustments and misadjustments or maladjustments, will be presented to the people. When we shall assemble in January next we shall have the information from the people directly through the ballot box. Then we shall know the kind and quality of tax bill which will meet the necessities of the coming year and also enjoy the approval of the public.

Why put upon the people at this time a general bill that may anticipate a levy and a burden far in excess of that which may be called for, and wholly opposed to that which may be justified?

Mr. President, I do not know what spirit there is which initiated the thought of pressing the bill at this time. I have heard it said around me that it is the desire of the President. I do not know what is the desire of the President upon this subject; but I am free to say that what the President himself needs, if such has been his expression, is that he be advised that there is not a necessity here for the measure that justifies his insisting upon it in the present form of the minority measure, or the majority measure of the Senate, or the measure which came from the House.

Mr. President, I favor postponing the whole consideration. I rise to oppose the bill, without regard to the source from which it came. I put this demand upon the ground that before a measure of this magnitude, in its weight and its oppression, shall be put upon business, upon the toiler, upon the financier—before such a judgment of real confiscation of profits shall be put upon their business or destruction upon their interests, some opportunity should be given them to speak their views and express their interest.

I hold that if the conditions of the Treasury do permit, either from the money borrowed or from the curtailment and discharge of the necessary obligations between now and the election, we should then conduct ourselves along the line of that idea, making it serve, and await the presentation by the people of what they feel should be the necessary taxes, and let them advise us, according to their ballot-box rights, as to what they themselves feel would be justified.

It has too much of a suggestion, as I see it, of a "snap judgment" to pass this bill in emergency; to press this measure, with all its consequences, upon the people at a time such as this, when no opportunity can be afforded for them wholly to consider the phases of a measure which involves scientific, industrial, economic, and financial questions of such magnitude that a great body like this could not arise at once and spontaneously solve the problem except by a miracle—and that questionable.

Mr. President, it is proper to dwell upon some precedent. There never has been put upon a people a tax that has not been punished by some form of retaliation. Regrettable it is that a tax has invariably caused the uprisings which have taken the form of civil revolutions or the overthrow of governments.

We recall that it was after Caesar had his military victories, and became securely entrenched as the master of all government, that he yielded to the advice of those who brought in a form of taxation to be placed upon the lands of the farmer. Taking history, we find what followed afterward, that the grievances of the masses when the conspirators pursued Caesar were such that they became convinced that they should remove Caesar and those who supported him, and that by so doing it would remove the taxes. Thus began the conspiracy, and thus began the decline of that regime.

Shall we forget that Charles I did not lose his life merely because he was opposed by Cromwell and his legions? That did not happen until the era following that, under King John, and those who are spoken of as the barons of Runnymede, when the head tax was laid upon the people, and it was shifted, as necessarily all taxes are shifted, to the consumer in every way that was possible and convenient. It was then that the feeling arose in the land which we now speak of as England that aroused an atmosphere which licensed Cromwell to justify the killing of the king and the taking of his head. In all this we saw the head of one Stuart struck from his shoulders and the crown struck from the head of the other.

And do we forget our own experiences here? Do we forget, sir, what we tried to do in the election—and I may be pardoned for speaking of this, as I was a small part of the offense—in 1900, sir, in 1904, and then, sir, in 1908, but more completely, sir, in 1918, to which I have alluded, and then in 1920? And then, sir, let it be remembered that in the administration of a distinguished, eminent man, now dead, President Taft, when he boldly permitted, against the advice of his own administration, the bringing in of a tax bill and carrying it to the point of presentation, it was upon that, sir, that the administration known as that of Woodrow Wilson was able to defeat President Taft and that of his following.

It was then, sir, despite that lesson, that we, unhappily—I use the word "we" in the sense of us of the Democratic administration—promptly adopted the same course and brought in a tax bill assuming the privilege of taxing anything that could have hands laid upon it, upon the theory that possibly the revenue might be needed. The result was that in the terror of the people the fears of what might follow, the anticipation of dangers that were prophesied, those who advocated every measure and every policy connected with the administration of the tax bill were defeated by the people.

It may be that the people were wrong. It may be that they could not see aright; but, sir, I am compelled, in the language of Patrick Henry, in his famous expression, to say that only by the lamp of experience may I guide my feet.

Now, sir, unless it be pointed out to me that there is a prime and urgent necessity for the enactment of this immediate bill at this immediate time, I answer it cannot be justified, however much as a bill it might be justified if the tax were necessary at this time. Therefore, I am for the return of the bill to the committee, where proper investigation as to every item in it may be had by proper scientific consideration, and where the sources of taxes may be investigated, the capacity to pay, and the power to levy; where all these inquiries may be entered upon calmly; and when a conclusion shall be reached, a bill then may be presented with a consciousness that we have given the people a hearing; we have heard their objections, if they had any; we have listened to their pretensions and their professions, such as they may present.

Then, sir, with such a measure, we could safely say that no one could charge us with having taken advantage of him at a time when he could not defend himself by opposition.

Mr. President, I have presented tersely the reasons why I am opposed to the bill as a bill, and why I feel that for the salvation of the country, the best uses of business, and the best purposes of government, the bill should not be passed at this time, and that all tax bills—the minority bill, the majority bill, and that which came over from the House—should be, as it were, huddled together in some form and sent where consideration or examination may be duly had, and no offense and no wrong put upon the country, by accident or by intention, in the name of politics or administration.

That reason, sir, I now give as to why I shall press the motion for the postponement of consideration of the measure, and the return of it, sir, to the committee, and the end of any further consideration of it as a tax bill by this honorable body.

I thank the Senator in charge of the bill for allowing me to intrude at this time.

INTERNAL-REVENUE TAXATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12395) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I ask that the Senate now proceed with the consideration of the amendment on page 29, section 13.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The next amendment of the Committee on Finance was, on page 29, after line 17, to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 13. NORMAL TAX ON CORPORATIONS.

(a) Definition: As used in this title the term "normal-tax net income" means the net income minus the sum of—

(1) Interest on obligations of the United States and its instrumentalities: The credit provided in section 26 (a).

(2) Dividends received: The credit provided in section 26 (b).

(b) Imposition of tax: There shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the normal-tax net income of every corporation, a normal tax as follows:

Upon normal-tax net incomes not in excess of $2,000, 15½ percent.

$310 upon normal-tax net incomes of $2,000; and upon normal-tax net incomes in excess of $2,000 and not in excess of $15,000, 16 percent in addition of such excess.

$2,390 upon normal-tax net incomes of $15,000; and upon normal-tax net incomes in excess of $15,000 and not in excess of $40,000, 17 percent in addition of such excess.

$6,640 upon normal-tax net incomes of $40,000; and upon normal-tax net incomes in excess of $40,000, 18 percent in addition of such excess.

(c) Exempt corporations: For corporations exempt from taxation under this title, see section 101.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I do not think subsection (a) of section 13, or subsection (1), is in controversy. In fact, there is no controversy until the end of line 5 on page 30 is reached.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the part of the amendment known as section 13 (a), subsections (1) and (2), will be agreed to.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, down to and including the word "follows" on line 5, page 30, may be agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE. That is what I meant.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on agreeing to the part of the amendment beginning with line 3, page 30, known as subsections (b) and (c).

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] to the fact that this is the point at which our amendment is to be offered.

Mr. BLACK. Yes; I am ready to offer it when the Senate shall have adopted that part of the amendment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It has already been adopted. We are now proceeding to the increases in the flat corporation tax.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, we have now reached the point of controversy in the consideration of the revenue bill. There is yet open an amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. LONERGAN], inserted and carried in the bill as a committee amendment, to which I do not now make reference except to call attention to it as an important undisposed-of matter in the bill. That amendment relates to the exemption of life insurance if payable directly to the Treasury for the purpose of paying in whole or in part the estate tax of the decedent.

The particular section which the Senate is now proceeding to consider, section 13, relates to the normal tax imposed upon the net income of every corporation, with certain exceptions to be found elsewhere in the bill; and corporations having partial exemption from this general levy are not a matter of controversy between those who are offering the substitute.

The Finance Committee proposed to increase by 3 percent and slightly to graduate the flat corporation tax existing under the present law. In other words, the Finance Committee proposed the insertion in the bill of the following provision:

> There shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the normal-tax net income of every corporation a normal tax as follows:
> Upon normal-tax net incomes not in excess of $2,000, 15½ percent.
> $310 upon normal-tax net incomes of $2,000; and upon normal-tax net incomes in excess of $2,000 and not in excess of $15,000, 16 percent in addition of such excess.
>
> $2,390 upon normal-tax net incomes of $15,000; and upon normal-tax net incomes in excess of $15,000 and not in excess of $40,000, 17 percent in addition of such excess.
> $6,640 upon normal-tax net incomes of $40,000; and upon normal-tax net incomes in excess of $40,000, 18 percent in addition of such excess.

In other words, under existing law the flat rate runs from 12½ to 15 percent. Under the committee bill the rate runs from 15½ percent to 18 percent, a step-up of 3 percent in each of the brackets, or graduated steps.

The committee likewise, considering the general tax proposal in the bill of the House, agreed to a tax, in addition to taxes already mentioned, of 7 percent upon the undistributed earnings of all corporations, with certain exceptions; and it is not necessary to note the exceptions now, because those exceptions do not enter into the merits of the substitute amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama, as I understand.

The Senate Finance Committee is adhering to the present plan of taxation, in the main. It is recognizing, of course, the suggestion made by the President in his message and carried out in the bill as it passed the House, by the imposition of a tax upon corporate earnings ranging from zero to 42½ percent, if all of the corporate earnings were retained, none of them being distributed. The Senate committee has imposed a tax of 7 percent, in addition to the taxes named, upon the undistributed earnings of each corporation, as I have stated. So that in the case of a corporation earning more than $40,000, which retains all of its earnings, the combined tax will total 25 percent upon the earnings of the corporation during the taxable year.

It will be remembered that under the bill as it passed the House, under the committee amendment, and under the substitute which will be offered presently by the Senator from Alabama, the exemption of the normal tax on dividends of 4 percent is repealed. In other words, incomes derived from dividends are now subject to the normal tax of 4 percent. That is true under the bill as it passed the House; it is true under the committee bill; it is true under the substitute bill.

Under the committee bill capital-stock taxes are retained as in existing law. Excess-profits taxes are retained as in existing law. Intercorporate-dividend taxes are retained as in existing law. That is also true under the substitute offered by the Senator from Alabama, as I understand.

Under the bill as it passed the House the capital-stock tax, except for one-half year, or for a whole year at one-half rate, was repealed. Under the bill as it passed the House the excess-profits taxes were repealed. Under that bill the flat taxes on corporations were repealed. In other words, the House adopted the suggestion made by the President, and every part of the suggestion of the President is entitled to consideration, in the opinion of the Finance Committee. The House eliminated certain taxes on corporations, simplified the tax structure so far as corporations are concerned, and went to a tax upon undistributed profits or earnings. I am not using the technical phraseology in the House text, but for the purpose of a fair understanding I am employing the words "corporate earnings."

If I may be permitted to repeat, the House adopted a tax ranging from zero to 42½ percent on undistributed corporate earnings; that is to say, if a corporation distributed all of its earnings, it would pay no tax. It would pay no capital-stock tax after the first year after the adoption of the bill; it would pay no excess-profits tax; it would pay no flat tax; it would pay one simple tax, so far as the general scheme is concerned, measured by its undistributed earnings.

The Senate committee believed, for reasons stated by the acting chairman of the committee, and stated also in the report filed by the majority of the committee, that it is unwise to abandon a tried, a tested method of raising revenue. In that respect, as I understand, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK] and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], who offer the substitute, agree with the committee, and in the substitute they have gone back—as of necessity they must have gone back—to a flat tax in order to secure anything like certainty of income from taxes on corporations.

Adhering to the established system, the Senate committee has sought to impose no new tax, no additional tax, upon corporations—that is, no additional tax so far as form is concerned. Of course, we have increased the rates, but we have sought to impose no new form of taxes save the tax of 7 percent upon the undistributed earnings of corporations.

I may say now, in passing, that it was the proposal of some of us in the Committee on Finance that the committee should impose only 4 percent upon the undistributed earnings, for the reason that, having made dividends in the hands of the taxpayers subject to the 4-percent normal tax, we were justified in making the dividends undistributed, retained by the corporation, subject to the same tax.

As a matter of agreement, and in order to arrive at an agreement, the majority of the committee held firmly to the view which I have already expressed. They agreed upon a tax of 7 percent upon the undistributed earnings, and that is the provision of the bill. In that respect, and in that respect only, does the Senate committee bill change the form of taxes imposed upon corporate earnings under existing law.

Mr. President, I will not at this time, and perhaps not at all, go into the reasons for insisting upon the bill as reported by the Finance Committee further than to say: What revenue will be raised under the bill as it passed the House no one can say unless he is willing to speculate, and one must engage in the rarest kind of speculation. Theoretically, anyone familiar with the figures may be able to determine what the provisions of the House bill would produce in the way of revenue, but actually no one can say, because the system recommended by the House has not been adopted and tried anywhere in the world, in any country having an income-tax system.

The House obviously sought, as the President in his admirable message recommended, to close the avenue for tax avoidance. No one can say how many additional doors or roadways or avenues of escape the measure as it passed the House might create if the bill in that form were enacted into law.

Mr. President, it may be admitted, and I concede, that under our income-tax laws, taken as a whole, there is opportunity to avoid the payment of surtaxes, and to those in the higher income brackets there is an inducement or a temptation to do so. That grows out of the fact that under our personal income-tax schedule not until we reach comparatively high brackets is the tax paid by the individual equal to the corporate tax paid under existing law. However, after we pass a certain bracket in the personal income-tax schedule the tax paid by the individual is very high; and as a result, if the tax paid by the same individual upon earnings growing out of an investment in corporate stocks or in a corporation is less than the tax which he would be compelled and required to pay as an individual, of course there is the suggestion and the inducement and the possibility of tax avoidance.

There is likewise some avoidance; but I undertake now to say, and I say it before the distinguished Senators who shall present their arguments are called upon to present their case, that how much avoidance there is no one living knows. There can be only guess and conjecture with respect thereto. No man in the Treasury, be he expert or not, knows how much actual avoidance there is. All he can do is to guess or conjecture. It is known what corporate earnings are undistributed, but it is not known what induces the withholding of those corporate earnings.

Mr. President, perhaps the most satisfactory income-tax law is that in force in England. I am not citing it for the purpose of commending it to the Congress. Not at all. I am citing it for another reason. Under the English tax law, it does not matter actually whether the earnings of a corporation are all distributed or whether they are not distributed. The tax paid by the individual stockholder is the same, or substantially the same, as the tax paid upon the earnings if withheld by the corporation. Bear in mind that England has had long experience with her tax laws, and bear in mind also that on the whole they have worked very satisfactorily.

I now come to a point which the Treasury officials have not properly evaluated. It is a point to which they either overlooked or did not properly weigh, as it seems to me. The English corporations have withheld a greater percentage of their earnings than the American corporations. How is that accounted for? It is accounted for by one fact, which ought not to be lost sight of, and that is that corporate dividends or earnings are not necessarily withheld for the purpose of tax avoidance, but they are withheld because, as a matter of judgment and of sound business, it is of actual profit in the administration of the corporations to do so. Let the Senate bear that fact in mind. Under the nearest comparable system to ours there is no inducement to tax avoidance, because the tax must be paid if distributed to the individuals, and must be paid also by the corporation if withheld. Indeed, under the English system the tax in principle is charged by the corporation to the individual. There are some adjustments, but their rates do not present reasons for tax avoidance as in our case. I freely confess that. However, the point I make is that in England there is a withholding of corporation earnings in percentage of their whole earnings greater than the withholding of earnings by corporations in the United States in percentage of their whole earnings. Hence, it cannot rightly be concluded, it cannot be accurately concluded, that all corporate earnings are withheld for the purpose of avoiding surtaxes. Some are. If it were possible to single out corporations, and if it were possible to make a rule which would be applicable to those which withhold earnings for the purpose of avoiding surtaxes, no one would object.

But I repeat—and with that statement I am through with the argument at this time—that no study has been made which will enable the committee or the Senate to reach any fair or dependable conclusion carrying into effect in whole or in part the principle stated in the House bill, beyond the step taken by the Finance Committee in imposing the 7-percent tax upon undistributed corporate earnings. No sufficient study has been made. No comprehensive picture of the corporate structure in this country has been laid before us. No member of the Finance Committee, in my judgment, is able to say what is the rule which ought to be adopted if we are going to follow wholly or in part the principle embodied in the House bill.

Mr. President, that is very far from saying that the House bill does not contain great merit, or saying that the President's suggestions are without merit, because that is not the attitude of the Finance Committee. The attitude of the Finance Committee is that no sufficient study has been made, and, indeed, no sufficient study could be made within the time permitted to the Ways and Means Committee of the House, and to the House, and to the Finance Committee of the Senate, and to the Senate.

We have imposed a tax of 7 percent upon the undistributed earnings; and under the operation of that provision we can gain a better knowledge at least of precisely what is going on in the way of withholding earnings by the corporations of this country, particularly since we have, in my opinion and in the opinion of the committee, immensely strengthened the provisions of section 102 of the present law. Under that section the Commissioner of Internal Revenue now has a right to impose an additional tax running as high as 35 percent, I believe, upon the undistributed earnings of a corporation if its earnings have been withheld for the purpose of avoiding the payment of surtaxes. We have strengthened that section; and now, under the amendment already adopted, we have not only retained the original provisions of section 102, but we have required each corporation in its tax returns specifically to state the reasons why it is withholding any part of its net earnings as therein defined, if it withholds more than 40 percent of its earnings.

Let it not be said for a moment that that will be an ineffective provision. No one can say how effective section 102 has in fact been. Few corporations—some 300 out of the whole number of corporations in America—have actually been called on by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to show cause why they should not be assessed under section 102. But the very presence of the section, as indeed the presence of any salutary act in the civil or in the criminal code, may itself exert a powerful influence upon the corporations which are disposed to withhold their earings from distribution.

But let no one say, I repeat, that the provision in section 102 which the Senate has today adopted will not have more far-reaching effect upon the corporation. When the corporation is required in its annual return to state why it is withholding more than 40 percent of its earnings or net income, as defined in the section, and when those reasons become a matter of record to be scrutinized year after year by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, I think it must be self-evident that only reasons at least believed at the time to be valid reasons, to be sound reasons, will be entered in the returns as the reasons or purposes why the corporation is not distributing its income, or at least 60 percent of its income.

Mr. President, I now desire to say one other thing, but I do not wish to be misunderstood in what I am about to say. There are about three sources of supply of capital for industry, so far as I know.

First, we must look to personal or private savings, personal accumulations, as the reservoir on which to draw to carry on the industry of the country. Secondly, we must look to the corporate savings or reserves. Beyond these two, one may reason about it as one pleases, but we can look only to the State. Where else are they to be found? How can factories be built; how can men be put back to work; how can industries be expanded, all the theorists to the contrary notwithstanding, unless by recourse to personal savings or to corporate savings, or unless we go into the Public Treasury?

I am speaking plainly, but I do not desire to be misunderstood.

Mr. President, have we considered that our present personal income-tax rate in the highest bracket requires a man who falls in that bracket to pay $79 out of every $100 that he earns? Out of every $100 that such an individual in America earns, with exceptions that I need not note here, he must pay into the Treasury of the United States $75 surtax plus $4 normal tax, or a total of $79.

Consider the State taxes and estate taxes. Let us face the question fairly. Are we going to find the resources for the development of America in our personal savings and personal reserves? Now, with an estate tax which distributes the larger estates for all practical purposes, so far as financing the industries of a developing nation are concerned, with a personal-income tax that takes $79 out of every $100 from highest tax-paying bracket, what reserves can we find in the account of the personal-tax payers? Where will we go to finance the industries of a developing and expanding Nation such as ours?

Mr. President, I think we are a young nation. I do not think we have reached the limit of our capacity; I do not think we are always going to have unemployment. I believe that the resources of this Nation are ample and that in the future we will expand our industries to such an extent as will make radio and automobile and other marvelous industries of the present of minor consequence in our great industrial picture. It cannot be done if neither individuals nor corporations are allowed to accumulate working capital or permitted to accumulate capital that will build new factories, expand plants, put men to work.

Moreover, Mr. President, it is peculiarly unfortunate, in the opinion of the majority of the committee, that we should be called upon to adopt a new system of corporate income taxation when we have had no sufficient study of this problem, when confessedly we have no illuminating picture of even a cross section of the corporate structure of the United States for study in the light of the provisions of the bill passed by the House.

Mr. President, there is one other feature of the subject that I wish to discuss, because I desire to be fair. Because there is opportunity for tax avoidance by those taxpayers who, if the earnings of corporations were distributed, would be called upon to pay a much higher tax than they would pay when the earnings are permitted to be plowed back or to remain in the corporation, and because the Treasury has suffered by reason of the acts of some who have abused our present law, is no sufficient reason why we should look with a narrow and contracted vision at those particular offenders and make laws that apply to the corporation that is actually withholding its income for legitimate purposes, for the purpose of carrying forward its program, for the purpose of employing men, for the purpose, Mr. President, of making it possible again to afford employment to all the people of the United States. In other words, we cannot afford to depart from a tried and established basis of taxation and embark on an untried experimental program because we are aggravated or annoyed somewhat on account of the conduct of a relatively few corporations in the United States.

We are proceeding in this bill, as best we can, to locate the offenders. We are putting a surtax on undistributed earnings. We will have the opportunity to scrutinize the returns of corporate taxpayers, and we will have the opportunity to make a sufficient study of this problem. We are strengthening the penalty sections of the law, which will make it at least extremely hazardous for any corporation to withhold more than 40 percent of its earnings in any one year without a valid and just reason for withholding them. We are proposing, Mr. President, to proceed on the basis on which we are now traveling so far as our corporate-tax income law is concerned until we have had the opportunity to study the question, until the joint committee on taxation has had the opportunity to consider all the ramifications of this proposal, because we all know, of course, that, at least, in all probability, we will not be able to adjourn another Congress without a revision of our taxing acts.

Mr. President, that is all I have to say on this matter at this time.

Mr. GUFFEY. Mr. President, out of regular order, on behalf of my colleague the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS] and myself, I offer an amendment and ask to have it printed and lie on the table. I understand this amendment to the bill has been consented to by both the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY]. It provides that the tax imposed by section 702 shall not apply to the first domestic processing of the first 8,000 tons of palm oil which the Commissioner is satisfied is used in the manufacture of tin plate in each fiscal year, beginning with the fiscal year 1937.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In accordance with the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania, the amendment will be received, printed, and lie on the table.

AMENDMENT OF NAVY COMPOSITION ACT

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POPE in the chair) laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5730) to amend section 3 (b) of an act entitled "An act to establish the composition of the United States Navy with respect to the categories of vessels limited by the treaties signed at Washington, February 6, 1922, and at London, April 22, 1930, at the limits prescribed by those treaties; to authorize the construction of certain naval vessels; and for other purposes", approved March 27, 1934, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. WALSH. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, agree to the request of the House for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. WALSH, Mr. TYDINGS, and Mr. HALE conferees on the part of the Senate.

LINCOLN ELLSWORTH

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3770) to award a special gold medal to Lincoln Ellsworth, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the President of the United States is authorized to present a gold medal of appropriate design, with accompanying distinctive ribbon, to Lincoln Ellsworth, noted American explorer and outstanding pioneer in exploratory aviation in the Arctic and in Antarctica, for claiming on behalf of the United States approximately 350,000 square miles of land in Antarctica between the eightieth and one hundred and twentieth meridians west of Greenwich, representing the last unclaimed territory in the world, and for his exceptionally meritorious services to science and aeronautics in making a 2,500-mile aerial survey of the heart of Antarctica, thus paving the way for more detailed studies of geological, meteorological, and geographical questions of world-wide importance and benefit. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated such sum as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

Mr. JOHNSON. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

INTERNAL-REVENUE TAXATION

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12395) to provide revenue, equalize taxation, and for other purposes.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk which is offered on behalf of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] and myself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama on behalf of himself and the Senator from Wisconsin will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 30, it is proposed to strike out lines 6 to 17, inclusive, and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

Upon normal-tax net incomes not in excess of $2,000, 12½ percent.

$250 upon normal-tax net incomes of $2,000; and upon normal-tax net incomes in excess of $2,000 and not in excess of $15,000, 13 percent in addition of such excess.

$1,940 upon normal-tax net incomes of $15,000; and upon normal-tax net incomes in excess of $15,000 and not in excess of $40,000, 14 percent in addition of such excess.

$5,440 upon normal-tax net incomes of $40,000; and upon normal-tax net incomes in excess of $40,000, 15 percent in addition of such excess.

On page 31, to strike out lines 8 to 12, both inclusive, and to insert:

(2) The term "undistributed net income" means the adjusted net income minus the sum of (A) the dividends paid credit provided in section 27; (B) the credit provided in section 26 (c), relating to contracts not to pay dividends, and (C) $15,000.

On page 31, to strike out lines 13 to 16, both inclusive, and in lieu thereof to insert the following:

(b) IMPOSITION OF TAX.—There shall be levied, collected, and paid for each taxable year upon the net income of every corporation a surtax equal to the sum of the following:

0 percent of so much of the undistributed net income as is not in excess of 20 percent of the adjusted net income.

20 percent of so much of the undistributed net income as is in excess of 20 percent of the adjusted net income and not in excess of 40 percent of the adjusted net income.

30 percent of so much of the undistributed net income as is in excess of 40 percent of the adjusted net income.

On page 54, line 14, after the word "year" to insert a comma and the following:

including dividends paid in stock of the corporation or in rights to acquire stock in the corporation, which constitute income to the shareholder within the meaning of the sixteenth amendment to the Constitution.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for the purpose of the suggestion of the absence of a quorum?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield for that purpose?

Mr. BLACK. I do.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-three Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, while the pending bill comes before us designated as a bill reported by the Finance Committee, or approved by the majority of the Finance Committee, it is my belief that it is not entitled to either designation.

Only one real record vote was taken in the Finance Committee on the abstract fundamental issue which is presented in this amendment. That came in the early part of the effort to reach a vote. At that time the vote was 12 to 8 against the idea of exacting a tax on undistributed corporate profits. The majority of 12, however, was made up of a part of the Republican membership of the committee, which, according to my information, intends to vote for the amendment as reported by the Finance Committee, and against the bill after it shall have succeeded in placing this provision in the measure; and, in my judgment, if these Republican members can succeed in forcing through, as a Democratic measure, a tax bill in the nature of the one reported by the Finance Committee, they will have demonstrated political wisdom and sagacity.

So, in the beginning, I desire to state that, according to that record vote on the objectives of taxing undistributed corporate profits, eliminating those members on the opposite side of the aisle who, for tactical reasons of their own, saw fit to vote for an amendment to the bill, intending to vote later against the entire tax measure, it does not follow that the bill with these provisions comes here as a bill of the majority of the Finance Committee.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I had hoped the Senator from Alabama would not make such a statement as that; and now I propose to state what the facts were, because it is only fair to the other members of the committee.

Early in the deliberations on this measure, on a motion which I made that the committee not impose on undistributed profits any surtax in excess of 4 percent, the vote in the committee was 12 to 4. I shall not do more than mention the fact that practically all of those who were absent were accounted for in that vote. Subsequently, on the motion of the chairman of the committee—unfortunately, he is ill, and I regret very much to make this statement, but in fairness to the majority members of the committee I do make it—we adopted the 7-percent surtax upon distributed earnings, after an earnest appeal by the chairman that if we would take that, the committee would take it; and, as I recollect, there was but one vote against that proposal.

Now I wish to say——

Mr. BLACK. Just a moment.

Mr. GEORGE. Wait; I am rising to a question of personal privilege.

Mr. BLACK. I have the floor.

Mr. GEORGE. And I rise to a question of personal privilege.

Mr. BLACK. I insist that under that statement I should continue to keep the floor. I did not interrupt the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. GEORGE. That is true; but the Senator is going back into the executive sessions of the Finance Committee and stating that this bill is not the product of the committee.

Mr. BLACK. I am not going back into the executive sessions of the Finance Committee. I am going into the votes that were publicly announced by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, on the final vote on the bill, of the Senators present all voted to report it favorably but four, and they were not all on the Democratic side of the committee.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I repeat the statement I made in the beginning that the record shows, and it was published in all the newspapers of the country, that the record vote on the question of adhering to the President's plan was 12 to 8, as given out to the press. That record vote on the 12 side contained the Members on the other side of the aisle.

With reference to the statement that this agreement was made by the entire committee, and that there was only one vote against the 7 percent, that statement is correct. There was only one vote against the 7 percent, which at that time was the best that could be obtained, and the choice was between that and something lower. There certainly was vehement opposition expressed in the committee to raising the flat corporate tax on every corporation in the country, including 230,000 small corporations. As a matter of fact, upon my request, as I recall—I know the request was made—there was a division on the two points.

I thought it proper, and I still think it proper, to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that so far as the objectives asked for in the President's program were concerned, the vote of the committee was not unanimous, and it was not 18 to 1.

Mr. President, it seems to me that the able and distinguished Senator from Georgia, by the tone of his speech, has really shown the difference in opinion of certain groups in America with reference to taxes. A very earnest reference is made by him to high income taxes and high inheritance taxes, leaving the distinct impression that high income taxes in the high-income brackets, and high inheritance taxes in the high-estate brackets, constitute an unfortunate thing for the people of America. As a matter of fact, as I understood, the statement was made that those who were so unfortunate as to be in the high income-tax brackets were compelled to pay these stupendous taxes.

Mr. President, there are millions of American citizens who do not subscribe to the doctrine that a man is unfortunate because, perchance, he makes five or ten million dollars a year, and is compelled to pay 75 or 79 percent of his income to the Government in taxes. As a matter of fact, I believe it is true, and I believe practically 90 percent of the Senators in this Chamber would vouch for the statement, that it would not be wise to go into any State of the Union and announce to the people that the candidate who was asking for their suffrages was against the imposition of high income and high inheritance taxes on large incomes and the very wealthy estates.

It is my belief that the income-tax law, the rates of which have gradually been raised until they reach 75 and 79 percent, and the high tax on estates represent the strong impulse pressing behind the Members of the House and the Senate on the part of more than 90 percent of the population of the United States of America.

I do not subscribe to the doctrine that this Nation at this time is in danger of being destroyed or its economic system disrupted or overturned by reason of a lack of capital. Nor do I subscribe to the doctrine that the source of wealth or the production of wealth is determined by the amount of surplus which someone has created in the United States. I subscribe rather to the doctrine announced by economists, both liberal and conservative, in this Nation, that the sources of wealth in the United States, as in every other country in the world, rest chiefly upon the products of the soil and on the labor of human beings.

I do not subscribe to the doctrine that this Nation at present is in any danger from any shortage of capital. As the system is now functioning, everyone knows that factories have been built in every part of the Nation with capital which has been accumulated in surpluses until factories have been compelled to close their doors, and stop the wheels of industry from revolving. That was not on account of any absence of capital or of accumulated surplus. As a matter of fact, many of the most thoughtful economists of the present day subscribe to exactly the opposite theory, that is, that those factories were closed, at least in part, and that business was paralyzed, at least in part, because a surplus of capital had accumulated in the hands of people who were not willing to reinvest it and take the low prices at which they would be compelled to sell the goods if they continued to compete with multitudinous factories and places of business all over this Nation.

I state to the Senate that in this simple controversy, this simple difference of honest opinion between the views of myself and the Senator from Georgia, I believe, rests the difference between the substitute offered by the Senator from Wisconsin and myself and the bill offered by a part of the Senate Finance Committee.

The Senator from Wisconsin and I—and I believe others who voted for the original objective of the President—believe that under one of the accepted canons of taxation taxes should be levied upon those who are best able to bear them. We take the position that the bill offered by a part of the Finance Committee abandons this principle, that it throws it overboard, and says that the United States has reached the time when the only thing necessary to provide for the reemployment of citizens is to abandon that good old wholesome principle, which most Americans believe to be right, that we should impose the taxes upon those who are best able to pay the taxes out of that which they have.

Mr. President, I will now call attention to the effect on the corporate structure of this country as between our proposal and the committee proposal. There are in the United States of America, according to the estimates given us by the Treasury, something over 257,000 corporations. About 90 percent of those corporations make under $15,000 a year. I have the record before me.

A great deal has been said about the effect of our substitute upon the incomes of corporations making a million dollars profit. We admit that our proposal would require the corporations which make a million or five million or seven million dollars in profits to pay more taxes than will the Senate Finance Committee bill—if those corporations should retain their earnings in their treasuries. We admit that. We claim that as a virtue of our proposal, because we believe in imposing taxes, in the first place, upon those who are best able to pay.

Our bill would eliminate from any surplus corporate tax every little struggling corporation in the United States, in any State, which makes an income of less than $15,000 a year. That would apply to about 230,000 of the 257,000 corporations. Note that our amendment would exempt from one nickel of surplus tax every one of those 230,000 small corporations, which have a hard time now, and difficulties enough, in competing with those which have large accumulations of wealth.

Does the Senate Finance Committee bill do that? It does not. It puts exactly the same percentage of surplus tax—and if I am mistaken I should like to be corrected—upon the corporation making ten thousand or fifteen thousand or twenty thousand, as upon the corporation making five million profits.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, the Senator does not mean that it imposes the same rate.

Mr. BLACK. I said the 7-percent rate, the same rate.

Mr. GEORGE. On the undistributed earnings?

Mr. BLACK. Certainly; that is exactly what I mean. There may be some here who believe that they ought to vote for a bill which recognizes no distinction, which recognizes no right to have a graduation in the amount of the taxes between those 230,000 corporations making from a thousand to two thousand or three thousand or four thousand or ten thousand or fifteen thousand dollars a year. They may believe we should take the same yardstick, in the interest of increasing the surpluses of the Nation, and impose the same tax upon the large corporations that we impose on the small ones which have incomes from ten to fifteen thousand dollars a year. Those who believe that way would naturally favor the provisions reported by the Senate Finance Committee. But what we want is to make Senators understand the facts, and we want the people of this Nation to understand the facts, so that there will be no talk about favoring this other measure as a protection to the small corporate enterprises of this Nation.

I repeat, so that no one need misunderstand, we want it in the RECORD that under our proposal practically 90 percent of the corporations of the United States, to wit, those with incomes of less than $15,000 a year, will not be taxed one dime for accumulating surpluses on the undistributed profits.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, is it not fair to say that the Senator is talking about ordinary commercial corporations? The Senator does not include many manufacturing corporations among those which would make less than $15,000 a year.

Mr. BLACK. Oh, yes; I include all making less than $15,000. I know a great many which make under $15,000 a year. There are a great many of them in the State in which I live, and in my judgment there are many of them in the State of Georgia and other States.

Mr. GEORGE. Would the Senator mind stating how many manufacturing corporations make less than $15,000 a year which are taxable at all?

Mr. BLACK. I cannot say how many of these corporations are actually engaged in manufacturing, but I say that there are practically 230,000 corporations out of the total of 257,000 in the Nation which make less than $15,000 a year.

Let me go a step farther. Let us go on up to those which make $40,000 a year. Under our proposal those which make $40,000 a year, as Senators will find if they look in yesterday's RECORD, will be taxed a smaller amount on all undistributed profits than they would be under the bill as reported by the Finance Committee.

If Senators are going to apply the same yardstick of tax rates on undistributed surpluses to the small corporations that they do to the vast, colossal organizations which extend themselves all over the Nation, then they should support the Senate Finance Committee bill.

Let us see what the result of the flat corporate tax is on the small corporation. The Senate Finance Committee bill proposes to raise the flat corporate tax of all the 257,000 corporations in the Nation a flat 3 percent. Today it is 12½ to 15 percent. We propose to leave that as it is. We do not believe it is fair or just to raise the flat corporate tax 3 percent on all the corporations in America, the small and the large, until we have first made an honest and diligent effort to stop the monumental tax avoidance to which I expect to call attention in a few moments.

The fight between these two proposals, as I see it, is a fight between those who believe in imposing the additional taxes upon those who have been escaping their fair share of taxes heretofore and those who insist that in spite of this tax evasion, because, forsooth, we have not waited long enough, and we do not know exactly how many millions of dollars or billions of dollars they have been avoiding, that we should wait until we have had time to measure each penny, and each nickel, and each dime, in an effort to tell the country exactly how many billions of dollars in taxes have been avoided by people who have been using this device to keep from paying their honest and fair part of the taxes imposed by the Federal Government. So, Mr. President, we do not propose to raise the flat corporate tax as it exists today.

Why do we say that you should give unusual consideration to the small corporation? The small corporation as a rule may be composed of only two or three people living in a community. Perhaps they have started out in a new business. They do not have access to all the markets, as do the larger corporations. They do not have the opportunity of making trades upon a basis of large volumes of purchases. They start off at a disadvantage. We take the position that it is fair and just and right to give them a natural and normal chance for expansion by exempting them 100 percent from the undistributed-profits tax. Those who take the other viewpoint say, "Oh, yes, we will put on a 7-percent surplus tax, but it must apply to the corporation which makes $5,000 profit, the one which makes $10,000 profit, and to the one which makes $1,000,000, or $2,000,000, or $10,000,000 profit, in identically the same manner."

Then we hear the statement that all of that is done for the benefit of the small corporation and the small taxpayer!

Mr. President, we take the position, as I previously stated, that these small corporations are entitled to this exemption on their undistributed profits and we provide it in our amendment. The Senate Finance Committee bill does not make such provision.

Let us see just what our measure does provide. If Senators will look in the RECORD of yesterday they will see exactly the effect of our provision. They will find a table on page 8678 of the RECORD of yesterday showing the effect of our proposal, the effect of the Senate committee proposal, and the effect of the House committee proposal on a $40,000 corporation income and on a $100,000 corporation income. We do not have in the table a statement of the effect on a $1,000,000 corporation income. We have it accessible to those who desire to read it. I will state, so there may be no misunderstanding, that our amendment would increase the taxes on undistributed profits of the million-dollar-profit corporation more than would the bill of the Senate Finance Committee.

The statement has been made that by strengthening section 102 it will be possible to prevent tax avoidance. Many Senators are lawyers. Some have had experience in tax matters. Let me say to Senators just what would have to be done in connection with proving that a corporation was withholding its profits unnecessarily. In the first place, the internal-revenue collector passes upon the question. Then the corporation can carry it on its slow and tedious way through all the courts, until finally it reaches the Supreme Court of the United States, and possibly receives an opinion of 5 to 4 one way or the other. It would be a long time before any single case ever reached the Supreme Court of the United States. In every effort to impose such a penalty the Government would be confronted with insuperable obstacles.

It is a vain and an illusory hope to anticipate that the Government of the United States will ever be able to prevent tax avoidance on the part of corporate officials by the simple expedient of charging and proving against them that they have withheld a distribution of profits to avoid taxes.

I might state in that connection that I received a letter from Detroit from a stockholder of one of the large corporations. He said that he had noticed that there was a great deal of worry on the part of stockholders because someone had said that his company would be forced to pay dividends to him. He said, "Perhaps some people think the company should not be forced to pay dividends when it made them, but I cannot subscribe to that doctrine."

I think it is true that there are a great many people in this Nation who would favor the tax on undistributed profits if the argument for such tax were based on the plain, simple idea that a man who invests his money in a corporation is entitled to anticipate that the corporation will declare dividends on its earnings, and that on that basis alone there would be much justice in favor of a tax on undistributed profits.

As all Senators know, until about 2 weeks ago it was generally believed that it was impossible to tax stock dividends as income of the recipient of those stock dividends. About 2 weeks ago, however, the Supreme Court of the United States rendered an opinion which appeared in the RECORD, in which it decided if those stock dividends were declared in a different type of stock than the stock which was originally held by the owner, that those dividends did constitute actual income—taxable income, if you please—in the hands of the stockholder recipient.

That being true, we have provided in such manner as to avoid any possible misunderstanding, that stock dividends declared in such manner that they are taxable in the hands of the recipient will be considered as distributed profits against which no undistributed-profits tax is imposed. Under that provision there is no corporation that could not retain every dollar of the money it needed in its treasury by simply declaring stock dividends for the profits which had been accumulated. Of course it would be necessary for them to declare stock dividends of such kind that they were taxable in the hands of the recipient. If that should be done those who have previously been escaping taxation on the same basis on which millions of others had to pay, would be compelled to come in and pay taxes on the profits they had received.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. BONE. Would it not be possible for corporations to evade the effect of that kind of decision of the Supreme Court by distributing stock of a character that would escape taxation?

Mr. BLACK. The Senator is correct. They could, but if they did that then under the provisions of our amendment the surplus tax would apply after the exemption of the first $15,000 and the exemption of 20 percent.

The bill as reported by the Finance Committee does not give even this 20-percent exemption. It tells the small corporation and the large corporation that the surplus tax is going to be applied if they fail to distribute 100 cents on the dollar. Our proposal on the contrary especially provides not only an exemption of $15,000, but an exemption on the first 20 percent of undistributed profits of the corporation.

I have always thought that a measure of this kind should contain some kind of provision that a certain amount of the profits should be left untaxed even if they were undistributed. Our proposal would carry out that idea.

Bear in mind the smallest, weakest corporation in the Nation, which heretofore has been paying perhaps 12½, 14, or 15 percent, we will say, now has its tax raised by the committee proposal 7 percent more and 3 percent more, making a total of 10 percent if that little corporation retains its profits in its treasury. Our amendment would not do that, and we believe on that basis it is preferable to the committee proposal.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. Certainly.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator said a moment ago he had a compilation for a corporation which made $1,000,000 profit in line with the illustrations of $40,000 and $100,000 profit. Would the Senator mind reading what the tax on that corporation would be under his plan?

Mr. BLACK. In brief, where all profits are distributed, under the bill as reported by the Finance Committee, the tax would be $179,440.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is on the basis of $1,000,000 profit?

Mr. BLACK. Yes. Under our proposal it would be $149,440. When we get up to a 40-percent retention, the bill as reported by the Senate Finance Committee would provide a tax of $194,000, and under our plan it would be $162,000. On a 50-percent retention under the Finance Committee plan the tax would be $201,000 and under our amendment, $182,000.

From that point on the figures under our proposal would be larger than those proposed by the Finance Committee. Let us take an instance where 80 percent is retained.

If 80 percent is retained now, and dividends of 20 percent paid, under the bill reported by the Finance Committee the tax would be $222,000, and under our proposal $272,000.

Mr. TYDINGS. Has the Senator the figures for corporations earning more than $1,000,000?

Mr. BLACK. No; I have not. However, I will state to the Senator that in each instance where I have seen the figures and I assume it would be true in all others, though I cannot state definitely until we reach the 50-percent retention, under our proposal the tax is lower. After we reach 50 percent the tax is higher under our proposal.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. BONE. In the case of a corporation which makes $100,000 net profit in a year, what would the tax be?

Mr. BLACK. The figures are set forth on page 8678 of the RECORD of yesterday.

Mr. BONE. In the event a corporation should make $100,000 net profit, what would be the total tax payable under the Senator's amendment? Would it be $14,440?

Mr. BLACK. No; that is in case all the profits are distributed. Under our plan it would be $14,440, and under the Finance Committee plan it would be $17,440.

Mr. BONE. Out of $100,000 available for distribution, the Government would take $14,440 if it were all distributed, and the stockholders would take the remainder, which would be $86,000.

Mr. BLACK. That is correct.

Mr. BONE. On $50,000 net profit the Government would take $15,000, and approximately $35,000 would be available for distribution to the stockholders.

Mr. BLACK. That is correct.

Mr. BONE. Under the bill reported by the Finance Committee, $19,000 would go to the Government in taxes, and the remainder would be for distribution. It would seem that under the Senator's amendment corporations which fall in the brackets of $100,000 or less available for dividends would pay considerably less than under the Finance Committee's plan. Am I correct?

Mr. BLACK. The Senator is correct with reference to $100,000.

Mr. BONE. Or less?

Mr. BLACK. There is a difference between the $100,000 and lesser amounts. As we go down in profits, under our proposal the surplus tax on the corporation would be less until we reach $15,000 profits, where the surplus tax would be nothing. In addition to the $15,000, under our proposal the first 20 percent of profits is also exempt.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, am I to understand the Senator to say that in any case, under his proposal, 20 percent of the earned net income is exempt?

Mr. BLACK. The Senator is correct.

Mr. TYDINGS. And that $15,000 is also exempt?

Mr. BLACK. The adjusted statutory amount; that is correct.

Mr. TYDINGS. Would there be a case where the $15,000 and 20 percent would both be exempt; or, if the $15,000 equaled the 20 percent, then, would the one exemption apply?

Mr. BLACK. It would work in this way:

In the first place, $15,000 would be exempt, so that if there was only $15,000 profit there would be no surplus tax. If there should be a profit of twenty-five or thirty thousand dollars, the first $15,000 would be exempt from the surplus tax. In addition to that, there would be taken off the amount of the corporation tax paid. Then, from the remainder, 20 percent more would be exempted, so that until we get up to about $50,000 of profit for a corporation the tax under our proposal is a smaller amount in all the brackets than the tax under the Senate Finance Committee proposal. It is only after the high-profit brackets are reached, after 50 percent of the undistributed profits is passed, that the taxes would be more under our proposal than under the Senate Finance Committee proposal. Do I make that clear to the Senator?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes. On what page is that illustration?

Mr. BLACK. Page 8678 of the RECORD.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I think I misunderstood the statement of the Senator, or I did not get the table right in my mind. I see that the table set out on page 8678 is a study of figures predicated on a net income of $100,000.

Mr. BLACK. That is correct.

Mr. BONE. I misunderstood the table when I first asked the question.

Mr. BLACK. One of the tables is based on $100,000 net income, and the other is based on $40,000 net income.

As I stated, Mr. President, when the exemption of $15,000 is given under our proposal; when the further exemption of $15,000 profit is given, which eliminates 90 percent in number of all the corporations in the Nation; when we then take from the amount on which the undistributed-profits tax is to be paid the amount of corporate tax; when we further take 20 percent of the total profits left, we find that for the small corporations of the Nation we have left ample and complete opportunity for them to have the reasonable business expansion which is so essential to the increase and growth of real, substantial small businesses in America, if we are not to have a nation wholly and completely composed of a few large groups that control every type and kind of business in America.

Not only that; we have offered a sufficient incentive to the larger corporations to bring about a distribution of their surpluses so that it should tend to prevent a repetition of the disgraceful episodes which Senators know have occurred with reference to the surpluses of large corporations in the boom days of the twenties. Senators recall how during those days, as today, a very small handfull of individuals controlled the corporate destiny of all the large corporations of the Nation.

If any of you are small stockholders in a large corporation, I think I could safely ask you if you ever attended a stockholders' meeting. I think I could safely ask you if you ever knew who it was to whom you sent your proxy, if you sent a proxy. I think I could safely ask you if you had anything on earth to do with determining the dividend-distribution policies of the corporation in which you are a stockholder. You did not.

If you were a stockholder of any of these corporations with huge corporate surpluses in 1928, did you have anything to do with determining the policy by which the surplus which has been withheld from honest dividends to you was loaned out on the stock exchange, in the gambling of the Street, there to manipulate the stock market, not for your advantage, but for the advantage of the very persons who were controlling and manipulating your corporate surplus? You did not have anything whatever to do with it. One of the darkest pages in the financial history of this Nation is the jiggling up and jiggling down of stock by persons who were controlling other people's money in the form of corporate surpluses, money which had not been distributed because those who controlled the surplus knew that if they kept it in the treasury of the corporation, they could manipulate it to their own advantage, and in addition to that, they could escape the 75-percent income brackets, and keep the corporation tax in the 15-percent bracket.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. ADAMS. I wish to say to the Senator from Alabama that tax matters are largely a mystery to me, and probably the question I wish to ask has been covered in the Finance Committee; so the Senator will pardon me for asking, perhaps, a stupid question.

As I understand, however, the premise of the Senator's argument is that the tax should be borne by the taxpayer in proportion to his ability to pay.

Mr. BLACK. That is correct.

Mr. ADAMS. In a partnership the partners report their share of partnership earnings, and pay in proportion to their rates.

Mr. BLACK. The Senator is correct.

Mr. ADAMS. Is it legally possible to apply that principle to corporations? I ask the question for this reason:

Suppose the case of a man who has very little. All he has is a few shares of stock. He happens to have the stock in a corporation with large earnings. Along with him is a stockholder with large capital. As matters stand, when we tax the corporation the same rate is imposed both upon the man of small income and upon the man of large income. My inquiry is whether it is legally possible to apply to the corporation the principle which we apply to the partnership, so that the tax actually is imposed in proportion to ability to pay.

Mr. BLACK. I may state to the Senator that that is exactly what we have tried to do, and is the direction in which we are going with our proposal. That, in my judgment, is not the direction in which the other report is going. Let me call the Senator's attention to that matter with reference to his illustration. I am glad he made it.

Here is a small stockholder in a large corporation who pays no income tax at all. Here is another stockholder by his side who is in the 75-percent bracket. If the dividends should be distributed, therefore, the small stockholder would not have to pay a nickel in tax until we provide a change of the normal tax on dividends, and even then he may not pay the 4 percent. So when we raise the flat corporate tax 3 percent, and add a flat 7 percent to the 3 percent, and do not provide a sufficient incentive for these tax dodgers to declare dividends, the result is that we have added a 10-percent tax to the small stockholder in the corporation, while we have not injured to any appreciable extent the gentleman in the 75-percent bracket.

Carrying the Senator's illustration just a step further, if two men are engaged in a partnership and one of them needs money to expand his business, the Finance Committee bill does not require an exemption for them from the payment of taxes in the brackets where they naturally fall. They are left to pay their tax whether it is in the 25-percent or in the 75-percent bracket; but when we do that we impose the graduated individual income tax upon the members of a partnership working side by side and in competition with the corporation, and we permit the stockholders in the corporation to escape the same graduated tax by imposing only the corporate tax.

It is to accomplish exactly the purpose the Senator has mentioned that we have attempted in this measure to prevent hanging a tax of 10 percent more upon the stockholders of corporations who are in the low income-tax brackets. We are opposed to raising the flat corporate tax 3 percent. That is what the Finance Committee report does. In addition to that, as I have stated to the Senator, in these days when the small corporations are struggling to free themselves from the monopolistic competition of their largely financed competitors, there hangs over their heads like the sword of Damocles, suspended there by the Finance Committee bill, a tax increase of 3 percent, and a statement, "If you keep one dollar in your treasury, you must pay 7 percent additional."

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, is it possible from a legal and administrative standpoint to assimilate the tax procedure applicable to corporatons as is done in the case of a partnership?

Is it legally possible to say to each corporation, "Make a report of the proportionate earnings of each stockholder", as we would to a partnership, and then let the stockholder make his return?

Mr. BLACK. Unfortunately that was done about 60 years ago, and while it is my recollection that the Supreme Court itself sustained the act, it later, by another divided opinion, changed its mind and struck down the act as being in contravention of the Constitution. So that it is impossible to tax the undistributed profits which remain in the corporate treasury as a part of the individual incomes of the stockholders.

In order to achieve the same result we have suggested a proposal which imposes no corporate tax on undistributed profits if the corporation declares a stock dividend of such nature as to be taxable under the recent Supreme Court opinion. In that case, the case of Koshland against Helvering, the Court distinguished clearly and unequivocally between a normal stock dividend of the same kind and nature as the stock on which the dividend was declared and a stock dividend of a distinctly different nature from the stock on which the dividend was declared.

In order to carry out and obtain the full benefit of that, so that we can permit every corporation, if it desires, to retain 100 cents of every dollar in its treasury, if its stockholders wish, we have provided that there shall not be one dollar of corporate undistributed profit tax imposed upon that corporation if it distributes its dividends in a stock dividend which is taxable in the hands of the stockholders.

Who can object to that? I will state to the Senator who can object to it, and it is only one group. It is the group in this Nation composed of those in the high income-tax brackets who prefer to permit their profits to remain in the treasury, either at 15 or 18 percent, rather than have dividends declared, by stock dividend or otherwise, and be compelled to pay a tax under the brackets which the Congress has provided.

Mr. President, I have every reason in the world to believe that the Treasury Department is right in the figures it reports to us. I do not agree at all with the statement that the Treasury Department does not know what it is talking about. The Treasury Department tells us, may I say to the Senator from Colorado, that this very year, if we will require these gentlemen in the high income-tax brackets to pay income taxes as others do, on what they make, according to law, we will collect more than $600,000,000 in additional revenue, without raising the tax rate a single penny on the 230,000 small corporations doing business in this Nation.

I do not want any misunderstanding about this matter. Those who want that system to continue to exist, those who prefer to let the group to which I am referring escape, may do so. A number of the names in this group appear in the confidential hearings of the committee. We know who some of them are. While the names have not yet been made public, I hope every one of them will be. The issue is, Shall those gentlemen be permitted to continue to make playthings of the income-tax brackets which have been fixed by the Congress and the Executive under the laws of this Nation, or shall we make them pay a tax on an honest basis, as other people do?

Let me give an illustration. I will call no names. I have the right to give illustrations without calling names, and I expose no confidential information. I could give many illustrations. There are in the record illustrations of individuals who, by the simple device of having corporations controlled largely by them leave the profits in the corporation income treasury, have escaped taxation in a single year of more than a million dollars. With the limited time given to study the record, we have found others who have escaped the payment of more than $3,000,000 in a single year. When the truth is revealed, and when the names are published so that the people of the United States can read them, they will find that some of the loudest protests against this particular proposal are made by the very people who are using this scheme to keep from paying their own part of the taxes.

We have included in our report one illustration—and it is just one of many—of a corporation which paid an income tax of about $700,000, and if the profits had been declared in dividends, one stockholder of that corporation would have been compelled to pay, in the bracket where he fell, more than three and a half million dollars.

We are told that this is not the time to stop such evasion. We are told that we cannot tell to a penny how many millions and billions of dollars of taxes have been lost to the Government through this avenue of escape. I claim, Mr. President, that it is immaterial whether it is one billion or five billion, the honest people of this Nation, who pay their taxes as the law provides they should, are entitled to be protected from any such tax avoidance and tax evasion. I claim that it would be nothing short of a legislative crime—and I do not intend to be a party to it with my vote—to raise $600,000,000 in taxes, as is proposed in the Senate Finance Committee bill, by raising the corporate rate on those who are paying their taxes honestly now, the small corporations of this country, and on individuals on whom the surtax is imposed, before we first prove to the Nation that we are here representing all of the people of this country and not a small group of them, and pass a tax bill which will make these people pay their honest part of the taxes of the Nation.

Let no man be deceived as to the issue. The Treasury Department, which is a part of the executive branch of this Government, after investigation reports that we can collect more than $600,000,000 in taxes from those who have been escaping the payment of taxes. The President said in his message, Mr. Helvering said, Mr. Morgenthau said, that without raising the taxes one dime on a single individual in this Nation, except through the passage of a bill which would raise the taxes on the small group which has escaped the payment of taxes heretofore by keeping the profits buried in the treasury, we can raise more than $600,000,000.

The question the Senate will have to answer is whether it desires to raise these taxes as the President said they could be raised, as Mr. Helvering testified before the committee they could be raised, and as Mr. Morgenthau testified before the committee they could be raised, out of those who are evading the payment of their taxes on the specious cry that it may affect business if we make people pay their taxes honestly, or dodge the issue and say, "We will postpone it to another day."

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the Senator suggests that Mr. Morgenthau and Mr. Helvering appeared before the committee favoring the House bill. Does the Senator favor the House bill?

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I believe the proposal we have made is simpler than the House bill. We have avoided complexities and we have raised the issue so the people of this country will know what it is. No one need be deceived. We have presented the issue and the vote on our proposal will demonstrate whether the Senate as a body favors attempting to stop tax evasion and tax frauds now or whether we shall postpone such efforts to a later time.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DUFFY in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. My understanding is—and I got it from the newspapers—that shortly after the committee began to consider the House bill the Senator from Virginia pointed out certain instances where corporations would be able to avoid payment of taxes under the House bill. I should like to ask the Senator whether or not the proposal he makes meets the point raised by the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. BLACK. The Senator from Virginia called attention to the fact that under the House bill, by reason of the fact that we repealed the flat corporation tax, a large number or corporations would be exempted from the payment of any tax at all. We have reinstated the corporation tax in our proposal exactly as it existed last year.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. BAILEY. Does the Senator mean to suggest to the Senate that his amendment was according to the recommendation—not the recommendation but the invitation of the President merely to consider certain suggestions?

Mr. BLACK. I certainly do.

Mr. BAILEY. Did the President suggest that we maintain the normal income taxes?

Mr. BLACK. The President suggested that we stop the tax leak which exists by reason of certain people escaping payment of their taxes. That is the issue before this body. That is the issue I am discussing.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator is going to be frank—I know him—and he will tell the Senate that the House bill, which I take it reflected the recommendation of the President, or his invitation, as I read his language, did not contain any reference whatever to maintaining the existing normal rate on the corporate income, and the President's invitation to consider his method, if you may call it his method, distinctly said we should abandon those rates, and that we should abandon the capital-stock tax. The Senator's amendment does not do that.

Mr. BLACK. I know and the Senator knows that the President favors a bill which will tend to stop this tax evasion and which will put a tax on undistributed profits.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, that is not the question I raised.

Mr. BLACK. That is the issue that I have raised.

Mr. BAILEY. We are all in favor of that.

Mr. BLACK. That is the only issue raised by our amendment. The issue raised by our amendment is the issue of a tax on undistributed profits. I do not intend to be diverted from the plain words of our amendment. Our amendment provides a tax on undistributed profits so that we will begin to reach some of these men who have been escaping taxes of $50,000, $100,000, $200,000, $1,000,000, $2,000,000, $3,000,000 per year by the simple expedient of having the corporations which they control keep the money in the treasury. That is the issue raised in our amendment.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. BAILEY. I wish to assure the distinguished Senator that I do not intend to divert him. I understood him to make statements indicating that he was claiming that his amendment was in line with the suggestions of the President. I am telling him now and I am telling the Senate that I have the suggestions of the President in my hand. The President did not suggest that we maintain the present normal taxes, and yet that is precisely what the Senator's amendment does. If the Senator will pardon me, I desire to read into the RECORD at this time the language of the President:

> I leave, of course, to the discretion of the Congress the formulation of the appropriate taxes for the needed permanent revenue. I invite your attention, however, to a form of tax which would accomplish an important tax reform, remove two major inequalities in our tax system, and stop "leaks" in present surtaxes.

That is the language of the President. In view of that language, I do not think that anyone can claim that the Senator from Alabama and the Senator from Wisconsin are carrying out the plan of the President in their amendment. The President, in his message, which any Senator can get by reference to the report on our desks, suggested the abandonment of the existing normal taxes on incomes of all corporations and the existing capital-stock tax. The Senators' amendment undertakes to maintain those normal taxes and contemplates the continuance of the capital-stock tax.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, my amendment does not touch the issue which has been stated by the Senator from North Carolina is in the bill. If the Senator now wants to become converted to the President's plan and move to strike it out of the bill which he joined in reporting, that is satisfactory to me. However, what I am talking about, and the one issue I am presenting, the one issue which has been obscured by many statements made throughout this country, is this, and it is short, simple, and concise: How many Senators favor a proposal which will tax the earned income of these gentlemen who have been escaping taxes to the tune of $600,000,000 in 1 year? How many here favor putting this tax on 230,000 little corporations owned by small-business men instead of doing what the President suggested and placing it directly on this group that will escape $600,000,000 worth of taxes this year if the Senate adopts the Senate Finance Committee bill?

Let no one deceive you, and do not be led astray by any other argument. That is the issue contained in our amendment. That is the only question we raise. We do not touch the other proposition. If any Senator wants to strike that out let him strike it out, but the issue we raise by our amendment is whether or not we will put the taxes on the small-business men who already are paying their part and keep it off those who are avoiding their part.

No word, no flight of eloquence, no confused language, no diversion of issues, no talk about small corporations being injured by putting a tax on big corporations, as we propose it, is going to change the issue.

Mr. President, I have talked longer now than I intended on the proposal which I have submitted.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat, if he intends to do so, I would like to have him explain to the Senate how he proposes to raise the revenue we need to raise, in view of his amendment? Will the Senator give us the facts so we may know just how the revenue would be raised?

Mr. BLACK. Our amendment, which we have proposed as a substitute for the committee amendment which the Senator from North Carolina favors, would put the tax on those best able to bear it. The proposal of the Finance Committee puts the tax on those least able to bear it. Our amendment, according to the Treasury estimate, would raise on that part of the tax $502,000,000 as against $532,000,000, which would be raised under the proposal of the Finance Committee.

Mr. BAILEY. Is that the entire amendment?

Mr. BLACK. That is our amendment.

Mr. BAILEY. The entire amendment?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. BAILEY. Will the Senator divide that for the information of the Senate as between the normal-tax rates in the first part of his amendment and the surtax rates in the second section?

Mr. BLACK. I do not have those figures divided in that way. If the Senator desires to put them in the RECORD, it would be very interesting.

Mr. BAILEY. I have no way of getting a statement of the Senator's figures. I want the information for the Senate.

Mr. BLACK. I have the figures which were submitted to the Finance Committee, and the Senator can find them there. I think the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] has the same figures. Our proposal would raise $502,000,000, as against $532,000,000 under the proposal of the Finance Committee.

However, I do not intend to be led astray from the one issue in the particular amendment, which is this: The Senate Finance Committee proposal is——

Mr. BAILEY. I regret to interrupt my friend, but he seems to be under the impression that somebody is trying to divert him or lead him astray. I wish to disavow any such purpose. That has not occurred to me. I wish to get information about his amendment. I knew something of it, but it has been formally presented to the Senate just this afternoon. I hope the Senator will not attribute to any of us any ulterior motives because we ask for information.

Mr. BLACK. I do not.

Mr. BAILEY. But when the Senator says I am trying to lead him astray, I think that is attributing an ulterior motive.

Mr. BLACK. Our amendment is limited to the form of a substitute for the proposal of the Senate Finance Committee. That proposal is an increase in the corporation tax of 3 percent and 7 percent on undistributed surplus. Our amendment offers a substitute for that, and for that alone. Our substitute would raise $502,000,000 without taxing a single surplus dollar of a corporation with $15,000 profits.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, is it not fair to ask the Senator how he is going to get the balance of the money we shall need?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I can furnish the break-down for which the Senator from North Carolina has asked, if the Senator from Alabama will permit me to do so.

Mr. BAILEY. Let me thank the Senator from Wisconsin in advance. He is at least going to inform me instead of telling me that I am trying to lead him astray. I appreciate that very much.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The break-down on the corporation provision, and that is all the Senator asked for, though I can give it for the rest of the bill if he desires it, is as follows:

Surtaxes on individuals, $220,000,000; normal taxes on individuals, $121,000,000; surtaxes on corporations, $161,000,000; total, $502,000,000.

That is the comparable total with the $532,000,000 for the similar corporation provisions of the Finance Committee proposal. In short, the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama and myself would raise $30,000,000 less than the comparable corporate provisions than would the Finance Committee proposal.

Mr. GEORGE. May I not ask if we do not have to have all the other provisions of the Senate Finance Committee proposal in order to get the necessary amount of revenue?

Mr. BLACK. The others have already been retained.

Mr. GEORGE. I understand; but it is only fair that the RECORD should show the fact.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield further to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield further to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I stated that I understood that was all the Senator from North Carolina had asked. The difficulty is that unless we confine the estimates to the comparable provisions we are likely to get confusion. I shall be delighted to provide the additional information, although it is similar to items contained in the Finance Committee proposal outside of the corporation provisions.

Provisions respecting liquidating provisions in the bill as it passed the House, $33,000,000; provisions respecting nonresident aliens as in the bill as it passed the House $4,000,000; windfall tax as in the bill reported by the Finance Committee, $82,000,000. The total difference in revenue as between the various bills would be about $30,000,000 less under our substitute as compared with the Finance Committee proposal as it stands.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Wisconsin a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Kentucky for that purpose?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. In listening to the break-down as stated by the Senator from Wisconsin, I did not quite understand the $220,000,000 item of surtaxes on individuals. I do not see that the Senator's amendment deals with that subject.

Mr. BLACK. That is increased surtaxes as the result of the declaration of dividends in the high income-tax brackets.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator is contemplating an increase of $220,000,000 under the present income-tax rates on individuals by reason of the contemplated distribution of more money out of which they will pay income taxes?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Those are the final estimates furnished by the Treasury Department, and they are comparable to estimates made for the House committee and all the other myriad of provisions under consideration by the Finance Committee during the time it had the bill before it, and were furnished by the Treasury Department.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I wish to express my great gratification over the discovery, at the end of the oration by our distinguished friend, that he is endorsing all of the iniquitous bill reported by the Finance Committee except that part of it—about two pages—which would be affected by the amendment which he has submitted. The bill as reported by the Finance Committee contains 295 pages. I take it we may assume the Senator from Alabama endorses about 290 pages of it. I am very greatly relieved.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, that has nothing to do with the issue, which is whether we will pass a bill that permits a small group of manipulators to continue to dodge $600,000,000 worth of taxes——

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield further to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. BLACK. When I shall have finished my sentence. I should like to have a little time in my own right.

Mr. BAILEY. Yes; but when the Senator makes a statement in the nature of a challenge to a fellow Senator's honor——

Mr. BLACK. I made no such challenge, Mr. President.

Mr. BAILEY. There is a straight issue here——

Mr. BLACK. Yes; there is a straight issue.

Mr. BAILEY. And the intimation is as broad as a barn door——

Mr. BLACK. I have made no such challenge as that.

Mr. BAILEY. That a majority of the committee are in favor of tolerating nefarious practices. I will say for every member of the committee, leaving myself out of it, that there cannot be in the breast of any man a conception of that nature.

Mr. BLACK. I have made no such imputation, and I do not intend to get away from the issue which is raised by the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (rapping for order). Let the Chair state that, of course, we cannot proceed with two or three Senators speaking at the same time. Hereafter let the general and customary order be followed, under which Senators seeking to interrupt should address the Chair. The Senator from Alabama will proceed.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I stated in the beginning that in my judgment there was a difference in the philosophical viewpoint of Senators who divided on the issues of this bill; and I repeat that I did not, and I never have, by any statement I made on the floor at this time or at any other time since I have been in the Senate, intended directly or indirectly or in any other manner to reflect upon the integrity of any of my colleagues in this body. If that statement is not clear, I shall be glad to make it as clear as may be necessary. I do state that there is an honest difference of viewpoint on the part not only of Members of this body but of persons outside of this body with reference to the proper method of taxation, with reference to the value of surpluses, and with reference to various things connected with government. As I see it, however, this amendment raises the sole, single issue as to whether or not we shall now boldly take a step to end an evil which all of us admit exists, as I understand, some differing in degree as to the amount, or whether we shall wait, on the theory that now is not the proper time.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. BONE. I did not have the opportunity to hear any of the discussions before the committee of which the Senator from Alabama is a member; but when the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] said that a certain bracket would raise $88,000,000, or some other figure, and that another provision would raise so much money, I desire to ask what those calculations are predicated on—the studies of income-tax returns for last year or over a definite period of time, where there is a curve that may be studied, or upon what are they predicated?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Does the Senator refer to the information I gave to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY]?

Mr. BONE. Yes. When the Senator from North Carolina asked for the information the Senator from Wisconsin said that a certain tax would raise a definite amount of money. I am wondering how the Senator can say with certainty that so much money will be raised.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama further yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. BLACK. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY] asked for a break-down of the Treasury estimate that the proposal now under consideration would raise $502,000,000 of additional revenue over what is now being raised, and I gave him the Treasury's break-down of the $502,000,000, which is as follows, and I repeat it:

Surtaxes on individuals, $220,000,000. That is, the Treasury estimates that if the amendment now pending were adopted, individual surtax payers would pay in the next taxable year $220,000,000 more than they paid in the last taxable year.

Mr. BONE. I understand that, and I am not in doubt about that. What I am wondering is what the Treasury experts base their conclusion on. Is it based on last year's income-tax returns or the income-tax returns over a period of time where the experts can chart them and make a curve; or what do they base their conclusion on?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The actuaries of the Treasury Department apply to fiscal problems and problems of taxation the same actuarial principles that actuaries in other fields of endeavor attempt to apply. As I understand, their estimates are predicated not only upon their study of income-tax returns but upon their statistical information as to the amount of dividends and the amount of income received by individuals and by corporations.

When the actuaries of the Department come to consider a proposal such as that now offered by the Senator from Alabama and myself, they make a certain estimate as to how much of an incentive they think it will be to corporations to distribute more dividends than they have been distributing in the past; and it is upon that basis that they estimate that $220,000,000 of additional taxes will be paid by individuals in the surtax brackets. By the same token they estimate $121,000,000 of additional revenue from making the normal tax applicable to the income from dividends in the hands of individuals.

The Senate committee's bill contains an estimate from the Treasury actuaries of $90,000,000 of additional revenue from that source. They estimate that under the proposal now pending there would be a sufficient increase in the distribution of dividends so that $31,000,000 of additional revenue more than they estimated for the Senate Finance Committee's bill from the same source would be paid as a result of making the normal tax applicable to the tax on dividends; and they estimate that the surtaxes on corporations as provided in this amendment would result in $161,000,000 more revenue from corporations than is now being obtained, which makes a total of $502,000,000.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. BLACK. I do.

Mr. BYRD. I think the Senate understands that the total revenue under the Finance Committee bill will be $683,000,000, according to the estimate made by the Treasury Department.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes; and if this amendment were to be adopted, the total revenue from the tax bill as passed by the Senate would be $653,000,000, because the comparable corporate provisions which we have suggested as compared with the Finance Committee report will raise, according to the Treasury, $30,000,000 less than the Finance Committee bill's corporate provisions will raise.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not wish to take the Senator's time any longer to try to adjust these figures, because in arriving at the $502,000,000, if I correctly understand the Senator from Wisconsin, he has added $82,000,000, which is the windfall tax.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Oh, no; the Senator is entirely mistaken.

Mr. BARKLEY. I asked the Senator for a copy of his sheet, but he could not give me the copy, so I had to speak from memory.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If the Senator from Alabama will permit me——

Mr. BLACK. I yield the floor to the Senator.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the $502,000,000 is to be compared with the corporate provisions of the Finance Committee bill, which the Treasury estimates will raise $532,000,000. All the other provisions of the bill remain the same, and the Treasury estimates for them are the same; so if the pending amendment should be agreed to we should simply subtract from the total amount estimated for the Finance Committee bill as it came from the committee the $30,000,000 which the provision now pending falls short of, as compared with the corporate provisions of the Finance Committee bill.

I hope that is clear to every Senator, because it would be a great mistake if there should be any misunderstanding about it. As I stated at the outset, I thought it would be simpler if we should confine our comparisons of additional revenue yield to the comparable corporate provisions, because that is all that is under consideration. We are not proposing to strike out the windfall tax. We are not proposing to touch anything but the corporate provisions of the Finance Committee's bill. We concede at the outset that the Treasury says we shall get $30,000,000 less; but we contend that, even so, the proposal we have offered is so much more equitable and so much more just to the average taxpayer that we should not be willing to cast it aside because it will raise $30,000,000 less than the Finance Committee's corporate provisions will raise.

Mr. President, I realize that the Senate is weary after a long session, and that it has been put under a great deal of pressure to adjourn at a fixed date—next Saturday night or some other time. I realize that it is in no mood to give proper consideration to the fundamental and important and far-reaching policies of taxation which are involved in the issue which has been so ably drawn by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BLACK].

I am not responsible for trying to jam the pending tax bill through with 2 days' consideration. I am not responsible for attempting to force the Senate of the United States to pass upon one of the most important tax questions that has ever come before it without even taking time enough to understand what is involved in the issue at stake. If the House conferees will swallow the Senate Finance Committee bill without considering it, they can do it in 2 days as well as they can do it in 3. If they are going to give it any study and any consideration, the conferees cannot bring back a report by Saturday night, no matter at what time the Senate may pass the bill tonight. So it is perfectly preposterous to put the Senate under such pressure that it has to vote upon these issues without any proper consideration.

Nevertheless I am always conscious of the situation which confronts me, and I realize that it is entirely futile to attempt to argue this question as I believe it should be argued. However, I am not going to be deterred from making a statement, as briefly as I can do so, of the question which I think is here at stake, because this issue will be settled correctly now or it must be settled later. It will not down. It will be at stake in the consideration of every revenue bill which comes before the Congress of the United States until the special privilege now being availed of by those in the high-surtax brackets shall have been ended, for when the people of the United States come to understand the issue that is involved in this controversy they will not rest under a system which in its operations is so inequitable as between one group of taxpayers and another group of taxpayers.

Mr. President, during the prevailing emergency the Government of the United States has expended huge sums of money in an effort to stem the tide of the worst economic depression in the history of the world. I have been one of those who early in the depression advocated a program of sufficient magnitude and of such continuity and with specific economic objectives as would accomplish the desired ends. Nevertheless I have tried to occupy a perfectly consistent position. While advocating huge expenditures of money to stem the tide of the depression in an effort to build up the mass purchasing power of the people of this country, I have seized every opportunity to urge upon the Congress the necessity for increased taxation.

Mr. President, we have spent some $11,000,000,000 since 1933. We have made available in the form of credit, through one agency or another, $6,000,000,000 or more. This huge expenditure of money and this extending of the credit of the United States has been of great benefit not only to those who are the immediate beneficiaries, but it has likewise been of tremendous benefit to those who had their entrepreneurial claims upon the national income. As these billions of dollars were pumped out at the bottom they were not dumped into the ocean; they were not destroyed. They went through the normal channels of business; they went through the cash registers; they passed across the books of merchants, of wholesalers, and of manufacturers, each and every one of whom had opportunity to secure a percentage of benefit and profit from these huge collective expenditures.

We are now confronted with a situation which necessitates the levying of more taxes, and the question arises, Where can they be imposed most equitably? As I understand, unless we are in a position to take them out of capital, which I am not discussing, there are only four sources of income from which increased taxes can be obtained. Those four sources are business profits, wages and salaries, interest, and rents. Our taxpayer's receipts from interest are not rising; every Senator knows that they are not; and they have been going down ever since 1933. Personally I believe that they should have gone down. I think that is one of the achievements of the present administration, and I hope interest rates will stay down, because that is one of the ways by which we can shrink down a part of the entrepreneurial claim upon the national income, and thus secure a larger share of such income for the great masses of the people, whose purchasing power must be restored if the mechanisms of production and distribution in the United States are to continue to function and if they are to be saved from ultimate collapse.

(At this point Mr. LA FOLLETTE yielded the floor for the day.)

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its labors today it take a recess until 10 o'clock tomorrow morning.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I should like to have the understanding that I may have the floor in the morning.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator has the floor.

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, I shall object.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well.

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a statement respecting a provision in the pending tax bill which proposes to amend the estate tax.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

As reported out by the Senate Finance Committee, H. R. 12395 contains a provision which amends the estate tax by exempting the proceeds of life-insurance policies earmarked for the payment of Federal death duties to the extent actually devoted to that purpose.

All but two of the Canadian Provinces allow such an exemption and experience there has been favorable.

When the Revenue Act of 1935 was pending in the Senate, an amendment similar in purpose was offered by me and was adopted, but was eliminated by the conference committee with a recommendation, however, that the matter be given further study.

HOW IT WOULD WORK

Take the case of a man whose net worth (after all permissible deductions) is $500,000. Suppose he has life insurance amounting to $150,000, all of which he makes payable to the Treasurer of the United States, under and in accordance with this amendment. The amendment would not exempt this insurance in its entirety; the exemption is limited to such amount as is necessary to cover the tax liability of the estate, any balance over and above that amount being taxable as heretofore. As the tax in this case would be $100,894, only that much of the insurance would be exempt. The balance of the insurance, amounting to $49,106, would be included in the taxable estate accounting for $11,294 of the total tax due.

SITUATION GIVING RISE TO THE AMENDMENT

The purpose of the Lonergan amendment is neither to reduce taxes nor to obtain special favors for life insurance, but simply to answer the problem of forced liquidation and thus to end the discrimination which now exists against every taxpayer whose estate is invested in slow assets, for example, real estate, farm lands, a going business.

In the case of an estate which includes enough cash, Government bonds, savings accounts, etc., to discharge the tax liability, payment is made and that is an end of the matter. But in the case of an estate not so fortunately situated, there is nothing to do but put its holdings on the auction block, which means they will be disposed of in a buyer's market.

Who benefits? Bargain hunters with ready cash. Everybody else loses.

Existing law, therefore, puts a premium on liquidity. Estates without sufficient liquid assets are punished. In effect they pay a double tax, but the loss they suffer from sacrifice of assets does not go into the Treasury; it flows into the pockets of monopolies and speculators. The estate tax thus becomes a means whereby the rich and powerful become richer and more powerful.

Take the typical case of a man "on the make"—that is, one who is building up a successful business. That is about all he has. Unless he makes provision for the tax which his death will call into being, it will be necessary to put his business on the auction block. But how is he to make provision for the payment of this tax?

He can curtail his activities, reduce his spending, and set himself resolutely toward the goal of accumulating the necessary cash or its equivalent. But that course is deflationary. It withdraws money from productive enterprise. It means fewer jobs in his business. That means a shrinkage in purchasing power whose effects will be felt by the retailers in the neighborhood and by the wholesalers from whom they buy and by the factories which supply those wholesalers.

And there is no assurance that death will not intervene before the goal is reached.

Is there another way? There is—life insurance. But, as the law now stands, if life insurance is availed of for this purpose, the amount of the tax will be increased because the insurance itself will be taxed.

This injustice may be illustrated by comparing two men, A and B, each worth $500,000. A's wealth was inherited and is in the form of cash, Government bonds, and other liquid assets. B, on the other hand, started from scratch. His estate consists of a successful business, built by his own efforts.

In the case of A, payment of the tax will involve no embarrassment. The cash or its equivalent is there. There is no problem. But how about B? He doesn't want his business gobbled up from the bargain counter by a powerful competitor. Nor is he willing to put his boots on the shelf and convert his business into cash. So he turns to life insurance. But that subjects him to a higher tax than A (who is worth as much), because the insurance itself is taxed. He pays a penalty because his wealth is invested in an employment-giving enterprise.

That is not only unjust to the individual and his dependents but it's bad economics and bad social policy. It should be changed.

The Lonergan amendment meets the issue. In the nature of the case it can be met in no other way. What can a man do that will surely make available the ready cash to satisfy the tax collector? Let him plan to build up a reserve of quick assets; death may visit him tomorrow. Life insurance is the only answer.

ADVANTAGES OF AMENDMENT

1. From the point of view of the Federal revenues the great advantage of the amendment lies in the fact that it will assure prompt payment, in full, of many assessments which must now be written off in whole or in part (due to posthumous depreciation or dissipation of assets, etc.) or collected only after numerous extensions.

In fact, it will assure payment in advance since the estate tax is not due until 15 months after death. In the interim the Government will have the use of the money without interest.

2. From the point of view of the taxpayer the advantages are obvious since the amendment will afford an opportunity to provide against the disastrous consequences of necessitous liquidation to cover Federal death duties.

At present, as already indicated, life insurance taken out to pay these taxes is itself taxable; it is included in the taxable estate with the result that the tax burden is sharply increased—the reward of prudent forethought is the imposition of an additional levy.

To show the extent of this extra burden, take, for example, the case of a man worth $500,000. The Federal estate-tax liability on a net estate of that size is $89,600. Suppose he takes out that much insurance in order to avoid a forced sale of his business. What is the result? His taxable estate will be not $500,000 but $589,600, and in consequence the tax liability will jump from $89,600 to $110,208, an increase of $20,608 or 23 percent. So the effective amount of his insurance is cut down to $68,992, although he must pay for $89,600—all because he wants the Government to get its money without fruitless hardship to his survivors.

If, undaunted, he sets out to obtain sufficient insurance to pay the whole tax in full (including the tax on the insurance) he must secure a policy for $117,027 on which the premium, at age 50, say, is approximately $4,500, or about one-fifth of the earning power of his entire estate at 5 percent.

Corresponding results for estates of various amounts are indicated in the table appended to this memorandum.

3. The public generally will likewise benefit from the amendment since forced liquidation depresses values, disturbs business, and causes unemployment. To collect the revenues without preventable economic disturbances is plain common sense.

4. That the amendment will be welcomed by a great many people is quite apparent, and it is difficult to see how anyone can be hurt by it. On the contrary, it will ease the shock of the higher taxes in the lower brackets which appear to be inevitable.

To sum up, the amendment is neither novel nor untried; it is fair to all concerned; it is practical; it will not only facilitate administration of the revenue laws but at the same time will prevent unnecessary and unprofitable hardships and promote economic stability.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Heavenly Father, we rejoice that through the knowledge and fellowship of the true God we reach the fullness of divine conception; we wait for Thy presence, O Lord, our strength and our redeemer. In the lowly Nazarene we behold the softened splendor of essential and eternal holiness. We pray Thee to cleanse us from fear and unworthiness; let our divinity work in us, inspiring unconquerable hope and faith. Do Thou keep in Thy care our country. Grant that peace may come where there is discord and confidence where there are suspicion and jealousy. O bind our people together with bonds of brotherhood; let the night be no more, and may the sun of good cheer stand in our Nation's sky for a thousand years. We wait in solemn silence, O Lord; let us not be alone in this moment. A distinguished colleague and a courageous defender of our Republic has fallen. We beseech Thee to light the torch for earth's tunnel; O give calm for the cross. Through Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that business in order today, Calendar Wednesday, may be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. SNELL. Reserving the right to object, has the gentleman from Alabama come to any conclusion with reference to adjournment this afternoon?

Mr. BANKHEAD. In reply to the inquiry of the minority leader, he will recall that I conferred with him about the matter this morning and explained to him the situation in which we are placed. I told him that we all had the highest veneration, respect, and affection for the deceased Member from Massachusetts, but there were some rather urgent matters we felt ought to be disposed of today, including conference reports and other matters.

Mr. SNELL. I am agreeable to going along with the gentleman, but we on this side feel the House should not remain in session all of this afternoon. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ANDREW] was a prominent Member of this House and had been a Member for many years. However, we will leave it entirely to the majority, because they are in control.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] understands that under ordinary circumstances we would adjourn immediately as in the past, but we are placed in a difficult situation today. I assure the gentleman that we will give every possible consideration to his request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 12624, the first deficiency appropriation bill, together with the Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference requested by the Senate; also that the managers on the part of the House, notwithstanding the provisions of clause 2, rule XX, be authorized to agree to any Senate amendment with or without amendment, except the Senate amendment having to do with the Florida ship canal and the Senate amendment providing $300,000,000 for public-works projects.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, may I inquire if there is anything included in this bill covering an increase in salary of one of the assistants to the Attorney General from $9,000 to $10,000 a year? The chairman of the Appropriations Committee very vigorously opposed a similar matter pertaining to an assistant in the Post Office Department.

Mr. BUCHANAN. And I will just as vigorously oppose the one to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. MEAD. I understand this other item has passed the House and probably has passed the Senate.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Passed the House?

Mr. MEAD. Yes.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I think the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. MEAD. My understanding is that it has passed the House and Senate.

Mr. BUCHANAN. To what bill does the gentleman refer, an authorization bill? I am not dealing with authorizations.

Mr. MEAD. As I understand, it was included in some appropriation bill.

Mr. BUCHANAN. That is a legislative bill.

Mr. MEAD. I understand it has passed the House and Senate, and I thought I would bring this matter to the attention of the gentleman this morning.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I am not going to agree to increasing anybody's salary.

Mr. MEAD. This has evidently gone through.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, I suppose the gentleman from New York [Mr. MEAD] has reference to Mr. Hoover's salary?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I suppose that is so, but it does not make any difference to me whose salary it is.

Mr. CONNERY. I hope Mr. Hoover's salary will be increased to $10,000 a year. It should have been raised long ago. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Chair appointed the following conferees: Mr. BUCHANAN, Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, Mr. OLIVER, Mr. WOODRUM, Mr. BOYLAN, Mr. CANNON of Missouri, Mr. TABER, Mr. BACON, and Mr. THURSTON.

GRAINED-LEATHER CASES

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Ways and Means, I present a privileged resolution for immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby requested to submit, as soon as practicable, to the House of Representatives all the information in his possession or available in the Department of the Treasury, or in any office or agency thereof, relating to the administrative policies and activities of the Department and its officers and employees in carrying out and enforcing or failing to enforce properly the provisions of paragraph 1530 of title I of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended, as interpreted in the so-called grained-leather cases.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the report of the Committee on Ways and Means and the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, which is a part of the report, be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

The report referred to follows:

[House of Representatives, Report No. 2927, 74th Cong., 2d sess.]

DIRECTING THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY TO FURNISH THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES CERTAIN INFORMATION

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee, from the Committee on Ways and Means, submitted the following adverse report (to accompany H. Res. 525):

The Committee on Ways and Means, to whom was referred the resolution (H. Res. 525) to request the Secretary of the Treasury to submit to the House of Representatives all the information in his possession or available in the Department of the Treasury, or in any office or agency thereof, relating to the administrative policies and activities of the Department and its officers and employees in carrying out and enforcing or failing to enforce properly the provisions of paragraph 1530 of title I of the Tariff Act of 1930, having had the same under consideration, report it back to the House and recommend that the resolution do not pass.

The action of the committee is based upon the following report from the Secretary of the Treasury:

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Reference is made to your request for a report on the merits of House Resolution 525, to request the Secretary of the Treasury to submit to the House of Representatives all the information in his possession or available in the Department of the Treasury, or in any office or agency thereof, relating to the administrative policies and activities of the Department and its officers and employees in carrying out and enforcing, or failing to enforce properly, the provisions of paragraph 1530 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as interpreted in the so-called grained-leather cases.

The resolution apparently relates to a controversy as to whether all imported leather which has been boarded is ipso facto "grained" within the meaning of paragraph 1530 (d) of the Tariff Act of 1930, which prescribes a rate of 30 percent ad valorem for grained leather.

In a decision of the United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals, rendered on April 12, 1933, and published as Treasury Decision 46319, the court held that certain sheepskin leather which had been boarded in such manner as "to produce a surface finish upon the leather which would otherwise not have been there", namely, a clearly perceptible grain, was grained leather within the meaning of paragraph 1530 (d) and dutiable at the 30-percent rate. This decision overruled previous instructions of the Bureau of Customs (T. D. 44213) to the effect that only leathers which are commercially known as fancy leathers are dutiable under paragraph 1530 (d).

Shortly after the publication of Treasury Decision 46319 the Bureau received inquiries from customs officers and other interested persons as to the effect to be given to the court's decision, and particularly as to whether all leathers which have been subjected to any boarding process are "grained" and accordingly dutiable at the 30-percent rate. If not subject to this rate, the imported leather is dutiable under other provisions of paragraph 1530 of the Tariff Act at rates varying from 10 to 25 percent, depending upon the character of the leather and the use to be made of it in the United States.

After a thorough investigation, during which attorneys for domestic tanners and for importers presented arguments, the Bureau of Customs construed the Court's decision as requiring only that all leather upon which a clearly perceptible grain has been produced by some process of manipulation should be classified under paragraph 1530 (d) as grained leather, and held that other leather which had been boarded for the purpose of making it more pliable and facilitating its further manufacture is not so dutiable by reason of a slight change in the surface finish not amounting to a perceptible grain. This ruling was published as T. D. 46691, of October 25, 1933.

Attorneys for domestic tanners continued their objections to the Department's ruling and finally filed a petition in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia for a writ of mandamus to compel the Secretary of the Treasury to assess the 30-percent rate on all imported boarded leather. The petition was dismissed on March 11, 1935, and the action of the lower court was sustained by the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia on November 11, 1935.

In a Department letter of March 6, 1935, an attorney for the domestic tanners was advised that if his clients were not satisfied with the Department's ruling, they might obtain a judicial determination of their contentions by following the procedure provided for in section 516 (b) of the tariff act. Under this provision of law a domestic manufacturer who is dissatisfied with a ruling of the Secretary of the Treasury as to the classification of imported merchandise of a class or kind manufactured by him may file a complaint with the Secretary. If the Secretary, on consideration of the complaint, rules against its contentions, the manufacturer may file a protest against the assessment of the lower rate of duty and thus have the matter reviewed by the United States Customs Court, and, if necessary, by the United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals. The domestic manufacturers have not sought to avail themselves of the privilege granted to them by section 516 (b). A copy of this provision of the tariff act is enclosed for your ready reference, together with copies of the various decisions I have mentioned.

The administrative policy of the Treasury Department in this matter has been, as usual, to give to the laws administered by this Department their fair meaning. I believe the facts I have set forth above and a reading of the opinion of the United States Court of Customs and Patent Appeals, published as T. D. 46319, will satisfy you that the reasonable and proper interpretation of this opinion is that which the Treasury Department has given it. I therefore see no necessity for the passage of this resolution, although, of course, I have no objection to furnishing the House of Representatives at any time with the files of the Treasury Department with regard to the matter.

Very truly yours,

WAYNE C. TAYLOR,
Acting Secretary of the Treasury.

Hon. R. L. DOUGHTON,
Chairman, Committee on Ways and Means,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. COOPER of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I move that the resolution be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes to state why I introduced the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot recognize the gentlewoman from Massachusetts for that purpose at this time.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD at this point on the grained-leather case.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, my constituents have asked me to call for an investigation as to why the United States Bureau of Customs, in the Treasury Department, continues to deliberately violate section 502 of the Tariff Act. This section provides that the Secretary of the Treasury "shall promulgate regulations not inconsistent with the law", and that the decisions of the customs court shall be final so far as the Treasury Department is concerned.

The tanners council has made frequent protests against the practice of the Customs Bureau of making interpretations of court decisions in such a way as to have the effect of subverting them.

The most flagrant example of this practice is in the case of the tariff on boarded leather.

Under paragraph 1530 (d) of the Tariff Act:

> Leather of all kinds, grained, printed, embossed, ornamented, or decorated, in any manner or to any extent (including leather finished in gold, silver, aluminum, or like effects) or by any other process (in addition to tanning) made into fancy leather * * * all the foregoing by whatever name known, and to whatever use applied, 30 percent ad valorem.

The following chronological data will show the efforts made to induce the Treasury Department to carry out the law:

1930, July: Calf tanners asked Treasury Department to instruct appraisers that boarded leather was grained leather dutiable at 30 percent.

1930, August: Treasury Department ruled that it was not.

1930, November: John B. Stetson Co. protested against 30-percent duty on boarded sheepskin leather.

1933, April: Customs Court of Appeals ruled that all boarded leather was duitable at 30 percent and expressly overruled the Treasury Department's calf-leather decision.

1933, April: Appraisers carried out court decision.

1933, May: Importers induced them to disregard it.

1933, July: Calf tanners complained to Treasury.

1933, October: Treasury Department issued an instruction to collectors to impose duty of only 15 percent on grained leather if boarding was done to soften it. The Treasury Department opened the door to graft when it gave appraising officers two bases on which to assess duties.

1934, February: Hearing for tanners held by Commissioner of Customs. Attorney Ashworth asserted boarding for softening not in law or before court in Stetson case. Commissioner tells Ashworth law and court against him.

1934, March: Hearing (for importers). Commissioner ruled that importers had introduced a new issue that had nothing to do with the Stetson case.

Repeatedly, I have asked the Treasury officials, as have others, to submit the entire question to impartial attorneys in the Department of Justice. This has been refused.

The matter is of far-reaching importance, not only from the viewpoint of the tanning industry, for already the market is flooded with cheap German leather, but because of the policy involved. It was for that reason I introduced my resolution; so that each Member of Congress should know that the Tariff Act is being violated, and if the policy is carried out, other tariffs will not be safe.

The amount of revenue involved is important in these days of higher taxes. It is certainly most important to increase our revenue derived from importations, especially so, as they are competing directly with our own manufacturers.

I am glad to note that the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, by letter, has consented to send all the papers in the case to Congress. I trust that every Member of Congress will join me in my fight for justice in the enforcement of the Tariff Act. I need not point out to my colleagues the number of people who are employed in the hide and leather industry.

The cattle raisers of the South and West are just as vitally interested in this matter as are the tanners in my own district and in every other district all over the United States. There are millions of dollars worth of cattle and tanneries in Tennessee, the State which the very able and distinguished Member, Mr. COOPER, represents. What answer can we make to the millions of workers who walk the streets looking in vain for work and begging us to help them if we do not do everything within our power to make and keep agriculture and industry active? And in view of the enormous tax bill which is now being considered, how can we explain to the taxpayer the fact that $2,000,000 worth of revenue has been lost to the Government by the arbitrary ruling of the Treasury Department regarding the grained-leather duty? Let us wake up to the fact before it is too late that the citizens of the United States feel it is high time that we began to protect them from raids upon their pocketbooks.

The SPEAKER. The Chair wants to make a statement in the interest of orderly procedure. The Chair will next recognize Members presenting House bills with Senate amendments where it is the intention to concur in the Senate amendments without debate.

GENERAL PERMISSION TO EXTEND REMARKS

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, may I submit a unanimous-consent request which I think possibly may save some of the Speaker's time?

We are approaching the end of the session. We do not know how soon it will come, but I submit the unanimous-consent request that all Members of the House may have permission to extend their own remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD until the last printing of the RECORD following adjournment.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the extensions are to be confined to their own remarks?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; and, of course, this is intended to mean that Members may extend their remarks on more than one subject if they desire to do so. This has been the precedent.

Mr. SNELL. That is the request that is generally made.

Mr. RICH. But they are only to insert short quotations which are necessary in order to explain or complete their own personal remarks.

Mr. LUDLOW. When does the privilege begin?

Mr. BANKHEAD. It begins as soon as granted, and extends from now until the last printing of the RECORD.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to ask the majority leader if in his unanimous-consent request he has included permission for the Members to be able to quote in their own remarks from official reports and records of the Government.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Of course, there ought to be some limit on the right to extend.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Yes; there should be, I will say to my friend.

Mr. BANKHEAD. But I think this permission should be governed by the general rule prevailing under ordinary circumstances about extensions of remarks.

Mr. WOODRUFF. And that would give the right to the individual Member to quote from official records?

Mr. BANKHEAD. It would give him the right to follow the usual custom in such matters.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, does the permission include the right to insert the remarks of a colleague who is not here?

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; I think the gentleman would have to get special permission for that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

EVENING SESSION, THURSDAY, JUNE 4, 1936

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after we conclude the business on the program of the day tomorrow, the House stand in recess until 7:30 p. m., at which time it shall be in order to take up bills on the Private Calendar, and when the Private Calendar is disposed of, if there be sufficient time left, to take up bills on the Consent Calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. With the understanding that no other business shall be taken up?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Of course. That contemplates bills on the Private Calendar and the Consent Calendar and also the Omnibus Calendar if we can reach it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, to ask the floor leader if it is the intention to include all bills on the Consent Calendar? Some times the request has been restricted to the calling of Senate bills on the Consent Calendar or House bills where similar bills have been passed by the Senate.

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; there is no such restriction.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LUNDEEN] may have permission to extend his remarks on the question of the American farmer and to include therewith certain tables.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. How many tables are to be placed in the RECORD?

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, Mr. LUNDEEN is out of town and he requested me through his secretary to ask this permission. I presume the tables will not be very long.

Mr. RICH. Are the tables to be taken out of a magazine article, or are they his own tables?

Mr. CONNERY. I do not know. They are his own remarks.

Mr. RICH. If they are his own tables, very well, but if the tables are taken from some magazine, I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

FIRE DEMON'S TOLL—A FIRE A MINUTE—10,000 LIVES A YEAR—$250,000,000 LOST THROUGH CARELESSNESS AND GREED

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LUNDEEN] have permission to extend his remarks on the American Farmer.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUNDEEN. Mr. Speaker, a few days ago I voted for the flood-control appropriation bill. I served as a member of the Flood Control Committee during the Seventy-third Congress. I have had opportunity to learn something about the causes of the disastrous floods with which we have been visited in recent years.

FLOODS CAUSED BY DESTRUCTION OF FORESTS

Our increasing flood danger is directly connected with the destruction of our forests. For hundreds of years the Indians lived directly in the present flood paths. Numerous mounds can be seen today in many sections of the Mississippi Delta where the Indians lived. Since then, along with oil fields and mines, our precious heritage of trees has been ruthlessly exploited for profit.

There is a direct ratio between the destruction of our forests and the disasters we have suffered from flood. Conservation of water and of soil is inseparably bound up with conservation of trees. In 1 year our per capita fire loss was 4 times that of France, 6 times as great as England's, 7 times that of Germany, 20 times as much as Holland's. (From National Board of Fire Underwriters.) And why? Largely because there are more wooden buildings in America than in Europe. Timber is comparatively cheap here. We burn it in the forests, and we burn it thoughtlessly and carelessly when it has been fashioned into useful structures.

While we burn our timber, vital and far-reaching developments are taking place. Soil is becoming barren. Great areas that formerly retained their moisture by virtue of their blanketing of grass and trees become parched and dry, and the top soil blows away. Often the desert marches in and takes possession.

During the past three centuries of reckless cutting and widespread burning of our forests, our virgin timber, originally covering 822,000,000 acres, has shrunk to about 137,000,000. (National Board of Fire Underwriters.) We are burning up the future. In addition to these burned areas, 5,500,000 acres of timber are cut each year, with little thought of saving the young growth, or of reforestation.

ARID WASTES WITHOUT FORESTS

If this ruthless destruction of trees continues, the future will bring more disastrous floods, soil erosion, and desert wastes. Agricultural products and vegetation will suffer from alternate drenching and baking when our streams, rivers, and irrigation systems are deprived of the gradual feeding given them by the forests. Waterways will become swollen to dangerous proportions, and after they have flooded over, before long they will be almost dry. Development of water power will be checked. The soil of mountain slopes gives way without interlacing tree roots which now keep it in place. Waterways are being filled with silt. Wildlife becomes extinct. Without forests much of America will become a wide expanse of burned and barren soil such as is found in many sections of China.

Already from the denuded slopes a flood at least 30 times greater than would pass through forested hillsides sweeps down upon communities, carrying millions of tons of silt and other debris.

FLOOD DAMAGE CAUSED BY FIRE IN CALIFORNIA

A major cause of flood is fire. If we wish to prevent floods, we must conserve our forests. On January 17, 1934, the Department of Agriculture issued a bulletin stating that the fire, which in the fall of 1933 destroyed the brush cover on 5,000 acres of watershed in the Los Angeles, Calif., area, was the primary cause of the great loss of life and excessive property damage done by the disastrous storm in southern California on December 30 and 31, 1933.

On Thanksgiving Day in 1933, a fire known as the Pickens Canyon fire burned over 5,000 acres in four small canyons near Los Angeles. Immediately after the fire, the Forest Service, in cooperation with local authorities, sowed about 4,000 acres of the area with mustard to reestablish a protective cover for the watershed. But this cover crop had not yet germinated when the major storm of December 30 and 31, 1933, occurred. Millions and millions of tons of material moved down the mountainside in channels that could not carry the load. Homes, bridges, and streets were destroyed. Hundreds of people were trapped. Sixty persons were drowned or smothered within this mud and soil flow. The property damage was at least $5,000,000.

For several years the United States Forest Service had had under way a run-off experiment in San Dimas Canyon, not far from the Pickens Canyon area. Shortly before the storm, several small plots used in this study had been experimentally burned over. Twelve inches of rainfall were recorded at San Dimas during the December 30–31, 1933, storm, about the same amount as that recorded in Pickens Canyon. During the storm the unburned plots showed an average of only 8 buckets of surface run-off, while the burned-over plots showed 300 buckets for the same period. This meant that more than 30 times as much water came off a burned area as off an unburned area. Mr. E. I. Kotok, director of the Forest Service's regional experiment station in California, stated at the time that if the protective brush cover had been left intact in the Pickens Canyon area less than one-thirtieth of the run-off would have occurred. He stated:

This is the most striking example that we have ever recorded of the potential capacity of vegetative cover to retard the run-off, even in torrential rainfall.

EARTHQUAKES CAUSED BY FLOODS

More tragic even than the actual loss in dollars and lives at the time of such a flood is the irreparable damage to the soil upon which future life depends. Each succeeding flood paves the way for greater disasters of the future.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. BILBO] stated on the Senate floor the other day that at the present time about 400,000,000 cubic yards of earth are being deposited in the Gulf of Mexico each year, and today the Delta of the Mississippi River is being extended into the Gulf of Mexico by sediment deposit at the rate of 1 mile for each 20 years. Scientists believe that this constant accumulation of sediment will cause an overbalance of earth structure which will affect the lower strata of earth and cause earthquakes in the future. Earthquakes result sometimes from the readjustment of the harder rocks below to the increased load above.

Scientists tell us that the great earthquake at Madrid, Mo., in 1811 occurred from causes due to soil erosion. Mr. F. W. Sohon, of Georgetown University seismological observatory, states that there is a direct relation of eroded material to earthquakes. The denuded areas become lighter and must be pushed up, while the areas receiving the additional load, by becoming heavier, must be expected to sink.

USE FIREPROOF MATERIALS

It is true that our bountiful forests have sometimes been cut for useful purposes. We have fashioned homes, schools, buildings, ships, and furniture for our comfort and ease. We have fashioned too many useful articles from wood when we might have built from metal or stone, conserved our forests, and prevented destruction by fire. In comparison with fire losses in European countries, ours is not a record of which we can be proud. We have about 13 percent more fire loss per capita than European countries. For the cheapness of our trees, we have paid with fire.

COST OF THE FIRE DEMON

War is the only element in modern life more destructive than fire. Each day we pay the fire demon a tribute of nearly a million dollars; each year we pay with ten thousand lives. On the average, since 1918 we have had a fire a minute—1,500 a day. In 1935 our fire loss was approximately $259,159,945. For several years (1922 through 1926) it was over $500,000,000. In 1932 it was $406,885,959. This sum is sufficient to maintain and operate the Navy Department for a whole year. Twenty first-line battleships costing $20,000,000 each, could be built. It could build, or buy and pay cash in full for 80,000 modern one-family suburban homes costing $5,000 each and housing 480,000 people—a city of residences the size of Minneapolis.

The 1935 fire loss would take care of a million unemployed for 6 months under the liberal terms of the Frazier-Lundeen social-security bill. The aggregate loss for 20 years exceeds 8 billion dollars, making an annual average of $420,000,000. Although there was some reduction in fire loss in 1935, indications are, according to officials of the Underwriters Association of the District of Columbia, that the 1936 losses are mounting over 1935.

STREET OF DESOLATION

Estimates are that from 60 to 90 percent of these fires are strictly preventable. With the amount which might be saved from fire if people took proper precautions we could build the Panama Canal twice over each year. The buildings consumed by fire, if placed on lots of 65 feet frontage, would line both sides of a street extending from New York to Chicago. A person journeying along this street of desolation would pass in every thousand feet a ruin from which an injured person was taken. At every three-quarters of a mile he would see the charred remains of a human being who had been burned to death.—(From Safeguarding the Home Against Fire, by National Board of Fire Underwriters, prepared with assistance of U. S. Office of Education.)

TREND OF FIRE LOSSES

The preliminary estimate of the fire loss of the United States is $259,159,945, based on estimates of the National Board of Fire Underwriters. This is over $3,000,000 less than 1934, and is the lowest figure reported since 1916. The losses are lowest in the summer months and highest in the winter. The highest month last year was December, with a loss of $27,969,288; the lowest was September, with $16,641,882. (See appendix A for comparative monthly estimates, 1933, 1934, and 1935; appendix B for aggregate fire loss year by year for 20 years (1916–35).)

LARGE-LOSS FIRES

In 1935 there were 30 fires involving a loss of $250,000 or over. This is a decrease of four large-loss fires from 1934. These fires were in all parts of the country. The only ones which could be classed as group fires or conflagrations were the series of fires in Los Angeles County on October 23, which taken together destroyed 222 buildings and caused losses of over $3,600,000 including damage to watershed property.

These are the losses from large fires which occurred during 1935:

MINNEAPOLIS FIRE LOSSES 1935

In Minneapolis, Minn., the fire department answered fewer calls in 1935 than in 1934, although fire losses were greater, due to large fire losses in December. The Minneapolis fire department responded to 4,399 alarms in 1935 compared with 5,294 in 1934. Losses in 1935 were $921,453.90, compared with $857,116 in 1934. The 1935 losses increased over the previous year for the first time since 1930, when losses totaled $1,511,903.

The greater fire losses were:

A $90,000 grain elevator fire at 2300 Marshall Avenue, December 8.

A $45,000 fire at the Minneapolis Moline Power Implement Co., 2900 Minnehaha Avenue, December 11.

A $37,900 fire at the F. W. Woolworth Co. and adjoining stores at 300 and 314 West Broadway.

There were 27 fires with losses over $5,000.

There were 271 false alarms. The average cost of each run, including runs on false alarms, was about $150.

—Minneapolis Star, January 1936.

MINNEAPOLIS AND MINNESOTA FIRE DEPARTMENTS

Heroic self-sacrifice on the part of our corps of firemen is taken for granted. They are doing their part to prevent and control fires, and are paid none too well for their services. They need the cooperation of every citizen in their campaign to outwit the fire demon's closest ally, carelessness, the cause of 60 to 90 percent of all fires.

While a member of the Minnesota legislature I consistently voted for firemen's legislation—I called attention to fire, flood, and disaster, and proposed remedial legislation. I asked that a fire, flood, and disaster fund be established as early as 1913. This would have saved thousands of families from misery in the Minnesota forest fires and other calamities and disasters. I will continue my efforts along this line of public service.

LOSS OF LIFE BY FIRE

About 10,000 people in the United States are burned to death each year. Compared with other accidents, deaths from burns are exceeded only by those from motor vehicle accidents, falls, and, in some years, drownings. The death rate from burns in 1933 was 5.8 per 100,000 population. About one-fourth of all deaths from burning occur to children under 5 years of age (National Safety Council, Accident Facts 1935).

It is believed that the number of lives now lost by fires is less than formerly. Prior to 1920 the annual loss of lives by fire was reported as 15,000, comparing with the present figure of 10,000. About one-third of the fatalities are included in the census statistics under other classifications. When a person jumps from a burning boat and drowns, his death is caused by fire, but is classified as "drowning."

FATALITIES BY AGE AND SEX

Nearly half the fire fatalities are of children under 15 years of age.

OCCUPANCY CLASSIFICATION FOR FIRE FATALITIES

Over 52 percent of the loss of life occurred in residential properties from June 20, 1930, to December 18, 1935, according to the National Fire Protection Association. Men are shown to be the principal victims for the reason that the National Fire Prevention Association fire-record files are more complete for fires in industrial properties than for fires in residential occupancies. These figures cover about 15 percent of the loss of life by fire during that period.

FACTORIES BETTER PROTECTED THAN SCHOOLS

Of the victims of fire in dwellings, 41 percent were children. In spite of the greater fire hazard of manufacturing institutions, the average loss of life per fire in schools and institutions has been more than twice as great. We have inferior fire protection in our schools and institutions compared with the means installed in private factories. Automatic sprinklers and other modern fire-protection means are generally found in the larger manufacturing properties. Privately owned factories are given more adequate protection than children in school.

Here are the classes of fires in which loss of life occurred from June 20, 1930, to December 18, 1935. The actual number of fires listed amounts to about 15 percent of the total:

(National Fire Protection Association.)

I am placing in the appendix a more detailed table showing the causes of deaths in fire. This shows the reason for the loss of life, rather than the cause of the fire. (See appendix C.) The largest number lost their lives because they were trapped in burning buildings. Airplane fires caused 357 deaths. Fires in automobiles, busses, and trucks were responsible for 399 deaths. Children playing with matches caused 130 deaths. A large number of children were burned to death when left alone for a short time. In many such cases it was impossible to enter the burning building to save the children.

LOSS OF LIFE IN FIRES, 1936

Since the beginning of 1936 the National Fire Protection Association has received reports of 293 fires in which loss of life occurred; a total of 558 lives were lost in these 293 fires.

FIRE CREATES BUSINESS AND LABOR LOSS

In addition to loss in lives and property, fire brings its economic losses in business and in jobs. Fire destruction always results in the loss of time, labor, and materials. Burned property can never be restored. Large fires cause serious interruption of business. They frequently destroy records that cannot be replaced. Heavy losses cause a rise in insurance rates, and increase the cost of living. Loss of employment and contraction of sales result when the operations of a business firm are interrupted by fire. Fires have sometimes removed the means of support for thousands of workers and forced them to migrate to other cities in search of employment. The public pays, directly or indirectly, for fire loss.

CAUSES OF FIRES

The National Board of Fire Underwriters has prepared a table showing the fire losses in the United States by cause, during 1932 and 1933. (See appendix D.) According to this, matches and smoking caused the greatest fire loss in 1933; defective chimneys and flues came second, and incendiarism third. Other causes of fires are listed as follows:

Stoves, furnaces, boilers, and their pipes; misuse of electricity; spontaneous combustion; sparks on the roof; petroleum and its products; lightning; hot ashes and coals—open fires; sparks from machinery; open lights; sparks from combustion; ignition of hot grease, tar, wax, asphalt, etc.; gas, natural and artificial; explosions; rubbish and litter; fireworks, firecrackers, etc.; steam and hot-water pipes; losses due to spreading fires originating from other causes. The National Board of Fire Underwriters publishes a pamphlet, "Safeguarding the Nation Against Fire", containing valuable information concerning these various causes of fire.

MATCHES

While the loss from the cause "matches—smoking" was $14,439,000 in 1933, it amounted to nearly $24,000,000 in 1932. The figures shift from year to year, and 25 percent should be added to these figures for unreported losses. The figures I am giving show only reported losses.

Each year approximately 300 billion matches are consumed. This means 800 million daily, or 500,000 flames every minute, each one of which holds the possibility of causing disastrous fire. The wife of Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, the great American poet, was burned to death because of a lighted match thrown upon the floor. Every day children are losing their lives from the same cause. Matches should be kept in metal or earthenware containers, out of children's reach.

Sometimes rats and mice have been known to pick up stray matches and carry them off for nest building, often near a chimney for the sake of warmth.

Matches should not be left around. Ash receivers should be handy wherever smoking is permitted, but they should be kept away from papers. When lighting a match on a box, the match should be struck away, not toward, the person striking it. When matches are lighted on boxes or "books", the box or paper flap should be closed before lighting, so that the flame will not catch fire to the rest of the book or box.

One of the most expensive cigarette fires was caused when two careless individuals violated the "no-smoking" regulation of a Jersey City, N. J., warehouse and caused a $2,000,000 warehouse fire in which four buildings were destroyed, together with several adjacent properties, 20 railroad locomotives, and several loaded freight cars.

DEFECTIVE CHIMNEYS AND FLUES

Defective chimneys and flues caused the second greatest fire loss in 1933, $14,155,567. In 1932 the loss was $19,761,761.

Defective flues result from poor construction. The National Board of Fire Underwriters recommends that chimneys, beside being built solidly from base to cap on a stable foundation laid in the ground, should have fire-clay flue lining and should be cleaned of soot accumulations at least once a year, particularly if bituminous coal is used. Bricks used for chimneys should always be laid flat and not on edge, as by this latter method the structure is weakened and has a tendency to develop cracks through which sparks may escape. Chimneys should never be supported on the timber construction of a building or hung on brackets. Sewer tile is incapable of withstanding wide fluctuations in temperature, and should not be used instead of fire clay.

Sparks from defective chimneys escape into attics. If a chimney passes through a floor, the space between it and floor timbers should be filled with some porous, incombustible material such as loose cinders or refuse plaster, gypsum, or mortar, held in place by a sheet of metal nailed to the underside of the wooden beams. This prevents passage of fire through partitions and also makes it impossible for mice to build nests in this space. Flues should be cleaned at least once a year. They should never be burned out.

INCENDIARISM

Third on the list of fire causes is incendiarism, taking a toll of $12,956,372 in 1933 and $17,639,122 in 1932. These figures do not cover all the loss; there were many suspicious cases where convictions for incendiarism were not made. Incendiarism is a type of mental disease which psychiatrists term "pyromania." Persons affected with this disease delight in seeing the fire department rush out to answer an alarm, and also in watching the flames devour their prey.

However, aside from planned fires started by mentally diseased people, there are a large number started for the purpose of collecting insurance. At least 6 percent of the fire loss of 1933 was caused by incendiarism. Unofficial estimates vary, and run much higher. Police departments have been carrying on an intense campaign against incendiarism and arson.

ECONOMIC CAUSE OF INCENDIARISM

It is interesting to learn that poverty and unemployment are causes of fire loss. Reporting for the committee on incendiarism and arson of the National Board of Fire Underwriters, sixty-eighth annual meeting, Mr. H. V. Smith, chairman, stated:

One element has been the change in economic conditions which have materially lessened the pressure on assureds to cause or to submit to having a fire. Moratoriums on mortgage foreclosures, availability to Government funds for refinancing mortgages and the somewhat higher commodity prices have all contributed to the reduction of deliberate fires. * * *

Arson, like other crimes committed for money, depends in a large degree upon economic motives—the greedy desire for profit, or the need of funds for the necessities of life. Adequate social security for all the people would do away with the necessity felt by some desperately poor individuals to resort to arson and other crimes as a source of temporary relief.

SPONTANEOUS IGNITION

Spontaneous ignition, taking its toll of $7,301,188 in 1933, is caused by chemical action. Fire is a combination of oxygen with a combustible substance. When these elements merge at a temperature known as the kindling point, fire occurs. The kindling temperature varies from 112 to 1,200 degrees. This temperature may be reached because of chemical action, friction, direct heat or flame, electricity, the sun's rays, or from lightning. When it is reached because of chemical action, it is called spontaneous combustion.

MATERIALS SUBJECT TO SPONTANEOUS IGNITION

Materials subject to spontaneous ignition are, for instance, rags or litter saturated with fish oils, linseed oil, soya-bean oil, cottonseed pressings, practically all vegetable and animal oils and fats, dairy feeds containing vegetable oils, wheat middlings, oats, barley, and other grain, damp hay, sawdust, lime, and charcoal.

Old packages of newspapers have been known to set attics afire from spontaneous combustion. Printer's ink is subject to spontaneous combustion when it reaches the proper temperature. A $100,000 fire in a New York building was caused by painters' oily refuse left in a heap.

Soft coal should be kept cool in order to prevent spontaneous ignition. Sometimes it can be turned over in order to cool the lower strata; in some plants it is stored under water. Soft coal should never be piled around wooden building supports or near a furnace or boiler. Not more than 500 tons should be placed in a single pile, and piles should not be more than 10 or 12 feet deep. In some coal yards pipes about an inch in diameter are placed vertically in the piles, one to each 300 or 400 square feet of area, with the lower ends of the pipes at different distances from the bottom of the heap. Thermometers are lowered each week into the pipes to determine the temperature.

SPARKS ON THE ROOF

Sparks on the roof caused $7,214,369 fire loss in 1933 and nearly $10,000,000 in 1932. Certain types of soft coal give off a great amount of soot, and glowing particles often fly out of chimney tops, causing fires on combustible roofs. Poor grades of wooden roofs are like tinder, ready to ignite from a chance spark. Embers which would roll off a pitched roof of smooth material stick to the roughened surface of wooden shingles.

EXPOSURE

"Exposure" means communicated fire which started in one property and ignited nearby. It is not an original cause of fire. In 1933 it caused $16,224,795 worth of damage, and in 1932, $26,276,387. Flying particles sometimes start fires on the roofs of houses a mile or more from the original fire, and conflagrations result. Exposure problems are most serious in thickly populated districts. Open squares and wide streets reduce the exposure fire hazard.

PETROLEUM AND ITS PRODUCTS

Fire losses from petroleum and its products amounted to $6,562,727 in 1933 and $9,237,926 in 1932. Gasoline is the most dangerous petroleum product. It accumulates in holes in garages. In an automobile repair pit in Newark, N. J., a mechanic was working underneath a car and struck a spark with his wrench. This ignited the inflammable vapors that had accumulated in the pit. He was burned to death when his clothing and the car caught fire. Such pits should be kept well ventilated in order to prevent the accumulation of gasoline vapors. Many fires occur in the home from dry-cleaning with gasoline.

Kerosene is less dangerous than gasoline, but will explode under certain conditions. Many disasters have been caused by pouring kerosene on fires.

ELECTRICITY

The misuse of electricity caused $7,919,775 worth of fire loss in 1933 and $11,883,154 in 1932. To all these loss figures given must be added 25 percent to account for unreported losses. These figures cover only reported losses totalled by the National Board of Fire Underwriters.

Defective wiring and misuse of heating appliances, such as toasters, hair-curlers, irons, hotplates, cause many fires. The National Board of Fire Underwriters considers amateur electric installations dangerous. A common practise is to add lengths of ordinary lamp cord and to loop extensions around nails, fixtures, or other projections. Sometimes this causes breaks in the insulation or in the wire, resulting in short circuits and the blowing of fuses. When blown fuses are doctored up instead of replaced, the wire is apt to overheat and cause fire. A fuse should not be doctored with nonfusing coins or wire. Inspectors of a city fire department once confiscated a bushel basket of pennies which had been used to doctor fuse-plugs.

LIGHTNING

Lightning, "nature's electricity" caused $4,456,686 fire loss in 1933 and $5,480,236 in 1932. Properly installed lightning rods are the best means of protection. Sky-scrapers and tall trees are often struck. New Jersey, Illinois, and New York have suffered more from lightning fire loss than any other States. Any object in the path of lightning which is not a conductor of electricity resists its passage and in that way creates enough heat to cause ignition of the object. Wooden buildings are destroyed unless a lightning rod, properly installed, conducts the charge of lightning safely to the earth.

About the safest place to be during an electric storm is in a steel-frame building, or in a steel car on rails of steel. Lightning is very dangerous where oil tanks are around.

Many fires have occurred to buildings which have lightning rods. It is important that the rods be properly installed and kept in good order. Lightning rods have operated at an efficiency of about 97 percent. Some of the causes of their failure to operate when lightning struck are: lack of grounding to permanent moisture; insufficient number of points; lack of points at chimneys, cupolas, ventilators, spires, gables, and other elevations; underweight materials; points and connections not mechanically or electrically secure; failure to connect downspouts, door tracks and other metal parts to the rodding system; running metal clothes lines from trees to buildings; constructing silos and other additions without extending the rodding system; rusting, corroding, and breaking of conductors.

OTHER KNOWN CAUSES OF FIRE

Other causes of fire, listed as miscellaneous, are ignited photographic film, burning carbon, lime, hot glass, molten metal, radios, which sometimes have storage batteries that give off sparks hot enough to ignite inflammable vapor. The National Electrical Code gives detailed methods of radio installation to prevent fire hazards. Outside antennas should never cross over or under any electric light or power wires carrying more than 600 volts, or any railway or trolley feeder wires. They should not be located so that the breakage of antennas or electric service cables could result in a contact. Inside antennas are considered harmless. Wires leading in from the aerial should be of copper or copper-covered steel, and should enter a building through noncombustible, nonabsorptive insulating bushing. It should not come within 4 inches of electric light and power wires. Approved lightning arresters for lead-in wires are recommended.

SOME KINDS OF FIRES: DWELLING FIRES

The average annual fire loss in dwelling fires from 1930 to 1934, inclusive, is estimated at $97,093,000, for 166,000 fires occurring in the United States each year during that 5-year period. Nine percent of dwelling fires are due to exposure from other burning buildings. Dwelling fires cause more loss of life than any other kind of fire; many of these fires occur while the occupants are sleeping. Fire-prevention methods installed in industrial, mercantile, and public buildings have not been installed in schools or in homes. Even the most palatial residences often have combustible construction, wooden-shingle roofs, and no adequate water supply for fire extinguishment.

TREND OF DWELLING-FIRE LOSSES

The number of fires in dwellings was greater in 1934 than in 1925, although there was a decrease during 1933 and 1934 from the preceding 2 years. The number of dwelling fires amounts to over half the total number of fires for all occupancies.

City dwelling-fire losses are lower per fire because of the greater fire protection available in cities. The average loss per fire for five States and two cities is $591. About 73 percent of the loss occurs in the building itself and 27 percent in the contents of the building.

CAUSES OF DWELLING FIRES

The causes of some dwelling fires have already been mentioned. The greatest number of fires start in basements and kitchens. More than 11 percent started on roofs, porches, and other outside locations.

Fire departments in many cities have fire-prevention agencies. They send uniformed forces into buildings and dwellings for regular fire-hazard inspections. Some of the cities which carry on regular dwelling fire inspections are: St. Paul, Minn.; Cincinnati and Middletown, Ohio; Berkeley, Calif.; Oklahoma City, Okla.; Grand Rapids, Mich.; Omaha, Nebr.; Erie, Pa.; Dallas and Fort Worth, Tex.; Memphis, Tenn.; Parkersburg, W. Va.; Providence, R. I.; Worcester, and Springfield, Mass. Inspections are made at least once a year.

Fire-inspection crews also leave fire-prevention literature in the homes, at the time they suggest removal of certain fire hazards in the dwelling being inspected. The idea has the support of the general public. In only a fraction of 1 percent of the homes were firemen refused entrance. Fire inspection in dwellings has been in effect long enough in some cases to prove its success as a fire-prevention method. In the city of Providence, R. I., here is the record:

FOREST FIRES

TREES

I think that I shall never see
A poem lovely as a tree.

A tree whose hungry mouth is pressed
Against the earth's sweet flowing breast;

A tree that looks at God all day,
And lifts her leafy arms to pray;

A tree that may in Summer wear
A nest of robins in her hair;

Upon whose bosom snow has lain;
Who intimately lives with rain.

Poems are made by fools like me,
But only God can make a tree.

—Joyce Kilmer.

Forest-fire loss is so great, and our means of preventing fires so inadequate that insurance companies will not insure our timberland. Negotiations are being carried on by the Government with representatives of insurance firms in an effort to find some means of insuring our forests—a function which should be performed by the Government.

From 1930 to 1934 there were on an average 169,526 forest fires per year. These fires burned an area of 45,749,286 acres in public and privately owned land per year. The average annual damage was $58,429,204. This figure covers losses in tangible values only, such as improved property and standing timber. It does not include the large intangible damages to young growth, watershed values, wildlife, scenic, and recreational values, and so forth, which cannot be measured in dollars and cents. Nineteen people lost their lives fighting fire on the national forests in 1934. Other losses for 1934 are:

KINDS OF FOREST FIRES

There are three different classes of forest fires for which different fire-fighting technique has been developed. A ground fire is confined to the materials composing the forest floor or beneath the surface as in peat beds. It spreads slowly but is difficult to extinguish. To extinguish it, fire lines are dug into the earth, and water is used to put the fire out.

A surface fire runs over the forest floor, burning the top layer, the loose debris, and smaller vegetation. It spreads rapidly. Fire lines and other cleared lanes are used to control it. The fire is sometimes extinguished with soil.

A crown fire runs through the tops of the trees. It spreads very rapidly and is the most dangerous and destructive of all forest fires. Standing dead trees must be felled, and other fire-fighting technique has been developed for crown fires.

MOST LOSS OCCURS ON UNPROTECTED FOREST LANDS

Ninety percent of the burning occurs on unprotected land. We have 150 national forests for which there has been developed efficient fire protection. The Federal Government and the States are cooperatng in an endeavor to protect about 420,000,000 acres of forest land outside the national forests. The annual toll of forest fires is around 40,000,000 acres of unprotected timberland. On national forest lands, totalling about 170,000,000 acres, the loss is seldom over 500,000 acres a year, and in 1935 it was less than 200,000.

FOREST RANGER SERVICE

In 1935 there were about 10,000 fires on national forests, compared to an average of 8,000 over the years 1931 to 1934. These fires burned 178,133 acres, compared to an average of 440,802 acres during the 4 years 1931–34.

An "extra period" fire is one which is still out of control after 10 a. m. on the day following its discovery. The Forest Service believes that the most significant comparison with progress in forest-fire fighting is that there were 156 "extra period" fires during 1935 compared to an average of 270 in the period 1931–34. Roy Headley, chief of the Service's Division of Fire Control, believes that only so-called "freak" fires can succeed in outwitting the Forest Service fire-fighters today.

Uncle Sam's forest-fire fighters are doing their best. Sometimes fires start in almost inaccessible spots, and spread with unbelievable rapidity because of the topography and weather conditions. Carelessness is the fire fighters' worst enemy. About 90 percent of the forest fires are man caused. Careless smokers and neglected campfires are responsible for most of them. Other causes are incendiarism, debris burning, and lightning. In 1917 over 3,000,000 people visited the national forests. Now we have about 35,000,000 people a year. More people in the woods usually means more fires, although there is a reduction in fire danger from railroads and logging companies.

FOREST-FIRE HAZARDS

The character of the forest area and the weather conditions in the area determine the natural fire hazards. Man, of course, is the greatest hazard of all. In the Lake States, the principal upland forest-fire fuels are grass, pine litter, hardwood litter, dead herbaceous vegetation, and dead and down wood. Dead grass is the most inflammable. Lighter fuels ignite most easily and cause fires to spread more rapidly. Heavier fuels generate more heat and hold fire longer. For these reasons, where both light and heavy fuels exist, the greatest fire hazard presents itself. Inflammability naturally depends upon moisture, which in turn is determined by weather conditions. The greatest fire hazard exists when the forest materials have been dried to the point where the moisture content is less than that of their inflammability point. Fire hazard fluctuates with relative humidity. A psychrometer (an instrument containing a wet and a dry thermometer) is used to determine the humidity of the air. Humidity from 0 to 30 means that fires will catch readily and will burn fiercely. Above 60 percent humidity is low inflammability and fires will not spread readily.

Humidity reaches its low about 8 a. m. and its high about 2 p. m. Temperature has little direct bearing on fire hazard. Its importance is indirect, as it determines the moisture-holding capacity of the air. Wind movement increases fire hazard. Sunshine is also a fire hazard, and fires are more likely to occur during periods of clear weather. Hazard is greater in the pine regions than in hardwoods. Density of the forest tends to reduce the fire hazard by slowing up evaporation. It does this by providing shade, reducing wind movement, lowering temperatures, and raising the relative humidity.—(Information from Gateways to Forestry, Book III, Forest Protection, U. S. Department of Agriculture, Forest Service, North Central Region.)

DROUGHT BRINGS GREATER FOREST FIRE HAZARD

For the past 15 years we have had a dry cycle which reached a climax in the great 1934 drought. The drought placed a difficult problem of fire prevention on the national forests. In 1934, 10,871 national forest fires were fought by the Forest Service, compared with 6,315 in 1933 and 7,037 in 1932. Sixty-four percent more fires were fought in 1934 than in 1933 in the western national forests.

Many forests were made more difficult to protect, by drought, increased use of the forests for recreation, and insect infestations. Burned areas on trees are particularly subject to insect infestations. In the northern Rocky Mountain region, a large number of early fires broke out before the Forest Service guard stations had been completely manned for the season. Between May 15 and June 10, 1934, there was a 10-day period with 150 fires; the greatest number recorded in previous years was 40. I am placing in the appendix a comparison of fires in national forests for the years 1934, 1933, and the 5-year average 1930–34. (See appendix E.)

FLAMES IN THE SKY

Roaring, crackling, belching mile-high billows of black smoke, turning the night sky a lurid orange-red, the flames of forest fire devour growing things in their path. And for that spectacle America pays an annual admission price of some $50,000,000, and indirect charges many times as great.—(Charles E. Randall, U. S. Forest Service.)

The "indirect charges" for forest fires form the largest of all fire loss. We pay in soil erosion, flood, and arid wastes for the destruction of our forests.

FARM FIRES

The average yearly farm fire loss in recent years has been approximately $100,000,000. It is about 30% of the entire national fire loss. This is equal to a per-capita tax of more than $16 on every farmer in the United States. There are about 6,000,000 farms in the country, with 37,000,000 farm buildings. The value of these buildings is approximately $11,000,000,000, and the insurable value of buildings and contents, including produce, livestock, and machinery, is about $23,000,000,000.—(U. S. Department of Agriculture, Bureau of Chemistry and Soils.)

During the 5-year period 1923–27 there was a reported farm fire loss of $93,539 per day. It is customary to add 25 percent for the unreported fire loss. One farm in every thirty had a disastrous experience with fire in these 5 years. The number of loss claims for the whole country was about equal to the number of farms in the New England States. Carelessness was responsible for about 75 percent of the loss.—(Safeguarding the Farm, National Board of Fire Underwriters.)

The report of the Sixty-eighth Annual Meeting of the Board of Fire Underwriters, page 59, shows that comparative fire losses are greater per capita in the country than in the city:

CAUSES OF FARM FIRES

Causes of farm fires are similar to causes of fires in general, but they differ in importance.

1. Defective chimneys and flues.
2. Lightning.
3. Combustible roofs (sparks on roofs).
4. Gasoline, kerosene, and petroleum products.
5. Matches and smoking.
6. Spontaneous ignition of farm products.
7. Stoves, furnaces, and heating apparatus.
8. Hot ashes and coals, including open fires.
9. Electricity and electric appliances.

About 43 percent of farm and rural fires originate from unknown causes. Many of the "unknown" causes turn out to be spontaneous ignition, or arson and incendiarism. About 40 percent of the loss occurs within farm dwellings.—(From Developments in Farm and Rural Community Fire Prevention, by David J. Price, U. S. Dept. of Agriculture, Bureau of Chemistry and Soils.)

COMPARISON OF CITY AND RURAL FIRES

Loss per fire is greater in the country than in the city. In Indiana, 1929 to 1932, the ratio of dwelling losses to the value of property involved was 68 percent in rural areas compared with 6.6 percent in cities of over 5,000. More than half the dwelling loss is in the rural area. This loss is typical of the experience in rural sections of other States. More extensive rural fire-department protection is needed. Towns under 5,000 are generally under volunteer fire-department protection.

While 23.1 percent of the Indiana dwelling fires occurred in rural areas, the loss was greater from rural dwelling fires than the combined losses of all the cities and towns in the State. With only 13.4 percent of the value of the dwellings involved in Indiana fires, rural dwellings suffered 54.9 percent of the State dwelling loss. City dwellings represented 72.6 percent of the value of dwellings involved in fires, but suffered only 29.1 percent of the total dwelling losses. This survey was made by the National Fire Protection Association.

Another survey was made in Oregon for the years 1933 and 1934. The average loss there per dwelling fire in incorporated cities and towns was $201; in rural areas the loss was $1,046. While 12.3 percent of the dwelling fires were in rural sections, 42.2 percent of the loss occurred in these fires.

FIRE PREVENTION—EARLY HISTORY

The first organized fire fighting known by the National Board of Fire Underwriters began after the occurrence of the great London conflagration of 1666. Two-thirds of London was burned in that fire. After that, fire brigades were formed and made subject to call. Even in Nero's day, certain Roman subjects were trained in the use of the fire bucket and a hand pump, but it was not until after the London fire of 1666 that organized fire fighting was given serious study.

Up until 1825 there were five insurance companies in London which maintained private fire brigades, with members known as watermen. The custom was for the watermen to operate only on the property which their companies insured. Plates were furnished the homes which each company insured. The watermen of a certain company would see the company's fire plate hanging over the door. It is said that customarily disinterested brigades from other companies, arriving first upon the scene of a fire, stepped back and waited for the proper corps to come to extinguish the fire. It was all a private business.

It was not until 1865 that organized fire fighting was taken over by the municipal London authorities.

EARLY FIRE FIGHTING IN AMERICA

One of the early records of municipal fire fighting in America dates back to 1659 when the Governor of New Amsterdam, Peter Stuyvesant, purchased and distributed 250 leather buckets and a supply of ladders and hooks. A tax of 1 guilder for every chimney in the town was instituted to provide the cost.

The post of fire chief was apparently inaugurated in 1689, in the town that later became New York City. Later there were fire societies, organized volunteers with definite memberships. This was similar to a cooperative fire-prevention association. Only the members were served.

The paid fire department was started in Cincinnati about the middle of the nineteenth century. After that, other cities followed suit. Fire-fighting methods have steadily been improved, modernized, and enlarged, until New York City in 1933 had a fire department consisting of about 7,000 men, with a chief, 34 deputy chiefs, 96 battalion chiefs, 10 medical officers, 342 captains, 542 lieutenants, 104 engineers of steamers, 20 marine engineers, 24 pilots, 4,800 first-grade firemen, 332 second-grade firemen, 218 third-grade firemen, 202 fourth-grade firemen, and 56 ununiformed firemen. There are 357 companies, including 219 engine companies, 124 hook-and-ladder companies, 10 fireboats, and 4 rescue companies.—(Safeguarding The Nation Against Fire, National Board of Fire Underwriters.)

AGENCIES CONDUCTING FIRE PREVENTION ACTIVITIES: PRIVATE INSTITUTIONS

The National Board of Fire Underwriters, 85 John Street, New York City, has published a national building code which has been adopted by municipalities in every section of the country. This code is an illustrated book of about 300 pages, with an index, giving detailed specifications for the construction of foundations, walls, floors, roofs, and chimneys. Suggestions are also given for construction of theaters and other buildings. A model tenement-house law is included. This code is recognized as a basis for building ordinances.

The National Board of Fire Underwriters is composed of stock fire-insurance companies doing business in the United States. They also publish a number of pamphlets and run advertisements in papers on various aspects of the fire-prevention problem.

The National Fire Protection Association, 60 Batterymarch Street, Boston, Mass., is another organization active in the work of fire prevention. The National Board of Fire Underwriters is one of its members. All sorts of associations, Government bureaus, manufacturing companies, and other organizations interested in fire prevention are members of the National Fire Protection Association. This association publishes a quarterly giving the latest information on fire prevention.

Both of these associations have annual meetings, the minutes of which are published in book form. Individual members of these associations are constantly active in fire-prevention campaigns.

The National Fire Waste Council, 1615 H Street NW., Washington, D. C., is also active in fire-prevention work.

GOVERNMENT FIRE PREVENTION AGENCIES—UNITED STATES FOREST SERVICE

The United States Forest Service has done some fine forest fire-prevention work. I have already mentioned some of their accomplishments. Thirty years ago forest fires were rarely fought unless they endangered other property. There was no planned organization for fire fighting and fire prevention. In 1905 the Forest Service took over the administration of the national forests. Since then there has been a continuous development of personnel, means of fire prevention, transportation, and communication facilities. A continuous program of public education in the matter of forest-fire prevention and care of fire in the woods is carried on.

Trained lookouts watch constantly for the first sight of smoke. They are equipped with binoculars, maps, and proper instruments so that they may locate fires quickly and exactly. As soon as a fire is discovered an alarm is transmitted to the rangers. Organized fire crews are quickly mobilized.

FOREST SERVICE UTILIZES MODERN SCIENCE

Airplanes have been used in national forest-fire prevention for 14 years. They are valuable for scouting and are also used for transportation of men and equipment. Radio and other scientific means are used. Plans are now being made to use planes in direct combat of fires. Some pioneer work has already been done along this line. Plans call for dropping of water or chemicals direct on small fires to retard their progress until ground crews can reach the scene. Values of various chemicals are being tested. Plans are also being made to drop bombs on small fires and in this way throw soil over the fire. Sometimes supplies are dropped to the ground to fighting crews. Tractors are driven through the forests as trail makers, and in this way fire lines are built more quickly than is possible with human labor.

A new type of ultra-short wave radio set which is extremely light can be used on airplanes. The Forest Service at the present time owns no planes, but it can charter them from commercial companies when needed. With the use of radio, the ground crew can talk to the observer in the air.

This year the Forest Service intends to conduct a campaign against carelessness and incendiary fires. Man-caused fires constitute the greatest problem of forest-fire fighters.

Weather observations are made regularly at the different Forest Service stations. Forecasts of forest-fire weather are sent to forest officers. When critical weather conditions are predicted, special preparation is made. During danger seasons the Forest Service employs extra men, and the main attention of forest supervisors and rangers is devoted to preventing fires and to catching those that do start while they are still small.

COOPERATION OF FOREST SERVICE WITH OTHER GOVERNMENT AGENCIES

Forest fires are frequently followed by beetle outbreaks because of the enfeebled condition of the trees, which lowers their powers of resistance. Insect attacks sometimes reach epidemic proportions after a fire, and control measures are undertaken in cooperation with the Bureau of Entomology. Experimental work in insect control is also carried on in cooperation with the Bureau of Entomology. The principal forest insect pests are tree-bark beetles, gypsy moth, spruce budworms, and the larch sawfly.

The Forest Service also cooperates with the division of forest pathology and the division of blister rust control in the Bureau of Plant Industry, Department of Agriculture, in the matter of combating blister rust and other tree diseases sometimes caused by fire.

COOPERATION OF FOREST SERVICE WITH THE STATES

About 426,000,000 acres of land owned by States and private individuals is used principally for growing forests. The Federal Government offers financial aid to the States to prevent fires in these areas. Provision for such is made in the Clarke-McNary law of 1924. Thirty-nine States cooperate in fire protection, and about 237,000,000 acres, or two-thirds of the total area in this classification is protected in this way.

Almost all forest area burned is on unprotected land. For the fiscal year ending July 1, 1936, the Federal Government appropriated $1,578,632 for this work. State and private funds amounting to $4,748,346 were used during that fiscal year for this purpose. The projects are administered by State forestry departments in cooperation with the United States Forest Service.

In 1911, only 16 States had appropriated funds for protection of forests from fire. Today 39 States are cooperating. But millions of acres are still inadequately protected.

COOPERATION OF FOREST SERVICE WITH C. C. C.

When the civilian conservation camps were established, the Forest Service established about 500 camps on the national forests. C. C. C. labor has been used to build a number of emergency landing fields where planes can land in rough mountainous territory and bring supplies to the scene of the fire. Thousands of miles of truck trails have been built to help make areas of fire danger more accessible; thousands of miles of telephone lines have been added, and thousands of miles of firebreaks have been built.

The Division of Information and Education of the United States Forest Service, North Central Region, at Milwaukee, Wis., has recently published a small mimeographed booklet for the purpose of furnishing an outline in forest-fire causes and prevention which the enrollee in the forestry camps of the C. C. C. may follow.

This booklet deals with the causes of forest fires, weather conditions, and other factors conducive to the starting of fires; suggestions for education in the fire-prevention field; plans for practical fire-prevention study, including fire detection, communication and transportation systems, the proper fire tools, and detailed directions for suppression of various kinds of fires.

When systematic efforts to control forest fires began in the national forests, only one-fifth of the country's forest area was included in the national forests. In 1911 Congress passed the Weeks law for cooperative protection of State and private forest lands situated upon the watersheds of navigable rivers. In 1924 Congress passed the Clarke-McNary Act. This extended Federal cooperation to State and private forest lands.

The Forest Service has made commendable progress in fire fighting, and sufficient appropriations should be made available by Congress to continue and expand this work. The continued improvement of methods, equipment, and fire-prevention education of the general public depends on funds made available by Congress.

W. P. A. FIRE-PREVENTION PROJECTS

The Works Progress Administration is another Government agency which is furthering the cause of fire prevention. Several State or municipally sponsored fire-prevention projects have been submitted. We have one of these projects in Minnesota which has been in operation for several months.

Recently a project was approved by the W. P. A. for a project under the supervision and direction of the Commissioner of Police, Commissioner of the Fire Department, and the Safety Director, of the Buffalo, N. Y., Chamber of Commerce.

By means of community meetings arranged through parent-teacher associations and other community groups, and through short talks in theaters, playgrounds, and other public places, instructions are to be given the residents of the city of Buffalo in safety and fire prevention, to help reduce the number of accidents and fires in the home and on the streets. Federal funds will be used for labor and supervision. The project will also prepare and distribute posters and sometimes have paid speakers. Federal funds amounting to $16,780 have been allocated. The sponsors will furnish $1,230, making a total of $18,010. The project will employ 47 people. Similar projects are being considered in other States.

FIRE PREVENTION WORK OF BUREAU OF CHEMISTRY AND SOILS

The Bureau of Chemistry and Soils, United States Department of Agriculture, has done effective research work in rural and community fire prevention. The farm fire prevention committee of the National Fire Protection Association works under the leadership of the Bureau of Chemistry and Soils. The general principles of fire prevention are applied to farm and rural property. Hazards peculiar to farm property, such as spontaneous ignition of hay and dust explosions are given special study. Fire-protection agencies are established in rural districts, including water supplies and fire equipment. The equipment is developed so that it will be usable by the farmer and other agencies having to do with farm fire prevention.

The farm fire prevention committee also cooperates with the agricultural committee of the National Fire Waste Council, 1615 H St. NW., Washington, D. C. They have developed a volunteer firemen's section to organize and assist newly organized rural fire departments. An enabling act for rural fire departments has been developed. Schools of instruction for rural fire departments have been established. About 100,000 firemen in almost every State attended such schools within the 4 years preceding April 1935. The Volunteer Fireman is the professional journal of the volunteer firemen's section of the National Fire Protection Association.

4-H CLUB ACTIVITIES IN RURAL-FIRE PREVENTION

The Department of Agriculture also cooperates with the farm-fire protection committee and the agricultural committee of the National Fire Waste Council in the matter of organizing a program of fire prevention for 4-H clubs. Oregon was the first State to undertake a 4-H club farm fire-prevention project. Kansas, Iowa, Nebraska, and other States now have such projects. A proposed program of fire-prevention study for 4-H clubs have been developed.

PROPOSED PROGRAM FOR 4-H CLUB ACTIVITIES

There are more than 90,000 4-H clubs with a membership of more than 925,000 boys and girls. These 4-H club members are usually the outstanding boys and girls in their farm communities, and the Department of Agriculture feels that well-formulated 4-H club programs of farm-fire prevention will produce definite results in reducing the farm and rural community fire losses.

For activities of 4-H club and similar farm and rural organizations, the farm-fire protection committee recommends the following list of items for competitive merit rating:

(1) Actual fire inspections of farm property each year, with proper reports covering all inspections.

(2) Actual correction or removal of recognized fire hazards on farm property.

(3) Participation in farm meetings, such as Grange and institutes, with talks on farm-fire prevention.

(4) Preparation of articles on farm-fire prevention for farm papers and delivery of essays or radio talks on the subject.

(5) Saving and protection of life in farm fires.

(6) Organization of rural community fire departments and development of fire-fighting methods.

(7) Development of educational programs on fire prevention in rural schools.

(8) Rural community fire surveys and comparisons with other communities, counties, or States.

(9) Proficiency in handling fire-fighting equipment, such as fire extinguishers, hose lines, hand equipment, and other devices.

(10) Introduction and development of farm-fire prevention in 4–H clubs in the community, county, or State.

MINNEAPOLIS FLOUR-MILL DUST EXPLOSION

Pioneers will remember the teriffic flour-mill dust explosion back in the seventies in Minneapolis causing the loss of nearly 100 lives. A monument to these soldiers of the industrial fields stands in Lakewood Cemetery, Minneapolis. On the base is this eloquent inscription:

Labor, wide as the earth, has its summit in Heaven.

MINNESOTA'S FIRE-PREVENTION PROGRAM

The Minnesota State fire marshal's office, under the direction of Dewey W. Johnson—Farmer-Labor appointed—has carried on an intensive campaign to reduce fire losses and prevent Minnesota fires. A complete survey has been made of the causes of fires, and the fire marshal believes that 90 percent of our fires are caused by carelessness. Last year, during National Fire Prevention Week, October 6 to 12, 1935, the Minnesota State fire marshal's office set forth a local community program which was published in the State's press, broadcast over radio, and by other means carried to Minnesota citizens. This community program consisted of nine points:

[Stillwater (Minn.) News, Oct. 11, 1935]

1. Maintain adequate fire-fighting equipment.
2. Abundant water supply.
3. Train personnel of fire department.
4. Careful fire-inspection work.
5. Fire-alarm telegraph system.
6. Salvage work.
7. Standardized hose couplings.
8. Rapid response to fire when called by the citizens.
9. Program for the prevention of incendiary fires.

FIRE PREVENTION ADVOCATED FOR INDIVIDUALS

For individuals the State fire marshal's office had a 14-point program published during Fire Prevention Week:

1. Don't put a penny in the fuse box—put it in the bank. Get the proper size fuse. Before attaching the electric iron, vacuum cleaner, cooking utensils or any other electrical device to your light circuit, consult an electrician as to the ability of your wiring to withstand this additional load.

2. Be careful with ashes within the basement or outside of the house. Do not allow rubbish and paper to accumulate.

3. Beware of oily rags and clothes. They may ignite spontaneously. If you leave them alone for a few hours only, they may start a fire.

4 Shut off your engine when filling gasoline. Do not fill gasoline stove in a closed room. Do not permit an open flame or light in a room where gasoline is stored. Always provide plenty of ventilation where combustibles are kept.

5. In using fluids for cleaning, use only noninflammable cleaners. Remember that a pint of inflammable fluid has as much explosive power as 10 pounds of dynamite.

6. Do not build a fire in an open fire place and go away and leave it, and also use a substantial spark screen.

7. Do not use any matches except safety matches, and keep them away from children. Before throwing away a burned match, break it and be sure that it is out. Remember a match may have a head but no brains.

8. When going into closets or dark corners, use an electric flashlight for such purpose.

9. Do not thaw frozen water pipes by applying a torch or open flame. Wrap loosely with cotton cloth and pour hot water over it, or send for the plumber.

10. Do not depend upon your landlord to protect you from fire. Inspect your home yourself and make all unsafe things safe.

11. Do not set gas stoves right up against walls or partitions. Set it at least 6 inches from wall. Protect the wall with sheet iron or asbestos board. Never connect gas stove with rubber hose. Use iron pipes.

12. Do not string electrical wires over nails, iron pipes, or metal, or run them through lath and plaster partitions without proper insulation.

13. Again do not tamper with your fuse box. Remember fuses are the safety valve of your electrical system. When they blow out, something is wrong.

14. Do not start up your fires in furnace, stove, or grate without having had the furnace or stove cleaned, chimney and smoke pipes examined thoroughly.—(Stillwater (Minn.) News, Oct. 11, 1935.)

RECOMMENDATIONS OF DEWEY W. JOHNSON, NOW FARMER-LABOR CANDIDATE FOR CONGRESS AND STATE FIRE MARSHAL

After writing a series of articles for the magazine "Northwest Insurance" and many Minnesota papers, Dewey W. Johnson, State fire marshal, has reached a number of conclusions with reference to causes of fire, and fire-prevention methods for Minnesota.

NEW RURAL FIRE FIGHTING EQUIPMENT NEEDED

One conclusion drawn is that in the rural areas of Minnesota, especially in towns of 2,000 or less, there is a dangerous scarcity of fire equipment. In the concentrated centers of population in the State there has been also a concentration of fire equipment, due to the requirements of the companies which write fire insurance. But out in the rural areas of Minnesota where the small towns dot the landscape, every 5, 10, or 15 miles, there are no combination trucks or powered pumpers. Rather, one finds hand-drawn hose reels, small chemical tanks cradled in gigs with high wheels; old, rebuilt passenger automobile apparatus made over into fire trucks, manned by volunteer firemen who know they need better equipment and desire it keenly, but who are unable to impress upon officials the need of modernizing their fire departments.

NEW FIRE-FIGHTING EQUIPMENT IN MINNEAPOLIS

In Minneapolis, St. Paul, and Duluth, and the smaller cities of Minnesota, modern fire chiefs get the equipment they desire from their city officials because the city officials have been shown that the best way to prevent fires is to knock the fires down before they reach a good start, or better still, by fire-prevention programs eliminate the causes of fires.

The net result is that Minneapolis has purchased a string of new quads of the finest type and will scrap the passenger-automobile equipment of a former day. St. Paul also is getting off the chemical standard, as is Duluth. The same is true of Winona, Rochester, St. Cloud, Virginia, Crookston, Moorhead, Willmar, New Ulm, Mankato, and a complement of other cities too numerous to mention; but all above the classification of the extreme minimum of 2,500. The problem commences with the smaller communities of Minnesota.

The "blind spot" in Minnesota fire equipment is in the villages and the smaller cities of the State, that group of municipal subdivisions which might be roughly called the rural areas. Once the problem was recognized by the fire marshal, the question then became how best to place the problem before the rural communities and recommend a solution.

W. P. A. FIRE PREVENTION PROJECT IN MINNESOTA

The first thing that the State fire marshal did was to accumulate the facts regarding the problem. The department made application for a fire marshal work project, no. 702, which project, since November 1935, has, by questionnaire and analysis made a complete survey of all fire equipment in Minnesota. The survey disclosed exactly what was apparent to the casual observer. Officials of villages and smaller cities were approached through the work of the deputies of the department, with the idea in mind of educating the virtually unprotected communities to put in a substantial piece of motorized apparatus.

The uniform response of the small fire departments was that they knew their equipment was obsolete and of little use to stop a conflagration, but that the opposition came from municipal officials who were up against the question of finance.

COLD WINTER INCREASED FIRE DANGER

The Department coasted along on this informal campaign the better part of the summer and fall of 1935, but in the winter of 1935 and 1936 Mother Nature brought us the coldest winter on record and thereby dramatized the fire demon and gave him free play in his destructive work through a combination of deep snows and extremely low temperature.

It was impossible for volunteer fire departments to pull hand-drawn equipment through the heavy snow and cold or to buck snowdrifts out into the countryside with light passenger automobile equipment to fight farm fires. In fact, when a crisis was caused by natural elements, fire reaped havoc in the smaller communities and rural districts of the State of Minnesota. Farms and towns were isolated for long periods, and rural Minnesota came to realize that a modern program of warfare against fires was just as necessary in the country as in the city. The "coasting campaign" of the summer and fall of 1935 had made little impression until the things that had been said during that campaign were proved to be true.

Approximately twoscore people lost their lives in the rural-area fires during the extreme cold wave of January and February, and out in rural Minnesota there were over a hundred fires with losses of $5,000 or over, up to and including the New Ulm tragedy of a quarter of a million.

COOPERATIVE FIRE-FIGHTING PLAN ADVOCATED

With the break-up of the winter it was apparent to the fire marshal of Minnesota, and to Insurance Commissioner Frank Yetka, who is State fire marshal, ex officio, that the time had come to strike out on a program and sell every town in Minnesota on the idea of buying modern fire apparatus of substantial design to protect the municipalities.

Included in the program was a plan of cooperation between the surrounding farm areas and the municipalities to buy a piece of fire apparatus, subscribed and paid for by the surrounding rural districts. This apparatus would be placed in the municipality, stored and manned by the municipality, for the fighting of countryside fires, bearing in mind also that the farm fire truck would be a splendid piece of auxiliary apparatus to be used with the major piece of town apparatus which was designed to meet specifications for the municipality.

RURAL COOPERATIVE FIRE EQUIPMENT LAW OF MINNESOTA

The Minnesota fire marshal then brought into use a law passed by the legislature of 1927, which we call the "rural cooperative fire equipment law", the citation of which is Mason's 1927 Laws, section 1027, subsection 1, ad sequitur. This law grants power to the town boards of townships, which is the rural subdivision of government, to assess against the benefited properties in the township the cost of fire apparatus and equipment to be used for fighting fires upon the farms which are the benefited property. In addition, this law gives the town board the power, after procuring authorization of the town meeting, to join together with other townships and adjacent municipalities to work out a common fire-fighting program.

Basing a campaign upon this statute, the State fire marshal met with the Milan fire department and officials of surrounding townships, and a program was worked out there to have these surrounding townships subscribe and pay for a piece of fire apparatus to be stored at Milan, in their fire house, and to be manned by members of the Milan fire department. This truck was to be used for fighting farm fires in the area near and adjacent to Milan, Minn.

Similar meetings have been held at Melrose, Jordan, New Prague, and other towns in Minnesota. As a result there is rather a unified movement started in the State among scores of towns at the present time to buy equipment based upon cooperative effort.

COOPERATIVE MUTUAL INSURANCE COMPANIES HELP

The success of the plan is now but a question of time. Through the cooperation of news gathering organizations, farm publications and rural newspapers the plan has been placed before the people of Minnesota, and the response has been both overwhelming and astounding.

The "Gordian Knot" of financing seems to have been cut, because the question of upkeep and maintenance, which was at first a difficult one, has been solved. The township mutual insurance companies, of which there are 168 in Minnesota, are eager and willing to contract with the municipality in which the apparatus is stored for fire-fighting service on the farms of their assureds. This income from the township farm mutuals is sufficient to purchase the gasoline and other incidentals required for the maintenance of fire apparatus and equipment, and replacement of such details as hose, ropes, etc., at proper times.

NEW FIRE-FIGHTING APPARATUS RECOMMENDED

If this problem works itself out logically it will mean the addition of not less than 500 pieces of farm fire-fighting apparatus in Minnesota, and the fire marshal is recommending it strongly in every municipality into which they go. He believes it is not good firemanship for a municipality having only one piece of fire apparatus to take that piece of apparatus out of town or to another town and leave their own community unprotected. Even though the apparatus is gone only for 1 or 2 hours, that may be the time when a fire will break out in the home town, and wipe it out.

But when the municipality can cooperate with the surrounding countryside through the township structure, be there four, five, or six of them, in a mutual fire protection arrangement, there is a solution of a difficult problem where nobody can be the loser and everyone gains. The farmer gets protection, and so does the municipality in charge of the apparatus. The municipality furnishing fire-fighting apparatus for the rural districts gets the good will of the countryside, and when they get the good will of the countryside they also get its business.

FARM FIRE-FIGHTING APPARATUS INEXPENSIVE

A very adequate piece of farm fire-fighting apparatus can be purchased on the open market for about $3,000. To arrive at the average cost per family, divide $3,000 by 625, the average number of farms benefited. This gives the low cost of $4.80 per family. The farmer need make this investment only about once in 20 years.

FARMERS AND COOPERATIVE FIRE FIGHTING

The farmers are just as enthusiastic as the volunteer firemen who anticipate the arrival of a new, shiny piece of motor apparatus to take its place in the municipal fire department.

Important is the question of appropriation of sufficient money by the town boards for winter snow removal in order to keep the country roads open so that this apparatus can be moved about. This detail of the publicity program through the State press and farm papers remains to be handled, but it is of the same nature as the communications problem—to get the farm apparatus to the fire the municipality storing the equipment must know of the fire. The quickest way is by telephone. Many farmers, although they produce a large percentage of the Nation's wealth, have no telephones. In such cases, the fire marshal recommends that one of each four farmers install the telephone and spread the cost for it among each other. The average farm of 80 or 160 acres would be one-quarter of a mile, which distance can be covered in a few minutes by some member of the family to put a call in for the fire apparatus.

RECOMMENDED RURAL APPARATUS

A real farm fire-fighting apparatus carries its own water in case there is no cistern, well, pond, or stream on the farm. The equipment can negotiate heavy going, and can throw an adequate stream of water for at least 15 minutes before it is necessary to refill the 320-gallon tank either by hand or by hard suction. The fire marshal recommends the following equipment for farm and rural fire fighting:

Motor, 75 horse-power; 300-gallon pump, wheel base, 160 inches; one 320-gallon water tank; one booster pump; 150 feet of 1-inch hose connected directly to booster pump; hose body with a capacity of 1,000 feet of 2½-inch hose and 500 feet of 1½-inch hose; one 1-inch nozzle; one wye from 2½-inch hose to connect two 1½-inch hose; two 1½-inch shutoff nozzles; 45 feet of 2½-inch suction hose in three sections; one 5-gallon pump can; two portable electric lanterns; one 25-foot extension ladder; one hose reeler; three baled-hay hooks; one short cellar pipe; one roll of roof paper, nails, and hammers; one sprinkler head shutoff; spanner belt and spanners for each man; one 1-inch nozzle; one 1½-inch nozzle; two hydrant wrenches; one hydrant gate, reduced to 2½-inches; one debris fork; one flashlight; one large horse blanket for use in first aid or wrapping anyone who might be burned or killed in fire.

CARELESSNESS IS WORST ENEMY

Methods of controlling fires once they have started have been studied and developed by agencies of State and Federal Governments, and by private institutions. Remarkable progress has been made in this field. The outstanding conclusion of everyone who studies the subject of fire control and fire prevention is that carelessness is to blame for most fires. Estimates of the percentage of fires caused by carelessness run from 60 to 90 percent.

Our program of fire prevention should be concentrated on the conservation of our trees, the use of proper construction materials, and fire-fighting apparatus, and, most of all, upon carelessness.

I AM CARELESSNESS

I am more deadly than bullets, and I have wrecked more homes than the mightiest of siege guns.

I steal in the United States alone over $300,000,000 each year.

I spare no one and find my victims among the rich and poor alike, the young and old, the strong and the weak; widows and orphans know me.

I massacre thousands upon thousands of wage earners in a year.

I lurk in unseen places and do most of my work silently. You are warned against me, but you heed not.

I am relentless. I am everywhere; in the home, on the street, in the factory, at railroad crossings, and on the sea.

I bring sickness, degradation, and death, and yet few seek to avoid me.

I destroy, crush, and maim; I give nothing, but take all.

I am your worst enemy.

I am Carelessness.—(Roy K. Moulton, Grand Rapids, (Mich.) News.)

RECORD OF THE ROOSEVELT ADMINISTRATION

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and to insert therewith an address delivered by my colleague [Mr. RAYBURN] before the State Democratic Convention of Texas.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following speech of Hon. Sam Rayburn accepting the temporary chairmanship of the Democratic State convention at San Antonio, Tex., May 26, 1936:

Mr. Chairman and members of the convention, my fellow citizens, I thank you from the bottom of my heart for the signal honor that you have conferred upon me. At no time in my life would I have deemed it a higher privilege to have come before a convention of Texas Democrats than now, because I come to you not with apology but as a representative of a proud, militant, and victorious Democracy. From every side and from every section come bright reports of our prospects in the coming election.

There have been many crises in the history of our country. We have had wars, we have had depressions, we had a War between the States when the lightning of sectional antagonism threatened to shatter this mighty Republic. We had the panic of 1873, of 1893, and in 1914 to 1918 the earth was swallowed up in the greatest reign of madness it had ever known, when ideals were shattered and hearts were made sick. In my opinion, the most serious, far-reaching, and dangerous crisis that ever threatened this country were the years from 1929 until March 4, 1933. More people had lost the faith of their childhood in governments and in men and had done it to such an extent that we stood upon the verge of disaster. After March 4, 1933, the mist began to clear and small rays of sunshine could be seen, because a leader had appeared upon the scene who had a program and the courage and the ability to carry it out. From the hour of his inauguration the people took heart. I say to you that, in my opinion, the most heartening utterance that has been delivered in America since the Declaration of Independence fell from the trenchant pen of Thomas Jefferson was the inaugural address of Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Think for a moment of the situation that faced this administration when it came to power. The 14,000,000 people with hands willing to work and their employment gone. If these 14,000,000 breadwinners each had a wife and one child, that would make 42,000,000 people who had no buying power. Add to that the 33,000,000 on the farms whose income was so reduced by starvation prices that their buying power had been absolutely destroyed or reduced to the very vanishing point. Add these two classes together and you have 75,000,000 of our 120,000,000, or 60 percent, who could not buy even the stern necessities of life, because they had not the wherewithal to do it. Is there any wonder that factories were closed, that business was stagnate, that consternation faced every element of business in the country when they looked these stern facts in the face? Something had to be done and had to be done quickly. In order to put these people to work and give them a buying power, industry had to be revived and agriculture rehabilitated. The critics said it would cost money. We said so too. It has cost money, but, in my opinion, it has been worth it. We have had to make our debt something like $10,000,000,000 in these more than 3 years to bring about recovery. In 1917 and 1918 we spent and loaned to foreign countries $26,000,000,000 in a period of 20 months that was all used for destruction and not for building. It was necessary I grant you; we would do it again. But to take $10,000,000,000 to fight an enemy not on a foreign soil but at our own doors and in our own homes is also justified. We have done it and we would do it again. You hear the hue and cry of the opposition that our public debt is so big that it can never be paid and yet we owe only a few billions more than we owed at the end of the World War.

In the spring of 1933 the great bankers and great businessmen came down to Washington and said, "Mr. President, something must be done." They could see their great banks and their great businesses trembling on the verge of ruin and the happiness and prosperity of themselves and their families and the whole country going glimmering. The President said, "Of course something must be done, and that something is going to cost money", and he asked them, as he stated in his Atlanta speech last fall, how much money could this country owe and its economic and financial structure remain safe. They said, "Mr. President, this country could safely owe $50,000,000,000." They were in distress then. They have recovered, many of them completely and all to a very large extent, under the wise laws of this administration. They are out of distress and are joining a desperate opposition in the hue and cry that we cannot afford to owe the little more than thirty billion that we now owe. They should not stop this program of recovery and they will not. We intend to go on, reelect President Roosevelt, and carry on until not the few alone but the many are again upon their feet with hope and faith and confidence restored and prosperity general.

Let us look at the record a while, specifically and in general.

In 1920, during the last 2 years of Wilson administration, the gross income of American farmers was $13,600,000,000. In 1932 it had declined to $5,300,000,000, a difference of more than $8,000,000,000.

In 1935 the gross income of the American farmer had moved back up $8,110,000,000.

In 1932 the ratio of prices received by farmers to the prices paid by them for what they had to buy was 61 as compared to 100, in 1933 it was 64, in 1934 it was 73, and in 1935 it was 85.

The cash income of farmers in 1932 was $4,300,000,000. In 1935 it was approximately $7,000,000,000.

In 1920 the farm population of the Nation was 31,614,000. In 1932 it had, on account of bad conditions, fallen to 30,585,000. By 1935, because of improved conditions of farm life, it had increased to 32,800,000.

We have but to look at the plight of agriculture on March 1, 1933, and the prices received then and the prices received now by the farmer to see at a glance what the agricultural program has meant to the farmers. Take a few examples: Cotton, for instance, on March 1, 1933, was selling at an average of 5.90 cents per pound and on January 1, 1936, at 11.35 cents per pound, an advance of 92 percent. Dairy products, cattle, and hogs have had similar increases. The average for sweetpotatoes in 1932 was 40 cents per bushel and in 1935, 65 cents per bushel; hogs in 1932 selling for 3.40 cents per pound and in 1935, 7.30 cents; sheep in 1932, 2.35 cents per pound and in 1935, 4 cents; chickens in 1932, 9 cents per pound and in 1935, 13 cents; beef cattle in 1932, 3.30 cents per pound and in 1935, 5 cents; butter from the farm in 1932, 19 cents per pound and in 1935, 27 cents.

How were the banks of the Nation faring during this time? The Treasury Department records show that during 1930, 88 banks failed; in 1931 there were 357 failures; 322 in 1932; 438 in 1933; only 1 in 1934; and 4 in 1935. From November 1, 1935, to date there have been no bank failures in the United States. During 1933, 435 suspensions occurred before and during the banking holiday, while only 3 occurred during the remainder of that year. In addition, receivers were appointed to complete the liquidation of 250 banks for suspension before and during the banking holiday, and which were later reorganized with part payments to depositors.

In the five banks which were suspended during 1934 and 1935 all depositors' accounts up to $5,000 were insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

The Emergency Banking Act and the Glass Banking Act of 1935 were passed. Under these acts deposits in national banks had reached an all-time peak, while the total deposits in all the banks in America had increased by more than $6,000,000,000 in the space of 3 years.

In 1929 the commerce of the United States with foreign nations amounted to $9,500,000,000. In 1932 it had dropped to $3,100,000,000, or a loss of $6,400,000,000.

When Mr. Roosevelt entered the Presidency nearly 1,000,000 homes in the towns and cities of the country were on the verge of foreclosure and dispossession. Through the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, which was established by Congress at the request of the President, more than $3,000,000,000 have been placed at the service of home owners throughout the Nation for long-term loans at a low rate of interest.

Following the recommendation of President Roosevelt, the powers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation were enlarged. This agency has disbursed more than $10,500,000,000 for the revival of American finance and industry. Of this amount, $1,200,000,000 was loaned on farm products such as cotton, wheat, corn, tobacco, and other commodities, most of which has been repaid. Also, of this amount, $1,170,000,000 went to the depositors of closed banks; $670,000,000 was loaned to railroads; $1,350,000,000 was loaned to banks and trust companies; $380,000,000 was loaned to mortgage-loan companies; $294,000,000 was loaned to self-liquidating construction projects; $178,000,000 went to agricultural credit companies; $832,000,000 went to purchase preferred stock in more than 4,000 banks; $435,000,000 went to purchase capital notes and debentures in 2,847 banks; $344,000,000 went to purchase securities from the Public Works Administration, which had been given by local institutions, public and private.

When Mr. Roosevelt became President, unemployment existed to the incredible figure of almost 14,000,000 persons. During the past 3 years, unemployment declined from 14,000,000 to 9,000,000, a reduction of about 40 percent. Farm income in the past 3 years has increased by $3,000,000,000. Two million homes in town and country have been saved to their owners.

The value of securities issued for new and refinancing purposes increased from $1,732,000,000 in 1932 to $3,526,000,000 in 1935.

The aggregate annual income of the American people increased from thirty-nine billion on December 31, 1932, to fifty-four billion in 1935, an increase of fifteen billion.

The value of securities listed on the New York Stock Exchange has increased from fifty-four billion on December 31, 1932, to eighty-six billion on the same date in 1935, an increase of thirty-two billion in 3 years.

Commercial failures in the United States have dropped from 31,822 with liabilities of $928,000,000 in 1932 to 12,185 with liabilities of $264,000,000 in 1935.

Contracts for residence construction increased from $250,000,000 in 1933 to $550,000,000 in 1935, and home-building permits increased from 27,000 in 1932 to 40,000 in 1935.

The urban-home-loan debt has declined from $21,000,000,000 in 1931 to $18,000,000,000 in 1935.

The total wealth of the Nation has increased by more than $50,000,000,000 since the advent of the Roosevelt administration, in spite of the false claim of its enemies that it is seeking to destroy property and the profits of property.

In 1932 American industrial production was 63 percent of normal. In 1935 it was 88 percent.

In 1932 employment in America was 64 percent of normal. In 1935 it was 82 percent.

In 1932 pay rolls in America were 46 percent of normal. In 1935 they were 70 percent of normal.

The consumption of electricity increased from less than 12,000,000,000 to more than 13,000,000,000 kilowatt-hours from 1932 to 1935.

These are a few of the examples of recovery that have come to the farming and all industry since the Roosevelt administration came into power March 4, 1933.

From 1922 to 1932 there were issued by the corporations of this country and offered to the public $50,000,000,000 in securities. The Commerce Department of the Government made an investigation of these securities and gave as their deliberate opinion that $25,000,000,000 were not worth the paper upon which they were written. Under this administration the Securities Act was passed, which was intended to and has cleared up this unwholesome, unfair, and dishonest situation. Under that act no security can be offered to the public through the instrumentalities of the mails, express, telegraph, telephone, or radio without first being registered with the Securities and Exchange Commission and every fact and circumstance surrounding the security laid before that Commission. This act alone will, in my opinion, save to the innocent investors in this country from two to three billion annually.

The manipulation on the great stock exchanges of the country were in a great degree responsible for the terrible debacle of 1929, when the value of stocks and bonds crashed and business in general went to smash. In 1934 we passed a bill known as the stock-exchange regulation bill, which drives manipulators and desperadoes from their places in these marts of trade. This act was not designed to destroy legitimate places for the sale and exchange of stocks and bonds, but to make every man feel and know that he, in buying and selling stocks and bonds, was being dealt with fairly and honestly. Under this act the Securities and Exchange Commission has the right to approve or reject any proposed rule or regulation of the stock exchanges of the country.

Up until 50 years ago no corporation under the law of any State was allowed to own stock in another corporation. At that time some States, like New Jersey and Delaware, went into the business of chartermongering and passed laws to allow one corporation to own stock in another corporation. In the years that followed there grew up what is known as the holding company. A pure holding company neither owns physical property nor operating property, but it is organized to own and deal in the securities of other corporations. These creatures of our legal ingenuity are operated by a few clever men. They are used as the agencies for disfranchising stockholders of thousands of necessary and prosperous operating companies. They are used to take the control and direction of these local companies away from those who built them and place it in a city oftentimes far removed. Through the simple device of pyramiding, a small investment by those in control of the top holding company enables them to do as they like with hundreds of millions, and in some instances even billions, of other people's property. In one system the pyramiding goes so far as to pile one company on top of another until there are 10 corporations in the pyramiding, or the local operating company is 9 companies removed from the corporation at the top which controls it, along with hundreds of others. In this particular set-up an investment of $1 at the top enables the managers of the top to control over $30,000 of book value of the operating companies, or with less than $50,000 to control over a billion dollars of book value. Many of these holding companies control properties in many States, and one became such a sprawling empire that it controlled operating properties in 32 States of the Union.

Through these devices the holding-company management, with investment of a small amount of money, were controlling a vast majority of the whole electric and power industry. Absentee management and dictatorship resulted. We passed the Utility Holding Company Act of 1935 to free the operating electric industry from these leeches, who were sucking the lifeblood out of the operating companies and who by these methods were trying to concentrate in a few hands control of the wealth of the country. Millions in money were spent by these people in hiring high-powered lawyers and dissemination of false propaganda in an effort to defeat this effort to bring about fair play, honest dealing, and common honesty. They misrepresented and maligned practically every man prominent in the labor of the enactment of this law. Every man who was for this sort of a bill was called a "red" or a fool, or both. This mean and vicious propaganda went to the extent of charging that the President of the United States was crazy, as was developed before the Black Lobbying Committee. Three weeks before the Black Lobbying Committee brought out this dirty business some of the hirelings of the utilities in this State were whispering this hell-born lie. My exasperation at things of this kind cannot be expressed better than to say that if the men who would circulate this slander on the great and good man now in the White House were sired by the devil and born in hell they would be a disgrace to the country of their birth. By this act the local operating utility company will be free from these monsters in the form of pyramid holding companies and allow honest investment in local utility companies to return a profit and the saving of more money that the holding companies have been syphoning off may be applied to the reduction of unconscionable high rates that the people of this and many other States have paid.

We have passed a rural-electrification bill providing for a 10-year program, with an appropriation of $425,000,000, to electrify the farm homes of the country. We want to carry on our program in this as in other things of making life for the farm man and the farm woman easier, more pleasant, and more profitable. Nothing can come to the farm home that will lift more of the burden from the back of the farm woman than to have electricity. To show you how little rural electrification this section of the country has, I have but to say that in the Fourth Congressional District, which I have had the honor to represent for many years, there are 30,890 farms. There are only 621 farms that have electrification.

My friends, I could stand here for hours and tell you what has been done during this administration for the uplift and the betterment of this country, but I will not weary your patience. In my opinion, Franklin D. Roosevelt and John N. Garner are the greatest team that ever served in the high positions of President and Vice President of the United States. Speaking in his native State to his neighbors, his friends, and those who love him, let me say that there was never a man, Vice President of the United States, who worked more intelligently and more patriotically with the President than has our beloved fellow citizen, John N. Garner. He has been a help and not a hindrance to the President. He has known his place and has kept in it.

When the passions and the prejudices have passed and impartial history of this period is written, Franklin Delano Roosevelt will stand forth as the upstanding, forward-looking humanitarian, and wise statesman of the age. More laws have been passed under his administration that the plain citizen could feel than in any other administration in the history of the Republic. He had and has a program and, let me repeat, he has the courage and the ability to carry it out. After the darkest period in American history he appeared. Under his leadership and statesmanship the sunshine is breaking through the clouds, the mists are clearing away, and, under God, we will again live in a land where there is fair play, honesty in dealings, and where prosperity and peace will come to remain among all our people.

NAMING CERTAIN STREETS IN THE MALL

Mr. NICHOLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House Joint Resolution 588, for the designation of certain streets or avenues in the Mall as Ohio, Missouri, Oklahoma, and Maine Avenues.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the joint resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Joint Resolution 588

Joint resolution for the designation of certain streets or avenues in the Mall as Ohio, Missouri, Oklahoma, and Maine Avenues

Whereas in that portion of the Mall, so-called, in the city of Washington, D. C., constituting the approach to the National Capitol as it is now being developed, there has long been located Ohio, Missouri, and Maine Avenues, named in honor of the respective States; and

Whereas in the creation of said Mall carrying out the plans of the United States Government for the improvement of the National Capital, the avenues heretofore known as Ohio, Missouri, and Maine Avenues have been discontinued and eliminated; and

Whereas the State of Oklahoma has no suitable designated avenue perpetuating its honor in the National Capital; and

Whereas there have been created in the Mall four avenues running parallel to each other east and west from Union Square to Fourteenth Street: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the four avenues extending east and west in the Mall between Third Street and Fourteenth Street and south of the National Museum and north of the Smithsonian Institution in the National Capital, the city of Washington, D. C., shall be named as follows: In honor of the State of Missouri the most southerly of such avenues shall be known as Missouri Avenue; in honor of the State of Maine the most northerly of such avenues shall be known as Maine Avenue; in honor of the State of Oklahoma the more northerly of the two center avenues shall be known as Oklahoma Avenue; and in honor of the State of Ohio the more southerly of the two center avenues shall be known as Ohio Avenue.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the House joint resolution.

The House joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider laid on the table.

REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE INVESTIGATING MUNITIONS INDUSTRY

Mr. LAMBETH. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution (S. Con. Res. 37) from the Committee on Printing.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 37

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That 44,000 copies of part 3 and subsequent parts of Senate Report No. 944, submitted to the Senate pursuant to Senate Resolution 206 authorizing the appointment of a special committee to make certain investigations concerning the manufacture and sale of arms and other war munitions, be printed for the use of the Senate and House of Representatives.

With the following committee amendment:

In line 8 strike out "and the House of Representatives" and insert "the Special Committee on Investigation of the Munitions Industry."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, as I understand the reading of that resolution, it provides for the printing of reports from the special committee of investigation?

Mr. LAMBETH. It is the printing of the report of the Senate Committee on Munitions Investigation.

Mr. SNELL. Mow many copies?

Mr. LAMBETH. Forty-four thousand. That is an unusually large number, but the Members of both bodies have been circularized, and the requests are for about 80,000. By agreement with the chairman of the committee, we have compromised on 44,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAMBETH. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. Under the amendment none of the copies are for the use of the House?

Mr. LAMBETH. Oh, yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I understood that was stricken out.

Mr. LAMBETH. As the Senate passed the bill there was no provision for the distribution between the House and the Senate, but the custom has always been where these special committees make investigations they have to handle the distribution rather than to put them in the folding room. The chairman of that committee has received a large number of requests from the House and Senate, and they will be filled as they have been submitted.

Mr. BLANTON. That is all right.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAMBETH. I yield.

Mr. RICH. I understood from the chairman of the Senate committee that the Members of the House who made requests for a small number will receive them, but consideration will be given to those who made requests for a thousand or more?

Mr. LAMBETH. That is correct.

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAMBETH. I yield.

Mr. THURSTON. How many pages will there be in these reports?

Mr. LAMBETH. There are six separate sections of the reports, dealing with different phases of the investigation. I cannot advise the gentleman as to the exact number of pages.

Mr. THURSTON. Hundreds or thousands of pages?

Mr. LAMBETH. Oh, hundreds, I think. This is the report; not the hearings.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAMBETH. I yield.

Mr. SABATH. What hearings is this request for?

Mr. LAMBETH. The hearings of the Senate Committee on Munitions.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs upon the adoption of the Senate concurrent resolution.

The Senate concurrent resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TRAFFIC CONDITIONS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. LAMBETH. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution (H. Res. 537), which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 537

Resolved, That, in accordance with paragraph 3 of section 2 of the Printing Act approved March 1, 1907, the Committee on the District of Columbia of the House of Representatives be, and is hereby, empowered to have printed 1,000 additional copies of the hearings held during the current session before a subcommittee appointed by the chairman of said committee to make a study of and report its findings to the full committee as to traffic conditions in the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

INVESTIGATION OF COTTON COOPERATIVES

Mr. LAMBETH. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution (S. Con. Res. 39), which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 39

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That, in accordance with paragraph 3 of section 2 of the Printing Act approved March 1, 1907, the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate be, and is hereby, empowered to have printed 2,000 additional copies of the hearings held before the subcommittee of said committee of the Senate during the first session of the Seventy-fourth Congress, pursuant to the resolution (S. Res. 185) authorizing the Committee on Appropriations to conduct an investigation of the expenditures by the Federal Government for the cotton cooperatives and so forth. These 2,000 copies are to be divided as follows: 1,500 copies of volume no. 1 and 500 copies of volume no. 2.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAMBETH. I yield.

Mr. TABER. Will the gentleman explain this briefly?

Mr. LAMBETH. This is a resolution passed by the Senate for printing additional copies of the hearings before the Senate Committee on Appropriations, dealing with the investigation of cotton cooperatives. It provides for 2,000 additional copies.

Mr. TABER. Why do they not pay that out of the contingent fund of the Senate, as we do generally on such propositions?

Mr. LAMBETH. I do not understand that in the matter of printing additional copies of hearings they have authority to do that. Under the Printing Act they must have authority by resolution if the cost exceeds $500. The cost of this will be $1,088.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the concurrent resolution.

The Senate concurrent resolution was agreed to, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GARFIELD ARTHUR ROSS

Mr. O'BRIEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 4079) for the relief of Garfield Arthur Ross.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Garfield Arthur Ross, of Chicago, Ill., the sum of $5,000 in full settlement of his claim against the Government for personal injuries sustained as a result of subjecting himself to the required antityphoid serum injections during the spring of the year 1931, such injections having been administered by a Government doctor as a prerequisite to his admission as a trainee in the citizens' military training camp at Fort Sheridan, Ill.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 2, after the word "Illinois", insert a colon and the following: "Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, on account of services rendered in connection with said claim. It shall be unlawful for any agent or agents, attorney or attorneys, to exact, collect, withhold, or receive any sum of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof on account of services rendered in connection with said claim, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION AND SAFETY INSURANCE LAWS ON PROPERTY OF UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT

Mr. WELCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 12599) to provide more adequate protection to workmen and laborers on projects, buildings, constructions, improvements, and property wherever situated, belonging to the United States of America, by granting to the several States jurisdiction and authority to enter upon and enforce their State workmen's compensation, safety, and insurance laws on all property and premises belonging to the United States of America.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. RICH. Reserving the right to object, that gives permission to the authorities of a State to look after workmen on Federal buildings?

Mr. WELCH. Yes. The specific purpose of this bill, I may say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, is to take care of a situation that developed in the construction of the Golden Gate Bridge. The bridge is on Government property on either side of the Golden Gate, and the insurance companies are evading their responsibility by reason of this fact.

Mr. RICH. It gives the same rights in the case of public buildings in all the States as well.

Mr. WELCH. Exactly.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whatsoever constituted authority of each of the several States is charged with the enforcement of and requiring compliances with the State workmen's compensation, safety, and insurance laws of said States and with the enforcement of and requiring compliance with the orders, decisions, and awards of said constituted authority of said States hereafter shall have the power and authority to enter onto and upon all lands and premises owned or held by the United States of America by deed or act of cession, by purchase, or otherwise, which is within the exterior boundaries of any State, wherever required or necessary, to enforce and require obedience to the State workmen's compensation, safety, and insurance laws, and to enforce and require obedience to the orders, decisions, and awards of the constituted authorities of the State, on all projects, buildings, constructions, improvements, and property belonging to the United States of America, which is within the exterior boundaries of any State, in the same way and to the same extent as if said premises were under the exclusive jurisdiction of the State within whose exterior boundaries such place may be; and the civil and criminal laws of the several States within whose exterior boundaries such place may be pertaining to and embracing the State workmen's compensation, safety, and insurance laws and pertaining to and embracing the orders, decisions, and awards of the constituted authority of the several States are hereby extended to and cover, for such jurisdictional purposes, the territory above described for criminal as well as for civil infractions thereof and liabilities incurred thereunder.

SEC. 2. For the purposes set out in section 1 of this act, the United States of America hereby vests in the several States within whose exterior boundaries such place may be, insofar as the enforcement of State workmen's compensation, safety, and insurance laws are affected, the right, power, and authority aforesaid: Provided, however, That by the passage of this act the United States of America in nowise relinquishes its jurisdiction for any purpose over the property named, with the exception of extending to the several States within whose exterior boundaries such place may be only the powers above enumerated relating to the enforcement of their State workmen's compensation, safety, and insurance laws as herein designated.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

COINAGE OF 50-CENT PIECES IN COMMEMORATION OF MEMORY OF THE LATE DR. CHARLES P. STEINMETZ

Mr. CROWTHER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 12756) to authorize the coinage of 50-cent pieces in commemoration of the memory of the late Dr. Charles P. Steinmetz.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in commemoration of the memory of the late Dr. Charles P. Steinmetz there may be coined at the mints of the United States 25,000 silver 50-cent pieces of standard size, weight, and fineness of a special appropriate design to be fixed by the Director of the Mint, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, but the United States shall not be subject to the expense of making the models for master dies or other preparations for this coinage.

SEC. 2. Coins shall be issued at par, and only upon the request of a committee of not less than three persons duly authorized by the officers of the Steinmetz Memorial Committee of the Schenectady Junior Chamber of Commerce.

SEC. 3. Such coins may be disposed of at par or at a premium by the committee, duly authorized in section 2, and all proceeds shall be used in furtherance of the commemoration of the memory of the late Dr. Charles P. Steinmetz.

SEC. 4. All laws now in force relating to the subsidiary silver coins of the United States and the coining or striking of the same; regulating and guarding the process of coinage; providing for the purchase of material, and for the transportation, distribution, and redemption of the coins; for the prevention of debasement or counterfeiting; for the security of the coin; or for any other purposes, whether said laws are penal or otherwise, shall, so far as applicable, apply to the coinage herein directed.

SEC. 5. The coins authorized herein shall be issued in such numbers, and at such times as they shall be requested by the committee, and upon payment to the United States of the face value of such coins.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to those Members having bills on the Private and Consent Calendars who were not here when the order was made a short while ago that the House is going to hold a special night session tomorrow to consider such bills. For this reason, the Chair thinks Members should suspend requests for the consideration of bills of this nature.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, we shall object to any other bills of this character being brought up at this time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has only recognized one or two Members since the order was made.

NATIONAL CEMETERY, FORT BLISS, TEX.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 4265) to authorize the Secretary of War to set apart as a national cemetery certain lands of the military reservation of Fort Bliss, Tex.

The SPEAKER. Is this bill on the Private or Consent Calendars?

Mr. THOMASON. This is a Senate bill, passed 2 or 3 days ago.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, I may say that this land already belongs to the United States Government and is part of the Fort Bliss Army post. A cemetery has been there for many, many years, and a great many soldiers of the Regular Army are buried there. This bill is to establish it as a national cemetery and does not involve the purchase of any land.

Mr. SNELL. What is the purpose of the bill?

Mr. THOMASON. The purpose is to provide for a caretaker so this place can be adequately cared for by the Government as a cemetery. The bill passed the Senate unanimously and also was reported out unanimously by the House committee.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to set aside in the United States Military Reservation of Fort Bliss, Tex., a plot of land which shall include the existing post cemetery with such boundaries as he may prescribe therefor as a national cemetery, which hereafter shall be cared for and maintained as a national cemetery under the laws relating to the same.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement of the managers on the part of the House.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3531) to amend the act entitled "An act for the control of the floods on the Mississippi River and its tributaries, and for other purposes", approved May 15, 1928, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report as to each of the said amendments, viz:

Amendments

On amendment no. 1: Section 1a, proposed by the House, authorizing the construction of 13 reservoirs on the Arkansas River and 13 reservoirs on the White River, was eliminated from the bill.

On amendment no. 2: Section 8a, proposed by the House, requiring the local interests (a) to provide without cost to the United States all lands, easements, and rights-of-way; (b) to hold and save the United States free from damages; and (c) to maintain and operate all works after completion, was retained with amendments that make the section inapplicable to floodways, but applicable to all levee and reservoir projects in the bill, with provision for construction of any authorized dam after the receipt of assurances, and with provision for the completion of any reservoir previously authorized by Congress and under way, as provided in the omnibus bill.

The effect of the amendments agreed to in conference to section 8a, as proposed by the House, is to require levee and reservoir projects to make the same contributions required of local interests in H. R. 8455, the so-called omnibus bill. The language of section 8a is the identical language in the similar section of the said H. R. 8455. The requirements for local contribution and maintenance along the main stem of the Mississippi River and along the tributaries of said river in the said bill for reservoirs and levees are the identical requirements for local contribution and maintenance in the so-called omnibus bill.

Section 8a, as amended in conference, reads as follows:

"SEC. 8a. That no money appropriated under authority of this act shall be expended on the construction of any reservoir project herein authorized until States, political subdivisions thereof, or other responsible local agencies have given assurances satisfactory to the Secretary of War that they will (a) provide without cost to the United States all lands, easements, and rights-of-way necessary for the construction of the project, except as otherwise provided herein; (b) hold and save the United States free from damages due to the construction works; (c) maintain and operate all the works after completion in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary of War: Provided, That the construction of any dam authorized herein may be undertaken without delay when the dam site has been acquired and the assurances prescribed herein have been furnished, without awaiting the acquisition of the easements and rights-of-way required for the reservoir area: And provided further, That whenever expenditures for lands, easements, and rights-of-way by States, political subdivisions thereof, or responsible local agencies for any individual project or useful part thereof shall have exceeded the present estimated construction cost therefor, the local agency concerned may be reimbursed one-half of its excess expenditures over said estimated construction cost: And provided further, That when benefits of any project or useful part thereof accrue to lands and property outside of the State in which said project or part thereof is located, the Secretary of War may acquire the necessary lands, easements, and rights-of-way for said project or part thereof after he has received from the States, political subdivisions thereof, or responsible local agencies benefited the present estimated cost of said lands, easements, and rights-of-way, less one-half the amount by which the estimated cost of these lands, easements, and rights-of-way exceeds the estimated construction cost corresponding thereto: And provided further, That the Secretary of War shall determine the proportion of the present estimated cost of said lands, easements, and rights-of-way that each State, political subdivision thereof, or responsible local agency should contribute in consideration for the benefits to be received by such agencies: And provided further, That whenever not less than 75 percent of the benefits as estimated by the Secretary of War of any project or useful part thereof accrue to lands and property outside of the State in which said project or part thereof is located, provision (c) of this section shall not apply thereto; nothing herein shall impair or abridge the powers now existing in the Department of War with respect to navigable streams: And provided further, That nothing herein shall be construed to interfere with the completion of any reservoir or flood-control work authorized by the Congress and now under way."

GLENN GRISWOLD,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to announce to the House that the conferees both of the House and of the Senate are in complete accord on the amendments specified in this report. They are also in complete accord on the omnibus flood-control bill, the greatest undertaking of the kind that has ever been known in our country and an urgent piece of legislation at the present time.

Only two amendments were offered to S. 3531 to amend the act entitled "An act for the control of floods on the Mississippi River and its tributaries, and for other purposes." One was for the White and Arkansas Rivers involving $126,000,000. This was eliminated because the estimated cost did not coordinate with the completion of the project in the lower Mississippi. The other amendment was that of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS], which has been modified so as not to apply to floodways in the lower Mississippi Valley.

I feel that since the House and Senate conferees are in complete accord upon this legislation we should approve the conference report.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Louisiana a question. It deals primarily with the Jenkins amendment to which he referred.

I wonder if the gentleman has a copy of the bill containing this insertion?

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. Yes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Will the gentleman inform the House what the amendment to my amendment means? Does it mean anything else except the exact language in which it is set forth?

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. No; except it applies to the obligation covering the furnishing of flowage rights and easements and relieves the United States Government from any further obligation after the completion of the project. It provides rights-of-way for levees and levee foundations in the case of every project undertaken, but it does not apply to floodways in the lower Mississippi Valley. I feel the gentleman is in accord with our views.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. I may say to the House that I agree with the statements made by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WILSON] so far as the conferees are concerned. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] is retained and this accomplishes the result of making the amendment to the omnibus bill and the amendment to the House bill identical.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. The gentleman yielded me 3 minutes?

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. Yes. I yield the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] 3 minutes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, may I say that we are now about to dispose finally, as far as the House is concerned, of two very important bills. These two bills include all of the flood matters we had up for consideration last week and the week before and involve the expenditure of a good many million dollars. It will be remembered that when we had up for consideration the Overton bill it appeared there was provided therein for the control of flood waters in the Mississippi Valley many millions of dollars. An amendment was placed on that bill making it comply with the omnibus bill, a conference report on which will follow this one.

I want to congratulate the conferees on bringing back to the House a conference report which is in line with the expressed views of the House. The Members of the House voted on the Jenkins amendment and passed it by an overwhelming vote. This vote clearly indicated the desire of Congress with reference to requiring that the same treatment should be given by the Government to the same kind of projects in every section of the country. The principle of the Jenkins amendment is right. Its fairness disarms anyone who seeks to oppose it. It provides that if the Government is to require those living along the waters of the Ohio to pay for the rights-of-way necessary to the construction of an improvement in the river that the same requirements should be exacted from every other section of the country requesting similar improvements.

The conference committee carried out the wishes of the House as shown by a vote of the House, and did so quite completely; therefore I think they should be congratulated, not because I had anything to do with the amendment but because they did their duty and did it well. The Jenkins amendment saved the Government about $150,000,000. This is a tremendous saving, especially when the policy of the present administration is to spend all it can earn and borrow. The Jenkins amendment holds back those who want to raid the Treasury. It provides a fair yardstick of measurement whereby it is possible for all projects to be considered by the same rule; this makes it easier for those of us who are vitally interested in flood control to come forward in the future with a consistent plan and a consistent program covering flood relief. In other words, in the Pittsburgh District, in the Connecticut Valley, and in the Ohio Valley, where certain improvements are to be made under the omnibus bill, we are called upon to match the Government dollar for dollar, and in some cases a little more. Therefore it is only fair, when similar improvements are constructed along the Arkansas or the White River, that they be required to make the same contribution. When I proposed the Jenkins amendment it was with the very definite purpose of requiring that all sections of the country be treated alike. The saving effected by this amendment represents what some certain sections of the country should not have. It is possible that there will be some opposition to the conference report, but it is likely to come from some who have failed to get a portion of "pork."

I am very glad that we have finally worked out a satisfactory program. I think there will be no opposition on the Republican side, and I hope there will be none on the Democratic side.

I am favoring this bill, known as the Overton bill, for I appreciate that the lower Mississippi section needs protection, although we have already spent several hundred millions down there. I think we must take care of the great quantities of water that roll down the mighty Mississippi. For years I have been active in every association and movement that sought to control the mighty and destructive floods that carry such havoc and distress to the millions who live along the beautiful Ohio. I am sure that there is not a single Congressman here today who does not remember reading of the devastating floods in the Ohio Valley this last spring. This can all be prevented. The States have no right to do it, for they do not control the Ohio River. The Government must do it. The Government is commencing this program under the omnibus flood bill which is to be considered immediately following this bill. I bespeak of you that you support that conference report so that we may then have a complete flood-relief program for the whole United States. If this omnibus bill is passed and the improvements intended for the Ohio and its tributaries are constructed, it will mean that 5 or 6 feet will be taken off of the crest of all future floods on the Ohio. When these and other improvements which have been approved by the Army engineers are constructed they will take 8 feet off the crest of all floods on the Ohio. This will save many millions on each flood. It will save lives and untold anguish from constantly threatening dangers. The waters of the Ohio can be easily controlled. There is no uncertain experiment to be tried; all we need is a sufficient amount of money to construct reservoirs on the headwaters of the large tributaries and streams. The Government will commence this program as soon as the money is provided from the passage of the Copeland omnibus bill. Let us pass it today. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentleman from Louisiana yield to me for a question?

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONNERY. I understood the gentleman to say that an agreement had been reached on the Copeland bill also?

Mr. WILSON of Louisiana. Yes. A complete agreement has been reached on both bills.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on agreeing to the conference report.

Th previous question was ordered.

The conference report was agreed to.

IMPROVEMENT ON AREAS BETWEEN SHORE AND BULKHEAD LINES IN RIVERS AND HARBORS

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (S. 3071) providing for the placing of improvements on the areas between the shore and bulkhead lines in rivers and harbors, and ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3071) providing for the placing of improvements on the areas between the shore and bulkhead lines in rivers and harbors, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendments, and agree to the same.

J. J. MANSFIELD,
JOSEPH A. GAVAGAN,
WM. L. PIESINGER,
GEORGE N. SEGER,
ALBERT E. CARTER,
Managers on the part of the House.

ROYAL S. COPELAND,
DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
CHAS. L. MCNARY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3071) providing for the placing of improvements on the areas between the shore and bulkhead lines in rivers and harbors submit the following written statement explaining the effect of the action agreed upon:

The bill provides that where bulkhead lines have been or may be provided in or along navigable waters, except the inland waterways, in accordance with law, the Secretary of War may grant authority to the owners of shore lands and the submerged lands in front thereof to fill in and erect structures on the whole or any part of the area between ordinary high-water line on the shore and the established bulkhead line; and that when such authority has been granted the said area shall be deemed to be exempt from any servitude in favor of the Federal Government for the benefit of navigation, and if required and taken thereafter by the Government for navigation purposes the owners thereof shall be entitled to just compensation for the improvement and structures made and created in pursuance of such authorization.

The bill, as it passed the House, covered all navigable waters, the words "except the inland waterways" being struck out of the Senate bill. The House recedes from this amendment, and agrees to the same, your conferees having been advised that harbor lines have not been established on inland waterways except at some of the larger towns and cities.

J. J. MANSFIELD,
JOS. A. GAVAGAN,
W. L. FIESINGER,
GEORGE N. SEGER,
ALBERT E. CARTER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I shall consume only about 2 minutes.

This bill provides that where the Secretary of War grants a permit for adjoining landowners at any harbor to establish improvements behind bulkhead lines, and they erect permanent improvements thereon, they cannot thereafter be required to move them back without compensation. Heretofore the War Department has had authority to compel the owners under all circumstances to remove such improvements on land behind and abutting on bulkheads at their own expense.

The bill as it passed the Senate did not apply to inland waterways. The House committee amended the bill making it apply to rivers and other inland waterways. The Senate does not agree to that amendment, and the House conferees were willing to recede on that point. There are many reasons for this action, and it is impossible to state them all; therefore I will mention only one.

In the pending controversy over the boundary line between the District of Columbia and the State of Virginia, the grant made by Lord Baltimore to the State of Maryland back in 1791 is an issue in the case. The Department of Justice takes the view that this bill, if applied to inland waterways, would complicate the legal questions involved in that controversy. It would also bring about complications at other places. Therefore the conferees concluded they would recede from the House amendment.

Mr. ROMJUE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. ROMJUE. How does the property owner secure his right to build these bulkheads? Does he have permission granted to him?

Mr. MANSFIELD. He has to get that permission from the Secretary of War.

Mr. CARPENTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of agricultural imports.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARPENTER. Mr. Speaker, for many years those in power in Washington and those who desired to be in power in Washington made glowing promises to the farmers of this country of what they would do for them. They fulfilled these promises by passing higher tariff laws and creating world-trade barriers, resulting in much benefit to the large manufacturing industries of the country, but at the same time raising the prices of these manufactured goods to the farmers, while cutting off the farmers' markets and decreasing the price of the farmers' products. We are all familiar with the results that followed, leaving the farmer of this country in a terrible condition. His debts piled higher; he had abundant crops but no markets, and an extremely low price for his products.

Something had to be done and this quickly. It was accomplished by the present administration, much to the surprise and mortification of those who had betrayed the farmers.

We are all familiar with the much better condition that the farmer and agriculture in this country are in today, and no one knows it better than the farmer himself. It is this very thing that worries those who wish most to destroy this administration. It is something new and unheard of to keep campaign promises to the farmers and to see them receive benefits from their Government. Consequently something must be done to destroy their confidence, and how should this be done: By the same old methods that have prevailed from the time of Adam and Eve—to start rumors and make people dissatisfied. It, of course, makes no difference so far as the purpose is concerned whether the rumor has any basis or not. So what was done in this instance? They spread rumors that this country was being flooded with agricultural products from foreign countries when the farmer was asked to curtail his production by the Government, which was at the same time taxing the people to pay for this curtailment. This was calculated to make the farmer so mad and aggrieved that he would forget all that this administration had done for him and to turn on it and destroy it. Here is a typical example of these rumors disseminated by the partisan press.

IMPORTS FLOOD UNITED STATES

Commerce Department figures just released show that foreign farm produce invaded the American market to a tremendous extent in 1935 over 1934, the increase in some cases exceeding 2,100 percent. The Department's figures:

Commodity	Year 1934	Year 1935
Wheat (60-pound bushels)	7, 736, 532	27, 438, 870
Corn (56-pound bushels)	2, 959, 256	43, 242, 296
Oats (32-pound bushels)	5, 580, 407	10, 106, 903
Butter	1, 107, 020	22, 674, 642
Beef, fresh	140, 474	8, 584, 114
Pork, fresh	127, 746	3, 922, 609
Canned meat	46, 777, 875	76, 653, 242
Animal oils and fats, edible	1, 723, 261	18, 895, 241
Hides	200, 770, 332	303, 475, 633
Tallow	42, 813, 299	245, 850, 922
Carpet wool	85, 181, 282	171, 504, 101

As pointed out by certain writers, exhibits are being taken around to farm meetings by pretty girls, showing beef supposed to be imported from South America, hams from Poland, corned beef from Uruguay, all of which are supposed to be sold in the various cities of this country, but upon close examination, it is stated, quite often bear the labels of Chicago meat packers.

What is the true situation? According to the Department of Commerce's records, we imported a total of $1,100,000,000 worth of products classified as agricultural during the year 1935. As was pointed out by Secretary Wallace in a recent speech delivered at the University of Nebraska at Lincoln, this is a large sum, though a good deal less than the 10-year average of one and two-thirds billion dollars, or the 20-year average of one and three-fourths billion dollars, or $2,000,000,000 worth of agricultural products that were imported into this country in 1929, while in 1920 there were three and one-half billion dollars' worth. Of the amount imported in 1935, there was included coffee, rubber, raw silk, tea, cocoa, spices, and bananas, none of which are produced in this country. That amounted to about $334,000,000, or one-third of the total. Leaving out these items there was only some $600,000,000 worth of agricultural products imported in 1935. Of this amount the largest item is sugar, which amounted to $133,000,000. But by reason of the great consumption of sugar it is necessary that a great amount of sugar be imported from sugar-producing countries.

According to the rumors and propaganda that I first referred to, the story is that this country is being flooded with agricultural imports due mainly to the trade agreements that have been promulgated by this Government recently.

Let us look at the proposition of the trade agreements in relation to agriculture for the year 1935. May I say I have received my information from reliable sources? Some critics of the trade-agreements program who find cause for alarm in the generally healthy picture of the increase of foreign trade of the United States for 1935 seem to be concerned regarding imports of agricultural products. These critics, some of whom represent the tariff views of the industrial East, have implied that agricultural imports have resulted from lower rates of duty brought about by trade agreements.

In the first place, if those who attempt to connect increased imports of agricultural products with trade agreements will take the time and trouble to examine the imports in relation to the concessions granted on agricultural products in the trade agreements thus far concluded, they will see that there was little relationship between these factors during 1935. For one thing, only four agreements, those with Cuba, Haiti, Belgium, and Sweden, were in effect during any part of 1935. Only the agreement with Cuba was in effect for the whole of the year. In the Swedish agreement there were no agricultural concessions granted; imports, however, from Sweden did increase during the period in which the agreement was in effect over a similar period of 1934, as did exports. During the months of 1935, in which the Haitian agreement was in force, agricultural imports from that source, owing to a shortage of crops, decreased over a comparable period of 1934. In the Belgian agreement only small and insignificant concessions were made on agricultural products, and there were only slight increases in the imports of these concession items during 1935.

The misleading statements regarding the ill-effects of trade agreements appear to be made by those primarily responsible for the disastrous tariff acts which have done so much to undermine the conditions of American agriculture. These partisan calamity howlers do not want agriculture or any other business to maintain its steady improved condition under the Democratic Party. They are using every means in an attempt to show that the present administration is not a friend to agriculture. A comparison of conditions in 1932–33 and 1935–36 is sufficient evidence of how agriculture has been treated by the party in power. Compare the farmers' prices and their national income in 1935 with 1932 and it will readily be understood how much better off the farmers are today than in the depths of the depression.

A detailed inspection of the foreign-trade movement shows that much of the increase in total imports of 1935 represent raw materials and reflect the improvement in American economic conditions. A large part of the increased agricultural imports of 1935 are represented by such products as crude rubber, $17,000,000; raw silk, $24,000,000; bananas, $4,000,000; and tea, $1,000,000, all classified as agricultural products; agriculture, of course, will not be misled by the viewers with alarm at such increased imports of so-called agricultural products, combined in an aggregate to make the picture look dark. Such imports reflect the improvement in American purchasing power, and in no way compete with domestic articles. Increased imports as well as exports represent increased activities in American factories and employment to labor and in fact aid the sale of American agricultural products.

It is true that primarily, as a result of the drought of 1934–35, we temporarily increased our imports of some farm commodities which are competitive with American products, but in such instances, it should be remembered that the imports came in under the rates of duty in the Tariff Act of 1930, and that the farmers were receiving adequate prices for their products. The fact that these products have entered shows the farmers are relatively better off than in 1932, when imports were much less than in 1935.

Much is being said concerning the reciprocal trade treaty with Canada. Figures for January and February, the first 2 months the treaty was in effect, indicated that American agriculture was benefited materially. According to a dispatch from Canada, trade figures show that Canada bought more goods from the United States than from any other country for a period of 11 months ending in February of this year.

Canada's imports from the United States, according to this dispatch which appeared in the Washington Star of April 5, 1936, in February, second month of operation of the bilateral trade agreement, amounted to $25,974,701, or an increase of $2,476,972, over February of 1935.

Canada's imports from the United States for the 11 months ended with February reached $286,689,071, as compared with $272,307,233 in the previous parallel period, an increase of $14,381,838.

Canada's imports from all countries in those 11 months totaled $510,037,970, an increase of $35,797,975. Imports from British Empire countries came to $163,430,164 against $143,989,541 previously.

What is the situation in regard to my own State and how is it affected by the foreign trade agreement program?

Kansas, in common with a number of other interior States, is more vitally interested in foreign trade than the export statistics themselves indicate. Total direct exports from Kansas in 1929 amounted to $23,806,000; in 1932, they amounted to $10,584,000, or a decrease of 55.5 percent. The per-family trade of Kansas (four to a family) was about $51 in 1929 and $22 in 1932, but such figures should not be taken as the whole measure of the importance of exports to the State. Kansas products are shipped to coastal points without export declarations and sent out as the products of other States.

Much of Kansas' interest in export trade may be in the sale of her products in the great industrial centers where they are used in the manufacture of finished products which themselves find outlets in foreign markets. To use one illustration, hides and skins are Kansas products which are used in considerable quantities in the manufacture of automobiles, as well as in other export products. The automobile industry, employing millions of men directly and indirectly, exported nearly 15 percent of its production in 1934. This industry utilizes a number of the products of Kansas as well as of every other State of the Union. A full restoration of the automobile industry in domestic and foreign markets means an improvement in the demand for, and a firming of the prices of the many domestic products which go into their production.

What is true of Kansas' interest in automobile exports is true also in varying degrees of Kansas' interest in the export of other manufactured products containing raw materials originating in that State. A general revival of export trade, which dropped from a value of more than $5,000,000,000 in 1929 to about $1,500,000,000 in 1932, and to only $2,100,000,000 in 1934, would stimulate the demand for, and help to restore the prices of, Kansas' principal raw materials and foodstuffs.

The value of direct and indirect exports, together with the value of raw materials used in the manufacture of finished goods for export, does not tell the whole story of Kansas' interest in foreign markets. A thriving export trade such as this country enjoyed in the late twenties contributed greatly to the industrial activity and general prosperity of the sections producing for export trade which spread to the whole country. There was an insistent demand in those sections of the country for foodstuffs, raw materials, such as wheat and flour, poultry and eggs, beef, corn, pork, hides and skins, and petroleum, produced in Kansas. The drastic decline in export trade along with domestic trade has meant curtailment of production and increased unemployment in the industrial centers, and consequently decreased consumption of Kansas products. Furthermore, the loss of foreign markets for petroleum products has depressed the price of crude petroleum, one of the principal products of Kansas.

The decline in export trade adversely affects the economy of States which do not export directly in large volume, as well as those which are more dependent upon it. In short, a decline in export trade is quickly reflected in the falling off of the demand for the raw materials and foodstuffs of the interior States. The identity of interest by States in foreign trade cannot be definitely measured; Kansas, in its well-being, cannot be separated as an economic island from the other States of the Union. Trade agreements made for the national welfare directly benefiting any particular State must eventually reflect on the prosperity of Kansas, as well as other States, if the program is to be a success in the larger sense.

The main cause of the disastrous decline of foreign trade since 1929 was the increased number of trade barriers which this and other countries raised up against imported products, and the self-containment "at any price" doctrine. People too readily forget that tariffs tend to hold up prices at unreasonable levels of many of the manufactured products and materials required by Kansas producers, farmers, and consumers. Also these barriers have scaled down the purchasing power of foreign countries for our export products, and were a factor contributing to the increase of foreign restrictions against the importation of American products.

The benefits of this program of trade recovery should be just as far reaching as were the serious effects of the loss of foreign trade after 1929. Every State suffered because of the drying up of the channels of foreign trade. Every State should share in the restoration of the flow. In practically every agreement concluded thus far, lard, an important export from Kansas, has received favorable treatment.

The attached table summarizes the principal concessions obtained on products directly exported from Kansas:

Principal commodities directly exported from Kansas	Countries granting concessions on Kansas products
Lard	Belgium, Canada, Colombia, Cuba, Haiti, Netherlands, Switzerland, Nicaragua. Exports of lard to Cuba increased by nearly 100 percent for the first year of the agreement.
Wheat flour	Cuba, Canada, Honduras, Nicaragua, Netherlands.
Wheat	Switzerland, Netherlands, Canada.
Pork products	Belgium, Canada, Colombia, Cuba, Honduras, Haiti, Sweden.
Oleo oil and stearin	Cuba, Netherlands, Canada.
Barley	Cuba, Canada.
Sausage casings	Belgium, Canada, Netherlands, Switzerland.
Canned meats (beef, pork).	Canada, Cuba, Colombia, Honduras, Belgium.
Eggs in shell	Canada.
Gasoline	Switzerland, Sweden.

It is seen that concessions of one sort or another have been obtained on practically every product directly exported from Kansas. As indicated in the attached memorandum, a listing of the products directly exported from a State by no means shows its total interest in export trade.

Percent of total exports	90.9	78.0

In regard to cattle, the total imports for 1935 were substantially less than the imports for cattle in the years 1927 to 1929, inclusive. The imports of canned beef for 1934 were less than for the years 1928, 1929, and 1930, and for the year 1935 less than for the year 1929 (the United States Department of Agriculture report, May 15, 1936).

Agriculture imports as a result of the lessened influence of the drought during January 1936 were less than imports for the same month a year earlier. According to the following table, the Department of Agriculture estimates the total receipts from the sale of principal farm products increased steadily from $4,000,000,000 in 1932 to $6,000,000,000 in 1935, and that total receipts for the month of January increased from $306,000,000 in 1933 to $516,000,000 in 1936. According to this table, which I am herewith inserting, the receipts from the principal central farm States increased from $86,491,000 for the month of January 1933 to $170,058,000 for the month of January 1936.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on agreeing to the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was agreed to.

FOREIGN TRADE—ITS NECESSITY—ADMINISTRATION'S RATIONAL PROGRAM IS INCREASING ITS VOLUME—BENEFITS TO INDUSTRY, INCLUDING CONNECTICUT

Mr. CITRON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein certain excerpts.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. CITRON. Mr. Speaker, under the able direction of our capable Secretary of State, the Honorable Cordell Hull, the present administration is promoting our foreign trade. This is being accomplished by a program of arranging reciprocal tariff agreements, which are already showing beneficial results to our country and lifting our foreign trade from the ruinous state in which it found itself in the last few years of the Hoover administration.

ROOSEVELT ADMINISTRATION MAINTAINS THE PROTECTIVE TARIFF

The administration of President Roosevelt maintains a protective tariff for industry and agriculture, based on rational ideas and common-sense business practices.

I am a believer in the protective-tariff system. On several occasions I conferred with our administrative departments about the dumping tactics of the Japanese and others in the textile field. After a report by the United States Tariff Commission on this problem, based upon thorough study and investigation, the President recently ordered an increase of about 42 percent in the tariff duties upon textile imports. This was done to affect all foreign nations equally and without malice to any in particular. I therefore submit that our administration is wisely and effectively protecting our industries and agriculture against foreign competition, in addition to promoting the improvement of our foreign trade.

WHAT BUSINESS AND INDUSTRY AND SOME REPUBLICAN WRITERS THINK AT THIS TIME OF SECRETARY HULL'S RECIPROCAL TARIFF AGREEMENTS

National Automobile Manufacturers' Association

I have the report, dated May 27, 1936, of the Automobile Manufacturers' Association of this country, requesting Republican support for trade agreements and urging the Republican convention delegates to adopt a policy of reciprocal treaties. Surely this is not a Democratic Party organization, yet here is found recognition of a successful policy of this Democratic administration.

Winthrop W. Aldrich

In a speech made May 22 of this year, Mr. Winthrop W. Aldrich, chairman of the Chase National Bank, of New York, and president of the New York State Chamber of Commerce, admitted the efficacy of the trade agreements negotiated by Secretary Hull. "I am myself a firm believer in the principle of the protective tariff", said Mr. Aldrich, and added regarding Secretary Hull's policy that "it is a wise and sound policy." I do not know whether Mr. Aldrich is an active Republican, but one thing is certain and that is that he has no connections with this administration. A great businessman and financier recognizes the progressive strides made by our present Secretary of State.

United States Chamber of Commerce

I need not repeat here the resolutions or statements offered by the United States Chamber of Commerce endorsing such a program. Suffice it to say that coming from this group such approbation is a double acknowledgment of the accomplishments of our State Department. Great farm organizations have also expressed approval, but I do not repeat their words because the critics of the administration will reply, "Well, they are supporters of the administration anyway."

David Lawrence

But what can these critics say to this statement from Mr. David Lawrence, as stanch a Republican as can be found anywhere, yet who daily praises the reciprocal tariff agreements?—

* * * The New Deal will be able, nevertheless, to point with pride to the series of treaties of which the French pact is the climax.

Walter Lippmann

And behold! Mr. Walter Lippmann, a pro-Republican and no free-trader, admitting that Mr. Hull has made progress in "opening up the highways to commerce."

RIDERS OF THE REPUBLICAN ELEPHANT ARE ENVELOPED IN A FOG OF MENTAL CONFUSION—ARE SOME OF THEM BECOMING FREE-TRADERS AND A MENACE TO THE MANUFACTURERS OF MY STATE AND OTHER STATES?

In contrast to the positive program of President Roosevelt, the Republican leaders are floundering on in a mire of carping criticism, unable to explain their attitude or to suggest any constructive ideas. When I say this I respectfully refer to other matters in addition to that of our foreign commerce. It is unnecessary for me to detail relief for the unemployed; social security and old-age pensions; assistance to home owners, farmers, banks, insurance companies, and industry; protection of investors, stockholders, bondholders, and customers of electric light, gas, and power companies from the evils and abuses of holding companies (like Insull's); protection of investors from fake stock manipulators by the Securities and Exchange Commission; Federal housing program; guaranteed bank deposits; legislation for adjusting labor disputes, and so forth. Of course, by virtue of the Constitution all this is limited to matters affecting interstate commerce, but such great accomplishments are worthy of a great administration.

Mr. Speaker, the elephant may be huge, but according to some Republicans themselves (not excluding Senator BORAH) the weight of its riders—the Du Pont Liberty League, the Power Trust, and Messrs. Roraback and Hilles—has so burdened the poor creature that it cannot extricate itself. A fog of mental confusion has enveloped the elephant and its riders, and with the approach of a bleak night there already rise in the air the wailing cries of woe from the throats of Republican job seekers and hungry spoilsmen, gathered in national convention in Cleveland.

Is Congressman James Wadsworth for free trade and opening our country to the competition of cheap labor of foreign countries?

Some days ago the estimable gentleman from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] expressed the view—

That readjustment can be brought about more quickly by reopening the doors of foreign trade. * * * As a creditor we may not expect the payment of debts due to us unless we permit the debtor to do business with us to a reasonable extent at least. A protective-tariff system is the legitimate weapon of a debtor nation.

Shades of Matt Quay and Boies Penrose and Boss Grundy, the acknowledged father of the Hawley-Smoot tariff! Hearing from a Republican that debtor nations of the United States have the same right to restrictions against our goods as we have to theirs, must be shedding tears in his declining years—listening to a Republican saying that we must permit a debtor to do business with us!

But instead of talking, this administration has entered upon a policy recognizing that this country needs to extend, expand, and enlarge business, trade, and commerce.

The gentleman from New York, while recognizing this fact, in the next breath, however, criticizes the administration for taking definite, careful, and studied action for accomplishing his constructive proposal. I have reference to his opposition to the trade-agreements program which is designed to increase our commerce.

Congressman Treadway, like other Republicans, criticizes, but offers no constructive proposal

Now the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] said in the House on January 14, 1936, in one of his regular fulminations:

One of the chief problems before the country is the finding of markets for the products of our farms and factories.

With that point of view no one can disagree. This administration has passed many measures designed to enable our farms and factories to enjoy better markets both at home and abroad. Apparently the gentleman from Massachusetts had in mind strictly the domestic markets, because when one speaks of foreign trade he becomes unreasonable. He takes the view that this kind of trade is wholly bad. His desultory attacks on the administration's method of developing foreign trade for our farms and factories are continuous.

In the past Congressman TREADWAY has apparently been an advocate of bilateral balancing—that is, maintaining that we should buy no more from a country than we sell to it. Then, in a speech on the floor on May 19 of this year he criticized the mutual agreements of the French treaty. Without coming to some understanding with France, how would he approach such a balance, since we normally export about twice as much to France as we import from that country. He states that the United States granted reductions on 71 separate items and received only 19 reductions. Of course, he leaves out of account the fact that the items on which the United States obtained concessions represented a greater volume of trade than the items on which concessions were granted. In addition to these 19 reductions there were increased quotas for other American products in the French markets.

No criticism of the trade-agreements program by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] is complete without reference to star-chamber proceedings, which, he claims, are followed in negotiating trade agreements with foreign countries. He overlooks the fact that the same kind of hearing is held on trade agreements before any change is made in rate reductions as were held under the purely "scientific" tariff making under the flexible provisions of the Tariff Acts of 1922 and 1930. After the hearings by the Tariff Commission, no one knew what the findings of the Commission were until the President made his changes in rates known to the public. Mr. TREADWAY's party sponsored such star-chamber proceedings under the flexible provisions of the above-known acts, but is now ready to criticize the Democratic acceptance of such procedure. I hope he does not criticize the President's order increasing tariff duties on textiles, which applies equally to all countries.

Since 1927 the United States and France have been engaged in a commercial war, which, if continued, might have led to sad consequences.

PRESIDENT WASHINGTON FAVORED EQUALITY OF TREATMENT TO ALL NATIONS, SPECIAL FAVORS TO NONE; SO DID SECRETARY OF STATE HUGHES

As regards the most-favored-nation treatment, or extension of duties to all countries which give us the same treatment, the domestic producers are adequately safeguarded against a flood of imports. The idea that the domestic market is completely thrown open to the world is absurd. The gentleman and other Members of his party frequently revert to what Washington said in his Farewell Address concerning permanent alliances with foreign countries. Apparently he failed to read the whole of the Washington address in which our first President advocated equality of treatment to all countries.

I do not admit by making this statement that Washington was a Republican, but some outstanding Republicans have advocated and maintained that equality of treatment in commercial agreements was the only safe and sane course for the United States to take. As a matter of fact, Mr. Hughes, as Secretary of State, in 1923 definitely stated in an exchange of notes with Brazil that such would be the policy of the United States. All commercial agreements negotiated since that time have carried the most-favored-nation principle.

DOMESTIC AND FOREIGN COMMERCE

Mr. TREADWAY and other gentlemen of the opposition apparently consider that only an increase in domestic commerce is a blessing. Many of those who criticize the trade-agreements program and the results which it has accomplished must hold that foreign commerce is a curse. I consider that both domestic and foreign commerce are blessings and that they complement each other. The development of both domestic and foreign commerce is essential for national recovery. The following figures show that relationship of our import and export trade for the last decade:

Year	Exports	Imports	Percent imports of exports
1926	$4,809,000,000	$4,431,000,000	92.1
1927	4,865,000,000	4,185,000,000	86.0
1928	5,128,000,000	4,091,000,000	79.8
1929	5,241,000,000	4,400,000,000	83.9
1930	3,843,000,000	3,061,000,000	79.6
1931	2,424,000,000	2,091,000,000	86.2
1932	1,611,000,000	1,323,000,000	82.1
1933	1,675,000,000	1,450,000,000	86.5
1934	2,133,000,000	1,655,000,000	77.6
1935	2,282,000,000	2,047,000,000	89.7

It will be seen that during the last decade the highest ratio of imports to exports was 92 percent in 1926. That year, as is well known, was chosen by statisticians as representing a norm, a standard by which well-being for the United States is measured. The official wholesale price index number is based on that year. It is significant that the ratio of imports to exports in 1926 was the highest during the last decade. This relationship is not entirely accidental. If one were to listen to the exponents of isolation, it might be concluded that the United States is being destroyed at the present time by increased imports. The above data show that the ratio of imports to exports was 89.7 percent in 1935. Compare this ratio with that for the ideal year, 1926, under the Republican administration. Furthermore, the imports in 1935 were less than half the figure for the standard year 1926.

When the reciprocal tariff bill was before the other body, Senator GORE, of Oklahoma, gave what I deem an excellent explanation of trade, not just domestic trade but all trade, domestic as well as foreign. On that occasion the Senator said:

> • • • Trade is little more than barter; barter is little less than trade; but trade, like barter, is the process by which two men get what both men want, each parting with what he does not need, and both profiting by what neither loses. The blessings of trade are reciprocal.

In my mind, that definition can hardly be improved upon. Further, the Senator from Oklahoma stated:

> When the first clubfooted savage, who could neither fish nor fight, turned his hand to making arrowheads and exchanged them for fish and furs, trade was under way. He was both a manufacturer and a merchant. Someone has said that when the first cave man took a quarter of a dinosaur on his back and trekked across the veldt and exchanged it for the hide of a saber-toothed tiger, intertribal trade, international trade, was born then and there.

It is frequently stated that exports are less than 10 percent of our production, and therefore not important. Such a general average has little validity, for some industries export as much as 40 or 50 percent of their production and could not exist without export markets. For example, typewriters, an important product of my State, are usually exported to the extent of from 25 to 40 percent of the production.

Where is the consistency in this argument? It is true that unregulated imports in some lines would injure domestic industry, but there is no responsible official of the administration who proposes to remove all tariff protection. I challenge anyone to name a person who advocates such a policy. Check through every reduction in duty made through reciprocal-tariff agreements and you will see how carefully this administration is handling tariff adjustments.

There is, of course, no place for a representative of an industry to sit in on the negotiations to write its own ticket. All interested parties are invited to present their cases before the committee for reciprocity information. Every possible view is welcomed and receives consideration before any recommendations in rates are made to the President.

CHAIRMAN FLETCHER'S REPUBLICAN "LITTLE BRAIN TRUST"

From time to time, Mr. Speaker, the opposition uses as a term of criticism, "free-trader", as applying to certain high governmental officials. If we desire to go into this proposition, I might mention that the Republican so-called "brain trust" apparently has strong free-trade leanings. If the advice of the "little brain trust" is to be followed by the Republican Party, perhaps it may be called the free-trade party. At least three members of the "brain trust" signed the famous manifesto of 1,000 economists, asking Mr. Hoover to veto the notorious Hawley-Smoot Tariff Act—an act which is now being revised by the Democratic Party in a sane and orderly manner.

One member of this "little brain trust", formerly employed at the Agriculture Department, is reported as having had a hand in preparing a memorandum favoring the dairy concessions granted in the Canadian agreement. Still two other noted economists and professors emeritus of Harvard University have taught and written in accordance with sound Adam Smith economic doctrine on the tariff question.

SOME "BLUE CHIP" REPUBLICANS WHO HAVE FAVORED RECIPROCITY

In this connection it may be well to recall what some outstanding leaders of the opposite party have said relative to tariff reciprocity. Senator CAPPER, on June 4, 1934, said in support of the Trade Agreements Act:

> I am willing to stake my Republicanism on the stand taken by that great Republican President, William McKinley. I quote from his speech at Buffalo:
> "A system which provides a mutual exchange of commodities is manifestly essential to the continued and healthful growth of our export trade. We must not repose in the fancied security that we can forever sell everything and buy little or nothing."

At that time Senator CAPPER stated that Alexander Hamilton himself supported trade agreements with foreign countries. He also noted that James G. Blaine was a supporter of trade agreements. Mr. CAPPER further stated that William McKinley did not pioneer in advising reciprocity in tariff, but noted that William H. Taft believed in the principle.

Of course Mr. Taft believed in it, for it is well known that he was responsible for negotiating the agreement with Canada in 1911, which failed to be ratified by that country. Incidentally, the concessions which the United States granted on agricultural products in the recent agreement are insignificant in comparison with the proposed agreement of 1911. In that agreement all agricultural products were reciprocally placed on the free list.

Ogden Mills, by implication, appears to have approved the objective of the trade-agreements measure. In his Topeka speech of January 1934 he said:

> We will have to abandon the present policy of isolation and intense nationalism and to some extent modify recent tariff practices. This may sound strange, coming from an orthodox Republican, but I have never understood that a sound system of protection, based upon the cost of production at home and abroad, if intelligently applied, means the erection of impassable tariff barriers, the destruction of our commerce with the rest of the world, and the sacrifice of the efficient farmer to save the inefficient manufacturer. * * * I am prepared to take my stand with a great Republican President who, in his last speech, delivered in Buffalo just before his assassination, said—

And Mr. Mills quoted from President McKinley the same quotation I have already stated.

Mr. Stimson, last Republican Secretary of State, in addition to approving the objectives of the reciprocal-tariff measure, urged in a broadcast that it be made into law.

Other outstanding Republicans have also approved the trade-agreements program. For example, the Honorable William S. Culbertson, formerly Ambassador to Chile, stated:

We should therefore support as a measure of a sound national policy the Trade Agreements Act of 1934. * * * If I had the time, I could demonstrate that all the principles of this measure were first employed in the Republican Tariff Acts of 1890 and 1897 and applied by various Republican Secretaries of State.

Mr. Castle, formerly Under Secretary of State, paid Mr. Hull a very high compliment on his program for lowering tariffs.

REPUBLICAN CHAIRMAN OF TARIFF COMMISSION PROPOSES RECIPROCAL AGREEMENTS FOR REPUBLICAN PLATFORM

Mr. O'Brien, Republican Chairman of the Tariff Commission, proposed a plank for the Republican national platform approving in essence the reciprocal-tariff program, and said:

The tariff question we must accordingly approach in a spirit of broad statesmanship and not in slavish devotion to out-worn slogans. We therefore pledge the party to the continuation of such implements of international tariff adjustments as already exist, perfected as they should be in necessary details under Republican legislation, to the end that we may have an intelligent and responsible national leadership in the taking of our part in dealing with the complicated problems of world trade.

COLONEL KNOX—REPUBLICAN ASPIRANT FOR PRESIDENCY

Lastly, Colonel Knox, an avowed candidate for the Republican nomination for President, has also suggested a change in the Republican position on the tariff and approved the principle of reciprocity and stated that he was in favor of "real trade agreements." Possibly by real trade agreements he meant that he would reduce the duty on many more products than the Democrats have done.

LOGROLLING

One of the outstanding evils of congressional tariff making is, of course, the parade of lobbyists in Washington and the inevitable logrolling which accompanies an old-fashioned Republican tariff measure. In this connection Senator CAPPER has said:

Our experience in writing tariff legislation, particularly in the post-war era, has been discouraging. Trading between groups and sections is inevitable. Logrolling is inevitable, and in its most pernicious form. We do not write a national tariff law. We jam together, through variously unholy alliances and combinations, a potpourri or hodgepodge, sectional and local tariff rates which often add to our troubles and increase world misery.

Mr. O'Brien also said regarding logrolling in this proposed Republican plank:

The bewildering complexity of modern industry makes intelligent consideration of tariffs by Senate and House and conference committees impractical and leads inevitably to logrolling, under which the general welfare is often subordinated to the interests of particular groups and localities. Against these evils the Republican Party has long inveighed.

It will be recalled that Mr. Hoover used as his main reason for signing the Tariff Act of 1930 that the flexible provision would permit a reasonable remedy in tariff adjustment without congressional action, and added that—

This provision was a progressive advance and gives great hope of taking the tariff away from politics, lobbying, and logrolling.

MY OWN STATE

As is well known, my own State is a highly industrialized State and manufactures a great variety of products. My State must create wealth by fabricating raw and semiraw materials primarily from other regions or from foreign countries. Many industries in Connecticut depend on tariff protection for their continuation, and I recognize this, as was shown by my efforts for an increased tariff for textiles. On the other hand, a number of industries of Connecticut are directly dependent on imported materials to keep their labor employed and their factories going. The jewelry industry, for example, uses imported materials from 26 countries. Many of these products used in Connecticut industries are not produced in the United States at all.

To mention some of these import items used by the jewelry industry gives a romantic touch to commerce. Some of these imported materials used in Connecticut with their principal sources are as follows:

Jade, China; sapphires, Ceylon; rubies, Burma; cobalt, Canada; emeralds, Colombia; topaz, Egypt; opals, Hungary; amethysts, Russia; pearls, India; platinum, Ural Mountains; chrome, Rhodesia; tin, Malay.

It is noted that the jewelry industry alone calls upon every continent of the world for the above-mentioned materials. A number of these items are, of course, not subject to duty. These imported items indicate the dependence of one important Connecticut industry on materials and supplies from all parts of the world.

At present I am concerned about the possibilities of increasing the export trade in certain items from Connecticut. The trade agreements already signed have obtained some benefits for my State, as well as for others. First, I should like to examine the trade of Connecticut in general terms.

Connecticut's exports

Exports from Connecticut, valued at $53,000,000 in 1929, declined by 72 percent, to $15,000,000, by 1932, the last year for which statistics are available. These figures mean an income of $132 for every family in the State in 1929 and only $36 per family in 1932. The leading exports were typewriters, hardware, electric machinery, other machines, tires, copper cables, toilet preparations, rifles, cotton manufactures, cutlery, and office appliances.

Canadian agreement helps Connecticut industry and labor

Practically every agreement will benefit, directly or indirectly, some of Connecticut's industries. Canada has lowered its duties on a long list of fabrics and textile manufactures. Our textile exports to Canada were valued at $41,000,000 in 1931 and had declined to $6,000,000 in 1935. Owing largely to restrictions, we had lost 90 percent of our exports to Canada of laces and embroideries which were once valued at $1,000,000. The textiles include those of cotton, wool, hair, flax, rayon, jute, and hemp. The articles affected ranged from hosiery, lace, gloves, and other clothing to household goods, webbing, blankets, and textiles. The metal and metal products which should benefit from the Canadian agreement consist of too many items to list, ranging from ferro-alloys and ingots to pipes and wires, and to machine tools, hollow ware, screws, nails, bolts, and precision tools, which have all been accorded concessions, including clocks, watches, and jewelry. Agricultural, industrial, and automotive machinery should benefit, as well as mining, railway, and industrial machinery. Most office machines and equipment have been conceded by Canada 20-percent reduction in duty. Among the miscellaneous items are fishing tackle, guns, revolvers, gas meters, lighting fixtures, and rubber goods.

Among the Connecticut industries which have stated that they would benefit from the Canadian agreement are steel, printers and publishers, automobile parts and accessories; and among textile manufactures, those making bag fabrics, novelty fabrics, burlap, silk and rayon, velvet and dress goods.

While time has been too short to measure permanent results, an editorial in the Times of Hartford says:

It is certainly true that tariff barriers raised against trade harm all countries. Far better, if it can be devised, is a system of agreements designed to facilitate the exchange of goods of mutual benefit. The advocates of barrier tariffs have had their chance. Those who believe agreements to facilitate trade are possible are now entitled to theirs.

Connecticut benefits from reciprocal agreements with other countries

The Swiss agreement reduced by 20 percent the Swiss duty on cash registers and accounting machines, as well as stands for all office machines. Switzerland has also granted a large quota for electric refrigerators and refrigerating equipment.

Colombia has reduced its duties on underclothing of cotton, linen, silk, or rayon, as well as shirts, handkerchiefs, and so forth. It has also reduced by 33 to 82 percent its duties on our corsets. It has bound against increase many of the hardware and metal products manufactured in Connecticut and reduced by two-thirds its duties on most building hardware and typewriters. Its duties on dentifrices have been reduced 35 percent.

Nine months' figures are available as to the effects of the Belgian agreement. Belgium's imports from the United States increased 69 percent as compared with the corresponding period before the agreement, whereas her imports from all other countries increased only 40 percent.

Among the increased exports of interest to Connecticut are tobacco, hosiery, rubber hose, and radio tubes. Exports to Belgium since the agreement have more than doubled in the case of cigarettes, belting, typewriters, and automobile parts, whereas our exports of women's clothing have quadrupled.

Cuban agreement

Twelve months' experience under the Cuban agreement shows increases in the case of rubberized piece goods, cotton thread, colored cotton duck, bleached sheeting, khaki, other dyed yarn, fabrics, silk tram, rayon yarn, knit rayon goods, elastic webbing, tacks, nails, bolts, rivets, table and kitchen cutlery, insulated copper wire, electric refrigerators, flashlights, radios, stationary engines, valves, calculating machines, typewriters, and cosmetics. Our exports to Cuba have doubled in the case of canvas shoes with rubber soles and rayon hosiery. Since the agreement we have sold three times as much gingham, silk, hosiery, radio transmitting sets, and steam boilers. Our exports to Cuba of woven rayon, dress and piece goods increased from $250,000 worth to over $1,000,000.

Brazil, Netherlands, and some South American countries

The Brazil agreement resulted in a 25-percent reduction in the Brazil duties on cotton shirts, radio apparatus, gasoline pumps, steel files, rubber hose and tubes, and certain paints. The duties were reduced 20 percent on automobiles, trucks and parts, and on soap and surgical gauze. Larger reductions were granted for steel furniture, lacquers, and certain varnishes. The Brazil duties were bound against increase in case of agricultural machinery, refrigerators, sewing machines, cash registers, typewriters, calculating machines, and typesetting machines. Our exports to Brazil fell from $109,000,000 in 1929 to $40,000,000 in 1934.

The Netherlands agreement should also benefit Connecticut's industries. As the Netherland duties are generally low, the most extensive concessions were the binding of the present duties on a number of commodities. In addition, quotas were obtained for wire nails and tacks, drawn wire, locks and parts, footwear, fabrics of rayon, cotton and wool, ribbons, tape and elastic bands, outer clothing, hosiery, knitwear, underclothing, shirts, and various paper and cardboard.

From Haiti we obtain lower duties on sewing machines, radios, and appliances, and the binding of duties on pipes and fittings, medicines and pharmaceutical electrical machinery and apparatus, and automobiles.

Our exports to Nicaragua have fallen from $7,000,000 in 1929 to $2,000,000 in 1934. Nicaragua has lowered its duties on proprietary and patent medicines, varnishes, paints, and rubber heels. It has promised continued free entry of a long list of industrial machinery, electrical equipment, and has bound existing low duties in the case of batteries, radio apparatus, typewriters, and cotton hosiery.

Our exports to Guatemala have declined from $11,000,000 in 1929 to $4,000,000 in 1935. Guatemala has reduced its duties on certain fish products, varnishes, enamels, and lacquers, metal furniture, and radio receiving apparatus. It has bound against increase its duties on yarn, cotton piece goods, silk hosiery, cotton shirts, automobiles, typewriters, and calculating machines.

Finland

Finland's imports from the United States declined from $30,000,000 in 1928 to $9,000,000 in 1935. Its imports from us of wire and steel products declined from $670,000 in 1929 to $4,000 in 1934; of machinery, from $1,000,000 to $400,000; of office machines, from $300,000 to $126,000; of automobiles, from $1,300,000 to $150,000; and of textile fabrics and manufactures, from $400,000 to $149,000. Finland has reduced its duties on steel furniture and has bound existing duties against increase in the case of refrigerators, calculating machines, cash registers, typewriters, duplicating machines, and automobiles and parts.

French agreement

Our exports to France declined from $270,000,000 in 1929 to $117,000,000 in 1935. France has reduced its duties on automobiles and granted enlarged quotas. It has granted supplementary quotas for refrigerators, radios, typewriters, silk hosiery, agricultural machinery, and has reduced the import tax for all of these commodities. Important concessions have been granted for fresh and canned fruits. France has agreed to purchase more tobacco; and although most of the purchases by the tobacco monopoly have been for cigarettes, Connecticut growers may be able to recover some of the important markets in France that they formerly enjoyed. Enlarged quotas have been obtained for certain varnishes and paints, artificial teeth, hosiery, agricultural machinery, engines, refrigerators, typewriters, drills, taps, reamers, pneumatic tools and machine tools, and automobiles. Duties have been reduced by France on sewing-machine parts, cash registers, automobiles, fountain pens, automatic pencils, and automobile parts.

CONCLUSION

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I predict that international trade will increase. The world realizes that it benefits all nations, creates friendlier relations among peoples, and is a means to lift all countries out of the depths of despair and hatred. We can thank ourselves that we have such a far-sighted and capable person as Mr. Cordell Hull in the office of Secretary of State. He is helping our country materially and spiritually, bettering our business and other relations with the nations of the world. I have shown specifically what these trade agreements mean to my State, but the same can be shown for every State and section. The whole country is the beneficiary of his work.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to bill (H. R. 8455) entitled "An act authorizing the construction of certain public works on rivers and harbors for flood control, and for other purposes", submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report as to each of the said amendments.

THE SENATE ENGROSSED AMENDMENT

The Senate engrossed amendment containing nine sections, as proposed by the Senate, with the amendments set forth in the conference report, were substituted for all of the House bill containing two sections after the enacting clause.

SECTION 1. DECLARATION OF POLICY

Section 1 is a declaration of policy and declares that flood control on navigable waters or their tributaries is a proper activity of the Federal Government in cooperation with States, their political subdivisions, and localities thereof; that investigations and improvements of rivers and other waterways, including watersheds, for flood-control purposes are in the interest of the general welfare, and that the Federal Government should improve or participate in the improvement of navigable waters or their tributaries, including watersheds thereof, for flood-control purposes if the benefits to whomsoever they may accrue are in excess of the estimated costs, and if the lives and social security of the people are otherwise adversely affected.

All of the projects contained in the bill as it passed the House that complied with the said declaration of policy were retained in the bill, and all of the projects added to the bill in the Senate that complied with the said declaration based upon the report and recommendation of the Chief of Engineers are retained in the bill.

SECTION 2. INVESTIGATIONS

Section 2 provides for investigations for flood control by the War Department and investigations for watersheds by the Department of Agriculture.

SECTION 3. LOCAL CONTRIBUTIONS

Section 3 provides for local contributions substantially as provided by section 2 of the bill when it passed the House, with the provision that when the amount of the estimated costs of lands and easements and rights-of-way exceeds the estimated costs of construction, the local interests shall pay only one-half, and with the further proviso that whenever 75 percent of the benefits accrue to lands outside the State the local interests are not required to provide maintenance.

Said section 3 was amended as shown by the conference report by adding at the conclusion of the said section the following: "And provided further, That nothing herein shall be construed to interfere with the completion of any reservoirs or flood-control works authorized by the Congress and now under way."

Said section 3, as relates to levees and reservoirs, is identical in its effect with section 8a of S. 3531, the Mississippi River Flood Control Act. The effect of the amendments agreed to is to require all levees and reservoir projects under both H. R. 8455, the bill herein, and S. 3531, the said Mississippi River bill, to make the same contributions. The requirements for local contributions and maintenance for reservoirs and levees in the pending bill are identical with the requirements for local contributions and maintenance covering levees and reservoirs in the said Mississippi River bill.

SECTION 4. COMPACTS

Section 4 provides for compacts between the States respecting flood control.

SECTION 5. FLOOD CONTROL ACT OF 1936

Section 5 provides that the flood-control works enumerated therein shall be prosecuted under the direction of the Secretary of War and Chief of Engineers, as therein stipulated.

SECTION 6. PRELIMINARY INVESTIGATIONS

Section 6 is new matter that was not contained in the House bill, and provides for joint preliminary examinations for flood control under the War Department, and for run-offs and water retardation and soil erosion under the Department of Agriculture.

SECTION 7. CONTINUED SURVEYS FOR FLOOD CONTROL AND POWER

Section 7 authorizes and directs the Secretary of War to continue the studies of the Table Rock Reservoir, the Wild Cat Shoals Reservoir, and other reservoirs mentioned for flood-control operations and hydroelectric power development.

SECTION 8. NO APPLICATION TO MISSISSIPPI RIVER

Section 8 provides that the bill in no wise deals with the Mississippi River or amends any laws respecting it.

SECTION 9. AUTHORIZATION

Section 9 provides for an authorization of $310,000,000 for the projects and $10,000,000 for examinations and surveys, with the proviso that not more than $50,000,000 shall be expended during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937.

NO POWER PROJECTS INCLUDED

The bill as approved in conference follows the declaration of policy and included only projects for flood control and eliminated all power projects. The recommendations of the Chief of Engineers were followed on all the projects included in the bill, and all projects carried in the House bill that were not flood-control projects and that did not come within the provisions of the declared policy respecting benefits were eliminated from the bill.

RIGHTS-OF-WAY AND MAINTENANCE

The bill provides for a Federal policy and responsibility for flood control. It establishes a general policy that is applicable to the largest and smallest rivers and their watersheds, under which the local interests are required to furnish rights-of-way and easements for levees and reservoirs and to maintain the projects when completed.
